Since people cannot close out their bank accounts by withdrawing currency, they rush through the stores on checkbook-spending sprees. If they cannot get their money back, at least they can buy things with it. Garages and basements are filling up with canned goods, shoes, liquor, tires, ammunition. Goods are becoming scarce, pushing prices upward. The Dow Jones is going through the roof as investors empty their checking accounts to buy anything for sale. The Securities and Exchange Commission finally suspends trading.

Nine months have now passed. The crisis has been a blessing for politicians. They have thrived upon it and grown in stature because of it. It has given them an excuse to swarm through the country on fact-finding trips, to appear in shirt sleeves at town-hall meetings, to give speeches, and to be seen on television—all the time expressing grave concern and appearing to take charge. It has legitimized their role and somehow made them seem more necessary than before. They have been converted in the public eye from oafs and bumpkins to serious-minded statesmen.

The party in power said it inherited the mess. The previous party blamed the current one for dropping the ball. Both parties, however, agreed on the solution: more of exactly the same policies that created the crisis: expanded power to the Federal Reserve, more government control over the economy, more subsidies and benefits, and more international commitments. These were called "emergency reforms" and became law. The same men who created the problem prescribed the solution. The public was grateful to have leaders of such vision and wisdom.

BANK BAILOUT AND MORE INFLATION

The most important emergency reform was to bail out the banks with taxpayers' dollars. Defaulted foreign loans were taken over by the IMF/World Bank, and the failing corporate borrowers were given government grants disguised as loans—loans which everyone knew would never be paid back.

Next, the banks were nationalized, at least in part. In return for the bailout money, they gave large blocks of stock to the government which now operates as an official business partner. This was not a drastic change. The banks were already heavily regulated by government, even to the point of determining their profits, dividends, and executive salaries. That is the way the cartel wanted it. It was the means by which competition was avoided and profits assured. Monetary scientists and political scientists have always worked as a hidden partnership. This merely made the relationship more visible.

Technically, no bank was allowed to fail. The Fed kept its promise on that. When the troubled banks were taken over, all depositors with $100,000 or less were fully protected. If they wanted their money and the bank didn't have it, the Fed simply manufactured it. No one was worried about the value of those dollars. They were just happy to have them.

Ten more months have now passed. Those new dollars are flooding throughout the system. The money supply has increased by the amount of the bailout plus the amount of new spending for welfare, health care, interest on the national debt, and foreign aid, all of which are in a vertical climb. Inflation has become institutionalized.

The dollar has been dethroned as the world's defacto currency. Foreign investors and central banks no longer have any use for dollars. They have sent them back to the United States from whence they came. Over a trillion of them have returned to our shores like a huge flock of homing pigeons that fills the sky from horizon to horizon. They are buying our refrigerators, automobiles, computers, airplanes, cargo ships, armored tanks, office buildings, factories, real estate—pusrung prices to levels that would have seemed impossible a year ago. A single postage stamp costs as many dollars as once would have purchased a new TV set.

I Most stores have stopped accepting checks and credit cards. Workers are paid daily with bundles of paper money. People rush to the stores to purchase groceries before prices rise even further. Commerce is paralyzed. Bank loans and mortgages are unobtainable. Savings accounts have been destroyed, including the cash values of insurance policies. Factories are shutting down. Businesses are closing their doors. Barter is commonplace. Old silver coins come out of private hoards and a hundred-dollar bill is exchanged for one silver dime.

I Following the crash of 1929, the supply of paper money was limited because it was backed by silver, and the amount of silver itself was limited. Those who had money were able to buy up the assets of those who did not. Since prices were falling, the longer they held on to their dollars, the more they could buy. Now, things are exactly the opposite. There is nothing to back the money supply except politics. There is no limit to the amount of currency that can be created. It is just a question of printing and delivering it. Money is abundant, and prices are rising. Those who have money are spending it as soon as possible to prevent further loss of purchasing power. In the 1930s, everyone wanted dollars. Now, everyone kvants to get rid of them.

The Emergency Banking Regulation No. 1, originally issued in 1961, empowered the Secretary of the Treasury—without consent of Congress—to seize anyone's bank account, savings account, or safe-deposit box. It also gave him the power to fix rents, prices, salaries, and hourly wages, and to impose rationing. This was to be done "in the event of attack on the United States." That phrase now has been changed to read: "in the event of national emergency." The Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) has been expanded to administer the directives of the Treasury. FEMA also has the power to detain and forcibly relocate any citizen "in the event of a national emergency."

NEW MONEY

Three more months have passed, and the President has declared a state of national emergency. Today, the Secretary of the Treasury announced that the nations of the world had ratified a multilateral treaty that would solve the inflationary problems of the United States. This will be accomplished through the issuance of a new world-wide monetary unit called the Bancor, the name proposed by John Maynard Keynes at the Bretton Woods Conference in 1944. This new money will restore our commerce and put a stop to inflation. At last, said the Treasury Secretary, man will have total control over his economic destiny. Money will now become his servant instead of his master.

The United States, he said, has agreed to accept the Bancor as legal tender for all debts, public and private. The old money will still be honored but will be phased out over a three-month period. After that date, Federal Reserve Notes will no longer be valid. During the transition period, the old money may be exchanged at any bank at the ratio of one Bancor for five-hundred dollars. All existing contracts expressed in dollars—including home mortgages—are now converted to Bancors in that same ratio.

In the same announcement, the Secretary advised that the IMF/World Bank was backing this new money with something far more precious than gold. Instead, it will be backed by the assets of the world. These include bonds from the participating governments plus millions of acres of wilderness lands that have been deposited into the UN "Environmental Bank."[1] The National Parks and forests of the United States have been added to those reserves, and they will now be under the supervision of the UN Wilderness Asset Preservation and Enhancement Agency (WAPEA). From this date forward, the Federal Reserve System will operate as a subdivision of the IMF which is now the central bank of the world.

[1] "Debt-for-nature" swaps were proposed at the 4th World Wilderness Conference held in Denver, Colorado, in 1987 and they are being implemented right now. Costa Rica, Bolivia, and Ecuador have already agreed to swap their debt in exchange for a commitment to prevent wilderness areas from being developed. UN control over those lands is inevitable.

Although the Secretary did not mention it in his public appearance, the UN treaty also obligated the government to put restrictions on the use of cash. Every citizen is to be issued an international ID card. The primary purpose of these machine-readable cards is to provide positive identification for all citizens at transportation depots and military checkpoints. They also can be used by the banks and stores to access checking accounts, which are now called debit accounts.

Every citizen is being issued an account in a bank near his place of residence. All payments by employers or government agencies will be made by electronic transfer. Cash transactions larger than five Bancors will be illegal in three months. Most expenditures will be paid by debit card. That is the only way in which the UN Monetary Transaction Tracking Agency (MTTA) can combat counterfeiting and prevent money laundering by organized crime. That, of course, is camouflage. The government complex issuing the new money is the greatest perpetrator of counterfeiting and organized crime the world has ever seen.[1] The real targets are political dissidents and those escaping taxes in the underground economy.

No one will be allowed to earn or buy or sell without this ID card, nor will they be allowed to leave the country or even to migrate to another city. If any government agency has reason to red-flag an individual, his card will not clear, and he will be blocked from virtually all economic transactions and geographical movements. It is the ultimate control.

The new money offers the Cabal yet one more benefit. There can never be another run on the banks, because it is now illegal to demand currency.

1. That is not hyperbole. All fiat money is counterfeit. Furthermore, there is evidence that the CIA and the DEA have been deeply involved in the smuggling of illicit drugs. The money derived from those drugs was apparently laundered through Panamanian branches of U.S. banks and used to finance covert operations in Nicaragua and elsewhere. Virtually all governments have been involved in activities that would be criminal offenses if committed by ordinary citizens.

THE RISE OF REVOLUTIONARY MOVEMENTS

Hyperinflation is fertile ground for the seeds of revolution. Economic despair led the masses to grasp at the promises of Lenin in Russia, Hitler in Germany, Mussolini in Italy, and Mao in China. It has now been three years since that fateful run on the banks in New York, and inflation has not abated, even with the introduction of the Bancor. Now we are witnessing massive public demonstrations in every major city for higher wages, more jobs, larger government benefits, and more stringent price controls. Since there are practically no goods in the stores at any price, the demonstrators are also calling for higher output from government factories. The demonstrations have been organized by radical organizations advocating the overthrow of the "decadent capitalist" system and the enthronement of socialism in its place. The participants in the street do not understand the words they chant. They are unaware that capitalism has been dead in America for many years and that it is socialism they already have.

Nevertheless, there are tens of thousands of desperate people who are attracted to the rhetoric of revolution. Terrorism and revolutionary insurgency have become common occurrences in the major urban areas. The ranks of the revolutionaries are swelled by those who come solely for the looting that always follows.

People are frightened by these violent events and demand the restoration of law and order. They are relieved when martial law is declared. They are happy to see the International Guard patrolling their neighborhoods. They are not resentful of being confined in their homes or arbitrarily detained by soldiers. They are actually grateful for the omni-presence of the police state.

It is curious that the revolutionary groups behind this violence have not been inhibited by the government. To the contrary, they have been given grants from CFR organizations, and their leaders have been treated courteously by CFR politicians. The CFR media have given them extended coverage in the news and has presented their cause with sympathy. A few dissidents have begun to wonder if the revolutionaries are but the unknowing pawns of those in power and that their primary function is to frighten the population into accepting the constraints of a police state.

Such voices, however, are quickly silenced. Those who question the government or the media are branded as extremists at the lunatic fringe. Authorities say that they are the cause of our present woes. They are remnants of the old system based on profit-seeking and race-hating. They are guilty of politically-incorrect attitudes and hate crimes. They are sentenced to attitude-correction centers for psychological treatment and rehabilitation. Those who do not immediately recant are never seen again.

HOMES ARE NATIONALIZED

One of the first industries to feel the raw power of "emergency measures" was the home industry. During the early stages of inflation, people were applying their increasingly worthless dollars to pay down their mortgages. That was devastating to the lenders. They were being paid back in dollars that were worth only a fraction of the ones they had loaned out. The banking crisis had caused the disappearance of savings and investment capital, so they were unable to issue new loans to replace the old. Besides, people were afraid to sell their homes under such chaotic times and, if they did, very few were willing to buy with interest rates that high. Old loans were being paid off, and new loans were not replacing them. The S&Ls, which in the 1980s had been in trouble because home prices were falling, now were going broke because prices were rising.

Congress applied the expected political fix by bailing them out and taking them over. But that did not stop the losses. It merely transferred them to the taxpayers. To put an end to the losses, Congress passed the Housing Fairness and Reform Act (HFRA). It converted all Bancor-denominated contracts to a new unit of value—called the "Fairness Value"— which is determined by the National Average Price Index (NAPI) on Fridays of the preceding week. This has nothing to do with interest rates. It relates to Bancor values. For the purpose of illustration, let us convert Bancors back to dollars. A $50,000 loan on Friday became a $920,000 loan on Monday. Few people could afford the payments. Thousands of angry voters stormed the Capitol building in protest. While the mob shouted obscenities outside, Congress hastily voted to declare a moratorium on all mortgage payments. By the end of the day, no one had to pay anything! The people returned to their homes with satisfaction and gratitude for their wise and generous leaders.

That was only an "emergency" measure to be handled on a more sound basis later on. Many months have now passed, and Congress has not dared to tamper with the arrangement. The voters would throw them out of office if they tried. Millions of people have been living in their homes at no cost, except for county taxes, which were also beyond the ability of anyone to pay. Following the lead of Congress, the counties also declared a moratorium on their taxes—but not until the federal government agreed to make up their losses under terms of the newly passed Aid to Local Governments Act (ALGA).

Renters are now in the same position, because virtually all rental property has been nationalized, even that which had been totally paid for by their owners. Under HFRA, it is not "fair" for those who are buying their homes to have an advantage over those who are renting. Rent controls made it impossible for apartment owners to keep pace with the rising costs of maintenance and especially their rising taxes. Virtually all rental units have been seized by county governments for back taxes. And since the counties themselves are now dependent on the federal government for most of their revenue, their real estate has been transferred to federal agencies in return for federal aid.

All of this was pleasing to the voters who were gratified that their leaders were "doing something" to solve their problems. It gradually became clear, however, that the federal government was now the owner of all their homes and apartments. The reality is that people are living in them only at the pleasure of the government. They can be relocated to other quarters if that is what the government wants.

WAGE-PRICE CONTROLS AND WORK ARMIES

Meanwhile, the UN Wage and Price Stabilization Agency (WPSA) has instituted wage and price controls to combat inflation. What few businesses were able to survive the ravages of inflation are knocked out by these measures. Vital industries have been seized by the WPSA and prevented from closing. When employees refuse to work for low, fixed wages or to take the jobs assigned to them, they are placed under arrest and convicted of anti-democratic activities. Given a choice between prison or "volunteering" for the UN Full Employment and Environmental Restoration Army (FEERA), most of them chose the army. They are now doing the work prescribed for them in return for food and shelter. Many have been reassigned to new jobs, new cities, even new countries, depending on the employment quotas established by the UN International Human Resource Allocation Agency (IHRAA). Their families have been given living quarters which are appropriate to their work status and their willingness to cooperate.

Automobiles are now used only by the ruling elite who hold government positions of authority. To the extent possible, workers have been relocated to barracks which were constructed within walking distance of major industries. Others use rapid-transit systems, which have been greatly expanded by FEERA. For middle management and the more skilled workers who are allowed to live in the suburbs, there are "Peoples' Van Pools" (PVPs) that shuttle them to and from assigned boarding areas.

Last week, Maurice Strong, who is now the Director of IHRAA, toured the fifteen regional subdivisions that have been carved out of the North-American continent—including the former United States and Canada—and expressed gratification that America, at last, has ceased to be an aggressor against the world.

Another twenty years have slipped by, and we now find ourselves in The New World Order. No one around us is sure exactly when it began. In fact, there was no official starting date, no announcement in the media, no ceremony with blaring of trumpets. Sometime during the past ten or fifteen years, it became obvious that it just was, and everyone accepted it as the natural evolution of political trends and necessities. Now, a whole generation is in place that has no memory of another way of life. Many of the older folks have all but forgotten the details of their previous existence. And, of course, many of them have been eliminated. Schools and textbooks speak of the bygone era as one of unbridled competition, selfishness, and injustice. Previously commonplace possessions such as automobiles and private homes and three pairs of shoes are hardly mentioned, and when they are, they are derided as wasteful artifacts of a decadent society that, fortunately, has ceased to exist.

NO TAXES OR INFLATION OR DEPRESSIONS

The public is no longer concerned over high taxes. For the most part, there are none. Everyone works for the government—directly or indirectly—and is paid by electronic transfer to a government-regulated bank which controls all spending accounts. Even those large corporations which have been allowed to maintain the appearance of private ownership are merely junior partners of government. They are totally regulated and, at the same time, totally protected from failure. The amount each citizen receives for his labor is determined by his technical usefulness and his political rank. His taxes are pleasantly low or non-existent. The cost of government now is derived almost totally from expansion of the money supply—and from the economic value of the work battalions.

Each regional government of the world determines its spending needs and then offers to sell bonds in the open market to raise the money. The IMF/World Bank, acting as the UN's central bank, is the primary buyer. The Bank determines how much money to allow each regional government and then "purchases" that amount of bonds. It accomplishes that by making an electronic transfer of "credits" to one of its correspondent banks within the region receiving the money. Once that has happened, the local government can draw upon those credits to pay its bills. Not a single tax dollar is needed for any of that. The IMF/World bank simply creates the money and the regional governments spend it.

In days gone by, this increase in the money supply would have caused prices and wages to go up almost immediately. Not anymore. Prices and wages are controlled. What does happen, however, is that the government is caught in its own trap. It needs to keep the workers happy by giving them wage increases, but it also needs to keep its factories functioning by allowing price increases as well. The wage-price spiral, therefore, is not eliminated. It is merely delayed a few months. And, instead of happening in response to the interplay of supply and demand in a free market, it is directed by bureaucratic formula. The end result is the same either way. The people of the world are still paying the cost of their international and local governments through the hidden taxation called inflation.

In the chaotic past, the industrialized nations of the world went through phases of disruptive inflation often exceeding 1000% per year. That served a purpose in helping to destroy public faith in their existing national governments. It softened them up and made them more willing to accept drastic changes in their life styles and their political institutions. It paved the way to The New World Order. But now we have arrived, and extreme inflation rates—at least in the absence of war—would cause public dissatisfaction and be counterproductive. Inflation, therefore, has now been institutionalized at a fairly constant 5% per year. That has been determined to be the optimum level for generating the most revenue without causing public alarm. Five per cent, everyone agrees, is "moderate." They can live with that. But we tend to forget that it is 5% per year, forever.

A 5% devaluation applies, not only to the money earned this year, but to all that is left over from previous years. At the end of the first year, the original dollar is worth 95 cents. At the end of the second year, it is reduced again by 5% leaving its worth at 90 cents, and so on. After 20 years, the government will have confiscated 64% of every dollar we saved at the beginning of our carreers. After working 45 years, the hidden tax on those dollars will be 90%. The government will take virtually all of them over our lifetime. Earned interest will partially offset this effect but it will not alter the underlying reality of government confiscation.

EFFECT OF "MODEST" 5% INFLATION

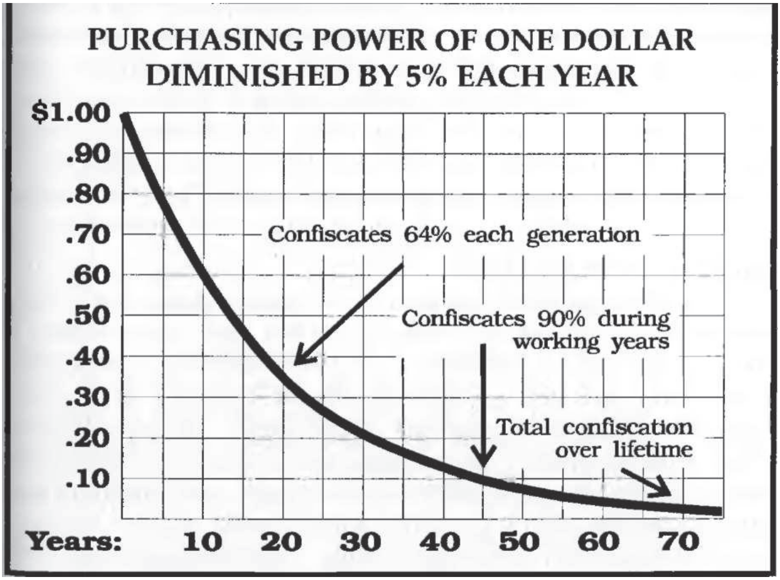
For the past forty years, all the published charts illustrating the decline of the dollar from such-and-such a date to the "present" show the following type of curve.



These, of course, are averages. A few people in the middle class of the bureaucracy will have managed to place some of their dollars into tangible assets or income-producing securities—what few that remain—where they are somewhat protected from the effects of inflation. For the vast majority, however, inflation hedges constitute but a tiny fraction of all they have earned over a lifetime.

And so we find that, in The New World Order, inflation has been institutionalized at a "modest" level of five per cent. Once in every five or six generations—as prices climb higher and higher—a new monetary unit can be issued to replace the old in order to eliminate some of the zeros. But no one will live long enough to experience more than one devaluation. Each generation is unconcerned about the loss of the previous one. Young people come into the process without realizing it is circular instead of linear. They cannot comprehend the total because they were not alive at the beginning and will not be alive at the end. In fact, there need not even be an end. The process can be continued forever.

By this mechanism—and with the output of work battalions—government can operate entirely without taxes. The lifetime output of every human being is at its disposal. Workers are allowed a color TV, state-subsidized alcohol and recreational drugs, and violent sports to amuse them, but they have no other options. They cannot escape their class. Society is divided into the rulers and the ruled, with an administrative bureaucracy in between. Privilege is now largely a right of birth. The worker class and even most of the administrators serve masters whom they do not know by name. But serve they do. Their new lords are the monetary and political scientists who created and who now control The New World Order. All of mankind is in a condition of high-tech feudalism.

HIGH-TECH FEUDALISM

Inflation is not the only aspect of economic chaos that is now under control. Booms and busts in the business cycle are also a thing of the past. Like direct taxes, there are no business cycles any more. Now that the government has firm control over every economic check point, business cycles simply are not allowed. There is no speculation in the market, because no one has funds with which to speculate. There are no expansions of inventories or capital goods in order to maximize future profits, because inventories now are determined by formula. Besides, profits are also determined by formula and, although they are just large enough to keep pace with inflation, they are guaranteed.

Chaos in the economy is now impossible because it is not tolerated. Neither is a depression. Yes, there are hundreds of millions of human beings living under conditions of extreme hardship, and thousands die of starvation every day, but depressions are outlawed. No politician, no author, no one in the media would dare to suggest that the system was a failure. Each month the government releases new statistics showing in some obscure way or another that the economy is steadily improving. Although people are starving everywhere, hunger does not exist anymore. Although work battalions are crammed into flimsy barracks and tents, and although older homes and apartment buildings are falling down for lack of maintenance, forcing more and more families to share their tiny, unheated dwellings—nevertheless, the housing shortage is officially being eliminated. There are no more problems in the economy, because they now are illegal.

VOICES FROM THE PAST

There is a message flashing on the front panel of our time machine. It reads: Duplicate sequence in memory bank. Check years 1816, 1831,1904, and 1949. That tells us that the on-board computer has found a similarity between what we are now viewing in the future and something that was recorded in the past. We had better check it out. On your keyboard, type: Send data to printer and press the key labelled Execute.

The first item is coming out of the printer now. It is a warning. In the year 1816, Thomas Jefferson wrote a letter to Sam Kercheval in which he said:

> We must make our election between economy and liberty, or profusion and servitude. If we run into such debts as that we must be taxed in our meat and in our drink, in our necessities and our comforts, in our labors and our amusements,... our people ... must come to labor sixteen hours in the twenty-four, give our earnings of fifteen of these to the government,... have no time to think, no means of calling our mis-managers to account; but be glad to obtain sustenance by hiring ourselves out to rivet their chains on the necks of our fellow-sufferers.... And this is the tendency of all human governments ... till the bulk of society is reduced to be mere automatons of misery.... And the forehorse of this frightful team is > public debt. Taxation follows that, and in its train wretchedness and oppression.[1]

Here is the second printout. It is a political commentary and a prophesy. In the year 1831, a young Frenchman, named Alexis de Tocqueville, toured the United States to prepare an official report to his government on the American prison system. His real interest, however, was the social and political environment in the New World. He found much to admire in America but he also observed what he thought were the seeds of its destruction. Upon his return to France the following year, he began work on a four-volume analysis of the strengths and weaknesses he found. His perceptivity was remarkable, and his work, entitled Democracy in America, has remained as one of the world's classic works in political science. This is the part that our computer recognized:

> The Americans hold that in every state the supreme power ought to emanate from the people; but when once that power is constituted, they can conceive, as it were, no limits to it, and they are ready to admit that it has the right to do whatever it pleases.... The idea of rights inherent in certain individuals is rapidly disappearing from the minds of men; the idea of the omnipotence and sole authority of society at large rises to fill its place....
> The first thing that strikes the observation is an innumerable multitude of men, all equal and alike, incessantly endeavoring to procure the petty and paltry pleasures with which they glut their lives. Each of them, living apart, is a stranger to the fate of all the rest; his children and his private friends constitute to him the whole of mankind....
> Above this race of men stands an immense and tutelary power, which takes upon itself alone to secure their gratifications and to watch over their fate. That power is absolute, minute, regular, provident, and mild. It would be like the authority of a parent if, like that authority, its object was to prepare men for manhood; but it seeks, on the contrary, to keep them in perpetual childhood: it is well content that the people should rejoice, provided they think of nothing but rejoicing....
> After having thus successively taken each member of the community in its powerful grasp and fashioned him at will, the supreme power then extends its arm over the whole community. It covers the surface of society with a network of small, complicated rules, minute and uniform, through which the most original minds > and the most energetic characters cannot penetrate, to rise above the crowd. The will of man is not shattered, but softened, bent, and guided; men are seldom forced by it to act, but they are constantly restrained from acting. Such a power does not destroy, but it prevents existence; it does not tyrannize, but it compresses, enervates, extinguishes, and stupefies a people, till each nation is reduced to nothing better than a flock of timid and industrious animals, of which the government is the shepherd....

> Our contemporaries are constantly excited by two conflicting passions: they want to be led, and they wish to remain free. As they cannot destroy either the one or the other of these contrary propensities, they strive to satisfy them both at once. They devise a sole, tutelary, and all-powerful form of government, but elected by the people. They combine the principle of centralization and that of popular sovereignty; this gives them a respite: they console themselves for being in tutelage by the reflection that they have chosen their own guardians. Every man allows himself to be put in leading-strings, because he sees that it is not a person or a class of persons, but the people at large who hold the end of his chain. By this system the people shake off their state of dependence just long enough to select their master and then relapse into it again.[1]

EDUCATION AS A TOOL FOR HUMAN ENGINEERING

The third printout is dated 1904 and is a report issued by the General Education Board, one of the first foundations established by John D. Rockefeller, Sr.. The purpose of the foundation was to use the power of money, not to raise the level of education in America, as was widely believed at the time, but to influence the direction of that education. Specifically, it was to promote the ideology of collectivism and internationalism. The object was to use the classroom to teach attitudes that encourage people to be passive and submissive to their rulers. The goal was—and is—to create citizens who are educated enough for productive work under supervision but not enough to question authority or seek to rise above their class. True education was to be restricted to the sons and daughters of the elite. For the rest, it would be better to produce skilled workers with no particular aspirations other than to enjoy life. It was enough, as de Tocqueville phrased it, "that the people should rejoice, provided they think of nothing but rejoicing.

1. Alexis de Tocqueville, Democracy in America, Vol. II (New York: Alfred Knopf, 1945), pp. 290-91,318-19.

In the first publication of the General Education Board, Fred Gates explained the plan:

> In our dreams we have limitless resources, and the people yield themselves with perfect docility to our molding hands. The present educational conventions fade from our minds, and unhampered by tradition, we work our own good upon a grateful and responsive rural folk. We shall not try to make these people or any of their children into philosophers of mental learning or of science. We have not to raise from among them authors, editors, poets, or men of letters. We shall not search for embryo great artists, painters, musicians, nor lawyers, doctors, preachers, politicians, statesmen of whom we have ample supply. The task we set before ourselves is very simple as well as a very beautiful one: To train these people as we find them to a perfectly ideal life just where they are.... in the homes, in the shop, and on the farm.[1]

BACK TO THE FUTURE

Here is the fourth computer printout from the past. It is a satire—and a warning. In the year 1949, George Orwell wrote his classic novel entitled 1984. In it, he portrayed the same "futuristic" scenes that now lie before us as we sit in our time machine. His only error appears to have been the date that became the title of his book. If he were writing it today, it is likely he would call it 2054.

Orwell described the world of our future as being divided into three regions called Oceania, Eurasia, and Eastasia. Oceania consists of the Americas plus England, Australia, and the Pacific Islands; Eurasia is Russia and continental Europe; Eastasia comprises China, Japan, Southeast Asia, & India. These superstates are constantly at war with each other. The wars are not fought to conquer the enemy, they are waged for the primary purpose of controlling the population. The people in all three territories tolerate their misery and oppression because sacrifices are necessary in time of war. Most of the stratagems outlined in The Report from Iron Mountain are to be found in Orwell's narrative, but Orwell described them first. The think-tank was even willing to credit Orwell as the source of some of its concepts. For example, on the subject of establishing a modern, sophisticated form of slavery, the group at Iron Mountain said:

[1] "Occasional Paper No. 1," General Education Board, 1904.

> Up to now, this has been suggested only in fiction, notably in the works of Wells, Huxley, Orwell, and others engaged in the imaginative anticipation of the sociology of the future. But the fantasies projected in Brave New World and 1984 have seemed less and less implausible over the years since their publication. The traditional association of slavery with ancient preindustrial cultures should not blind us to its adaptability to advanced forms of social organization.[1]

From this we see that Orwell's work is far more than an entertaining novel. It is relevant to our present journey in time. Our would-be masters have studied him carefully. So should we. This is what he wrote:

> These three superstates are permanently at war, and have been so for the past twenty-five years. War, however, is no longer the desperate, annihilating struggle that it was in the early decades of the twentieth century.... This is not to say that either the conduct of the war, or the prevailing attitude toward it, has become less bloodthirsty or more chivalrous. On the contrary, war hysteria is continuous and universal in all countries, and such acts as raping, looting, the slaughter of children, the reduction of whole populations to slavery, and reprisals against prisoners which extend even to boiling and burying alive, are looked upon as normal....
> The primary aim of modern warfare ... is to use up the products of the machine without raising the general standard of living. [The "machine" is society's technical and industrial capacity to produce goods.] ... From the moment when the machine first made its appearance it was clear to all thinking people that the need for human drudgery, and therefore to a great extent for human inequality, had disappeared. If the machine were used deliberately for that end, hunger, overwork, dirt, illiteracy, and disease could be eliminated within a few generations....
> But it was also clear that an all-around increase in wealth threatened the destruction—indeed in some cases was the destruction—of a hierarchical society. In a world in which everyone worked short hours, had enough to eat, lived in a house with a bathroom and a refrigerator, and possessed a motorcar or even an airplane, the most obvious and perhaps the most important form of inequality would already have disappeared. If it once became general, wealth would confer no distinction.... Such a society could not long remain stable. For if leisure and security were enjoyed by all alike, the great mass of human beings who are normally stupefied by poverty would become literate and would learn to think for themselves; and

War is a way of shattering to pieces, or pouring into the stratosphere, or sinking into the depths of the sea, materials which might otherwise be used to make the masses too comfortable, and hence, in the long run, too intelligent....

> In practice the needs of the population are always underestimated, with the result that there is a chronic shortage of half the necessities of life; but this is looked on as an advantage. It is deliberate policy to keep even the favored groups somewhere near the brink of hardship, because a general state of scarcity increases the importance of small privileges and thus magnifies the distinction between one group and another.... The social atmosphere is that of a besieged city, where the possession of a lump of horseflesh makes the difference between wealth and poverty. And at the same time the consequences of being at war, and therefore in danger, makes the handing over of all power to a small caste seem the natural, unavoidable condition of survival....

In principle it would be quite simple to waste the surplus labor of the world by building temples and pyramids, by digging holes and filling them up again, or even by producing vast quantities of goods and then setting fire to them. But this would provide only the economic and not the emotional basis for a hierarchical society....

THE FUNCTION OF WASTE IN MODERN TOTALITARIANISM

Once again, it is clear that Orwell's grim narrative was a primary model for The Report from Iron Mountain. The authors of that blueprint for our future spoke at length about the value of planned waste as a means of preventing the masses from improving their standard of living. They wrote:

> The production of weapons of mass destruction has always been associated with economic "waste." The term is pejorative, since it > implies a failure of function. But no human activity can properly be considered wasteful if it achieves its contextual objective....

> In the case of military "waste," there is indeed a larger social utility.... In advanced modern democratic societies, the war system ... has served as the last great safeguard against the elimination of necessary social classes. As economic productivity increases to a level further and further above that of minimum subsistence, it becomes more and more difficult for a society to maintain distribution patterns insuring the existence of "hewers of wood and drawers of water."...
> The arbitrary nature of war expenditures and of other military activities make them ideally suited to control these essential class relationships.... The continuance of the war system must be assured, if for no other reason, among others, than to preserve whatever quality and degree of poverty a society requires as an incentive, as well as to maintain the stability of its internal organization of power.

These documents from the real past and the imagined future can help us to better understand our present. The spectacle of wasteful government spending suddenly becomes logical. It is not stupidity that pays farmers to destroy their crops, or that purchases trillion-dollar weapons systems that are never deployed or in some cases not even completed, or that provides funding for studies of the sex life of the tse-tse fly, or that gives grants to pornographers posing as artists. The overriding object behind most of these boondoggles is to waste the resources of the nation. It is obvious by now that the decline in living standards in the Western world is associated with a widening gap between the haves and the have-nots. What is not so obvious, however, is that this is according to plan. To that end, massive waste in government spending is not an unfortunate by-product, it is the goal.

That brings us back to the question of finding an acceptable substitute for war. War is not only the ultimate waste, it is also the ultimate motivation for human action. As Orwell said, waste in the absence of war "would provide only the economic and not the emotional basis for a hierarchical society." Will the environmental-pollution model be able to sufficiently motivate human action to be a substitute for war?

That is not a safe assumption. The possibility of war in our future cannot be ruled out. The environmental-pollution model is not yet thoroughly proven. It is working well for limited purposes and on a limited scale, but it is still doubtful that it will ever equal the hysteria potential of a physical war. The world planners will not abandon the use of war until the new model has been proven over many years. On that point, the Report from Iron Mountain was emphatic:

> When asked how best to prepare for the advent of peace, we must first reply, as strongly as we can, that the war system cannot responsibly be allowed to disappear until 1) we know exactly what it is we plan to put in its place, and 2) we are certain, beyond reasonable doubt, that these substitute institutions will serve their purposes in terms of the survival and stability of society.... It is uncertain, at this time, whether peace will ever be possible. It is far more questionable ... that it would be desirable even if it were demonstrably attainable.[1]

REGIONALISM AS A TRANSITION TO WORLD GOVERNMENT

The coalescing of the world's nations into three regional superstates was already visible even before we activated our time machine. The first steps had been strictly economic but were soon followed by political and military consolidation. The European Union (EU), including Russia, began with the issuance of a common money and eventually merged into a functional regional government. It was Orwell's Eurasia, even though it avoided calling itself by that name. Treaties binding Canada, the United States, Mexico, and South America formed the basic outline of Oceania, built around the Federal-Reserve Note as the regional money. Japan eventually became hostile to the West when trading was no longer to her sole advantage and, along with China which had been built up by Western aid and technology, and with India which had been given atomic technology by the West, became the political center of Eastasia. Even as far back as the 1980s, it was known as the "Greater East Asia Co-Prosperity Sphere." Its monetary system was to be based upon the Yen.

The people of the former nations were not yet ready for a giant leap into world government. They had to be led to that goal by a series of shorter and less frightening steps. They were more willing to surrender their economic and military independence to regional groupings of people who were closer in ethnic and cultural origin and who shared common borders. Only after several decades of transition was it possible to make the final merger. In the meantime, the world was plunged alternately between war and peace. After each cycle of war, the population was more frightened, impoverished, and collectivised. In the end, world government was irresistible. By that time, the environmental-pollution model and the alien-invasion model had been perfected to provide high levels of human motivation. But, even then, regional uprisings were occasionally engineered when necessary to justify massive "peacekeeping" operations. War was never fully abandoned. It remained, as it always had been, a necessity for the stabilization of society.

HOW FIXED IS THE FUTURE?

Let us return now to the present from which we departed and reflect upon our journey. The first thing that strikes us is that we cannot be certain the future will unfold exactly as we have seen it. There are too many variables. When we originally set our Primary-Assumption selector to Present trends unaltered, we left the Secondary-Assumption selector where it was. It was pointing to Banking Crisis. Had we chosen the next position, No Banking Crisis, our journey would have been different. We would not have seen long lines of depositors or panic-buying in the stores or closing of the stock market. But we would still have witnessed the same scenes of despair in the more distant future. We merely would have travelled a different path of events to get there.

The forces driving our society into global totalitarianism would not change one iota. We still would have the doomsday mechanisms at work. We would have the CFR in control of the power centers of government and the media. And we would have an electorate which is unaware of what is being done to them and, therefore, unable to resist. Through environmental and economic treaties and through military disarmament to the UN, we would witness the same emergence of a world central bank, a world government, and a world army to enforce its dictates. Inflation and wage/price controls would have progressed more or less the same, driving consumer goods out of existence and men into bondage. Instead of moving toward The New World Order in a series of economic spasms, we merely would have travelled a less violent path and arrived at exactly the same destination.

There is little doubt that the master planners would prefer to follow the more tranquil route. Patient gradualism is less risky. But not everything is within their control. Events can get out of hand, and powerful economic forces can become suddenly unleashed. Banking crises can occur even without being deliberately caused.

On the other hand, the Cabal also knows that crises are useful in driving the masses into the corral faster than they would otherwise move. Therefore, the application of some kind of scientifically engineered crisis cannot be ruled out. It could take many forms: Ethnic violence, terrorism, plague, even war itself. But none of that makes any difference. It will not alter our direction of travel through time. It will only determine our specific route. Like a flowing river, it may be diverted this way or that by natural barriers or even by man-made channels, dikes, and dams, but it eventually will reach the sea. Our concluding reflection, therefore, is that it is relatively unimportant whether there will be a banking crisis or any other cataclysmic event. These are all secondary assumptions which are meaningless. Our only real hope for averting the new feudalism of the future is to change the Primary assumption. We must change it to read: Present Trends Reversed.

SUMMARY

A pessimistic scenario of future events includes a banking crisis, followed by a government bailout and the eventual nationalization of all banks. The final cost is staggering and is paid with money created by the Federal Reserve. It is passed on to the public in the form of inflation.

Further inflation is caused by the continual expansion of welfare programs, socialized medicine, entitlement programs, and interest on the national debt. The dollar is finally abandoned as the defacto currency of the world. Trillions of dollars are sent back to the United States by foreign investors to be converted as quickly as possible into tangible assets. That causes even greater inflation than before. So massive is the inflationary pressure that industry and commerce come to a halt. Barter becomes the means of exchange. America takes her place among the depressed nations of South America, Africa, and Asia—mired together in economic equality.

Politicians seize upon the opportunity and offer bold reforms. The reforms are more of exactly what created the problem in the first place: expanded governmental power, new regulatory agencies, and more restrictions on freedom. But this time, the programs begin to take on an international flavor. The American dollar is replaced by a new UN money, and the Federal Reserve System becomes a branch operation of the IMF/World Bank.

Electronic transfers gradually replace cash and checking accounts. This permits UN agencies to monitor the financial activities of every person. A machine-readable ID card is used for that purpose. If an individual is red flagged by any government agency, the card does not clear, and he is cut off from all economic transactions and travel. It is the ultimate control.

Increasing violence in the streets from revolutionary movements and ethnic clashes provide an excuse for martial law. The public is happy to see UN soldiers checking ID cards. The police-state arrives in the name of public safety.

Eventually all private dwellings are taken over by the government as a result of bailing out the home-mortgage industry. Rental property is also taken, as former landlords are unable to pay property taxes. People are allowed to live in these dwellings at reasonable cost, or no cost at all. It gradually becomes clear, however, that the government is now the owner of all homes and apartments. People are living in them only at the pleasure of the government. They can be reassigned at any time.

Wages and prices are controlled. Dissidents are placed into work armies. There are no more autos except for the ruling elite. Public transportation is provided for the masses, and those with limited skills live in government housing within walking distance of their assigned jobs. Men have been reduced to the level of serfs who are subservient to their masters. Their condition of life can only be described as high-tech feudalism.

There is no certainty that the future will unfold in exactly that manner, because there are too many variables. For example, if we had assumed that there will not be a banking crisis, then our journey would be different. We would not see long lines of depositors or panic-buying in the stores or closing of the stock market. But we would still witness the same scenes of despair in the more distant future. We merely would have travelled a different path of events to get there. That is because the forces driving our society into global totalitarianism would not have changed one iota. We still would have the doomsday mechanisms at work. We would have the CFR in control of the power centers of government and the media. We would have an electorate which is unaware of what is being done to them and, therefore, unable to resist. Through environmental and economic treaties and through military disarmament to the UN, we would witness the same emergence of a world central bank, a world government, and a world army to enforce its dictates. Inflation and wage/price controls would have progressed more or less the same, driving consumer goods out of existence and men into bondage. Instead of moving toward The New World Order in a series of economic spasms, we merely would have travelled a less violent path and arrived at exactly the same destination.

Chapter Twenty-Six

A REALISTIC SCENARIO

What must be done if we are to avert the pessimistic scenario; a list of specific measures thatmust be taken to stop the monetary binge; an appraisal of how severe the economic hangover will be; a checklist for personal survival—and beyond.

The pessimistic scenario presented in the previous chapter is the kind of narrative that turns people off. No one wants to hear those things, even if they are true—or we should say especially if they are true. As Adlai Stevenson said when he was a candidate for President: "The contest between agreeable fancy and disagreeable fact is unequal. Americans are suckers for good news."

So, where is the optimistic scenario in which everything turns out all right, in which prosperity is restored and freedom is preserved after all? Actually, it is not hard to locate. You can find it every day somewhere in your newspaper. It is the shared faith of almost all politicians, experts, and commentators. If that is what you want to hear, you have just wasted a lot of time reading this book.

There is no optimistic scenario. Events have progressed too far for that. Even if we begin to turn things around by forcing Congress to cut spending, reduce the debt, and disentangle from UN treaties, the Cabal will not let go without a ferocious fight. When the Second Bank of the United States was struggling for its life in 1834, Nicholas Biddle, who controlled it, set about to cause as much havoc in the economy as possible and then to blame it on President Jackson's anti-bank policies. By suddenly tightening credit and withdrawing money from circulation, he triggered a full-scale national depression. At the height of his attack, he declared: "All other banks and all the merchants may break, but the Bank of the United States shall not break." The amount of devastation that could be caused by today's Federal Reserve is infinitely greater than what Biddle was able to unleash. It would be pure self-deception to think that the Cabal would quietly give up its power without exercising that option. We must conclude that no one is going to get out of this one unscathed. There is hell to pay, and it is we who are going to pay it.

SEVENTH REASON TO ABOLISH THE FED

What has any of this to do with the Federal Reserve System? The answer is that the Federal Reserve is the starting point of the pessimistic scenario. The chain of events begins with fiat money created by a central bank, which leads to government debt, which causes inflation, which destroys the economy, which impoverishes the people, which provides an excuse for increasing government power, which is an on-going process culminating in totalitarianism. Eliminate the Federal Reserve from this equation, and the pessimistic scenario ceases to exist. That is the seventh and final reason to abolish the Fed: It is an instrument of totalitarianism.

If the optimistic scenario is too optimistic and the pessimistic scenario is too pessimistic, then what is the scenario that we should hope lies in our future?

There is a middle course that lies between optimism and pessimism. It is called realism. Calling it a realistic scenario is not meant to imply that it is predetermined to happen, nor that it is even likely to happen. It is realistic only in the sense that it can happen if certain conditions are met. The balance of this chapter will be devoted to an analysis of those conditions.

Let us begin by allowing our opponent, Cynicism, to state the problem we face: "Is it realistic to believe that the current trends can actually be reversed? Isn't it just fantasy to think that anything can be done at this late date to break the CFR's hold over government, media, and education? Do we really expect the gum-chewing public to go upstream against the indoctrination of newspapers, magazines, television, and movies?"

Apathy joins in: "Forget it. There's nothing you can do. The bankers and politicians have all the money and all the power. The game is already over. Make the most of it, and enjoy life while you can."

---

1. See chapter seventeen.

Do not listen to Cynicism and Apathy. They are agents of your enemy. They want you to quietly get in line and submit without a struggle. However, they do make a point that must not be overlooked. The battle has progressed far, and our position is not good. If we are to reverse the present trends, we must be prepared to make a herculean effort. That does not mean "Write your Congressman" or "Vote on Tuesday" or "Sign a petition" or "Send in a donation." That is far too easy. Those measures still play an important role in the battle plan but they fall far short of the need. Armchair campaigns will no longer do it.

Before turning to the question of what kind of effort will be required, let us first be clear on what it is we want to accomplish.

WHAT MUST NOT BE DONE

Let us begin with the negatives: what must not be done. The most obvious item in this category is that we must not turn to government for more of the same "cures" that have made us ill. We do not want more power granted to the Fed or the Treasury or the President, nor do we need another government agency. We probably don't even need any new laws, with the possible exception of those legislative acts which repeal some of the old laws now on the books. Our goal is the reduction of government, not its expansion.

We do not want to merely abolish the Fed and turn over its operation to the Treasury. That is a popular proposal among those who know there is a problem but who have not studied the history of central banking. It is a recurrent theme of the Populist movement and those advocating what they call Social Credit. Their argument is that the Federal Reserve is privately owned and is independent of political control. Only Congress is authorized to issue the nation's money, not a group of private bankers. Let the Treasury issue paper money and bank credit, they say, and we can have all the money we need without having to pay one penny in interest to the bankers.

It is an appealing argument, but it contains serious flaws. First, the concept that the Fed is privately owned is a legal fiction. The member banks hold stock, but it carries no voting weight. No matter how large the bank or how much capital is paid in, each bank has one vote. The stock cannot be sold or traded. Stockholders have none of the usual elements of control that come with ownership and, in fact, they are subservient to the central board. The seven members of the Board of Governors are appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. It is true that the Fed is independent of direct political control, but it must never be forgotten that it was created by Congress and it can be extinguished by Congress. In truth, the Federal Reserve is neither an arm of government nor is it private. It is a hybrid. It is an association of the large commercial banks which has been granted special privileges by Congress. A more accurate description would be simply that it is a cartel protected by federal law.

But the more important point is that it makes no difference whether the Fed is government or private. Even if it were entirely private, merely turning it over to the government would not alter its function. The same people undoubtedly would run it, and they would continue to create money for political purposes. The Bank of England is the granddaddy of central banks. It was privately owned at its inception but became an official arm of the British government in more recent times. It continues to operate as a central bank, and nothing of substance has changed. The central banks of all the other industrialized nations are direct arms of their respective governments. They are indistinguishable in function from the Federal Reserve. The technicalities of structure and ownership are not as important as function. Turning the Federal Reserve over to the Treasury without at the same time denuding it of its function as a central bank—that is, its ability to manipulate the money supply—would be a colossal waste of time.

The proposal of having the Treasury issue the nation's money is another question and has nothing to do with who owns the Fed. There is nothing wrong with the federal government issuing money so long as it abides by the Constitution and adheres to the principle of honesty. Both of these restraints forbid Congress from issuing paper money that is not 100% backed by gold or silver. If you are in doubt about the reasoning behind that statement, it would be a good idea to review chapter fifteen before continuing.

It is true that, if Congress had the power to create as much money as it needs without the Federal Reserve System, interest would not have to be paid on the national debt. But the Fed holds only a small percentage of the debt. Over 90% of those bonds are held by individuals and institutions in the private sector. Terminating interest payments would not hurt those big, bad bankers nearly as much as it would the millions of people who would lose their insurance policies, investments, and retirement plans. The Social Credit scheme would wipe out the economy in one fell swoop.

And we still would not have solved the deeper problem. The bankers would be cut out of the scam, but the politicians would remain. Congress would now be acting as its own central bank, the money supply would continue to expand, inflation would continue to roar, and the nation would continue to die. Besides, issuing money without gold or silver backing violates the Constitution.

THE JFK RUMOR

In 1981, a rumor was circulated that President Kennedy had been assassinated by agents of the hidden money power because he had signed Executive Order #11110 instructing the Treasury to print more than $4 billion in United States Notes. That is precisely the kind of money we are discussing: paper bills without gold or silver backing issued by the government, not the Federal Reserve. According to the rumor, the bankers were furious because they would lose interest payments on the money supply. When the Order was tracked down, however, it involved Silver Certificates, not United States Notes. Silver Certificates are backed by silver, which means they are real money, so the rumor was wrong on that point. But there is no interest paid on Silver Certificates either, so the rumor held up on that point. There was a third point, however, which everyone seemed to overlook. The Executive Order did not instruct the Treasury to issue Silver Certificates. It merely authorized it to do so. There is no evidence that this was ever done. If the Certificates were printed at all, they never found their way into circulation. In 1987, the order was rescinded by President Reagan.

The Treasury did print a small supply of United States Notes in 1963, but these were authorized by an 1878 act of Congress to replace Civil War Greenbacks which had been retired from circulation. JFK did not initiate that issue. The greatest quantity of those Notes to be in circulation since their last printing in 1969 was $322 million—not a significant figure compared to Federal Reserve Notes. Most of them are now collectors' items.[1]

[1] See Currency in U.S. History, (Kansas City: Federal Reserve Bank, n.d.), pp. 10,11.

The persistent rumor regarding the bankers' role in JFK's death was reinforced by several books circulated in conservative circles. They contained an ominous passage from Kennedy's speech at Columbia University, just ten days before his assassination. He is quoted as saying: "The high office of President has been used to foment a plot to destroy the Americans' freedom, and before I leave office I must inform the citizen of his plight." However, when Columbia University was contacted to provide a transcript of the speech, it was learned that Kennedy never spoke there—neither ten days before his assassination nor at any other time\ Ronald Whealan, head librarian at the John Fitzgerald Kennedy Library in Boston, provides this additional information: "Ten days prior to the assassination he was at the White House meeting with, among others, the ambassador to the United States from Portugal."

It is possible that the President did make the remarks attributed to him on a different date before a different audience. Even so, it is a cryptic message which could have several meanings. That he intended to expose the Fed is the least likely of them all. Kennedy had been a life-long socialist and internationalist. He had attended the Fabian London School of Economics; participated in the destruction of the American money supply; and engineered the transfer of American wealth to foreign nations. There is little reason to believe that he had suddenly "seen the light" and was preparing to reverse his life-long beliefs and commitments.

MONETARISTS VS SUPPLY-SIDERS

But we are off the topic. Let us return to those unworkable theories regarding monetary reform. Prominent in this category are the Monetarists and the Supply-Siders. The Monetarists, adhering to the theories of Milton Friedman, believe that money should continue to be be created by the Mandrake Mechanism of the Federal Reserve, but that the supply should be determined by a strict formula established by Congress, not the Fed. The Supply-siders, represented by Arthur Laffer and Charles Kadlec, believe in formulas also, but they have a different one. They want the quantity of money to be determined by the current demand for gold. They are not talking about a true gold standard in which paper money is fully backed. By following what they call a "gold-price rule," they would simply observe the price of gold in the free market and then tinker with the dollar by expanding or contracting the money supply to keep its relative value, compared to gold, fairly constant.

These groups are alike in their underlying philosophy. Each has a different goal and a different formula, but they agree on method: manipulation of the money supply. They share the same conviction that the free market will not work without assistance; the same faith in the wisdom and integrity of politically-created formulas, bureaus, and agencies. The Fed remains unscathed throughout all these debates because it is the ultimate mechanism for intervention. These people don't really want to change it. They just want their turn at running it.

Occasionally a truly original proposal appears that captures one's attention. Addressing a prestigious gathering of conservative monetary theorists in 1989, Jerry Jordan suggested that the monetary base could be expanded by holding a national lottery. The government would pay out more dollars in prize money than it received in ticket sales. The excess would represent the amount by which the monetary base would expand. Presumably, if they wanted to contract the money supply, they would pay out fewer dollars than taken in. It was an intriguing thought, but Mr. Jordan was quick to add: "The problem, of course, is that there would not be any effective institutional restraint on the growth of the monetary base." Indeed, that is the problem with all schemes involving monetary control by men.

BALANCED-BUDGET AMENDMENT

A so-called balanced-budget amendment to the Constitution is not the answer either. In fact, it is an illusion and a fraud. Some of the biggest spenders in Congress are supporters. They know that it is popular with the voters but would not cramp their spending style in the least. If they were not permitted to spend more than they receive in taxes, they would have a perfect excuse for raising taxes. It would be a way of punishing the voters for placing limits on them. The voters, on the other hand, would collapse under the burden of higher taxes and demand that their Congressmen circumvent the very amendment they previously supported. And that would be easy. Most versions of the balanced-budget amendment have an escape hatch built for just that purpose. Congress shall balance its budget "except in cases of emergency." Who decides what constitutes an emergency? Congress, of course. In other words, Congress shall balance its budget except when it doesn't want to. So what else is new?

A serious amendment would have to tackle, not balancing the budget, but limiting the spending. It that were done, the budget would take care of itself. But even that would be a waste of time considering the present composition of Congress. Instead of generating political pressure for a Constitutional amendment, we would be better off directing that same effort toward throwing the big spenders out of office. As long as the spenders are allowed to stay in there, they will find a way to get around any law—including the Constitution itself.

Another flaw in most versions of the balanced-budget amendment is that it would not affect the off-budget expenditures called entitlements. They now represent 52% of all federal outlays and are growing by 12% each year. A strategy that ignores that back-breaking load is not worth even considering. Furthermore, even if Congress could be forced to stop deficit spending, the balanced-budget amendment would not solve the problem of inflation or paying off the national debt. The Federal Reserve can now inflate our money supply by using literally any debt in the world. It does not have to come from Congress. Unless we zero in on the Fed itself, we will just be playing political games with no chance of winning.

Every year, a few concerned Congressmen submit a bill to investigate or audit the Federal Reserve System. They are to be commended for their effort, but the process has been an exercise in futility. Their bills receive little or no publicity and never get out of committee for a vote. Even if they did receive serious attention, however, they could actually be counterproductive.

On the surface, it would appear that there is nothing wrong with a Congressional investigation or an audit, but what is there to investigate? We must assume the Fed is doing exactly what it says and is in total compliance with the law. A few minor improprieties probably would be discovered involving personal abuse of funds or insider profiteering, but that would be minor compared to the gigantic fraud that already is out in the open for all to see. The Federal Reserve is the world's largest and most successful scam. Anyone who understands the nature of money can see that without a team of investigators and auditors.

The danger in a proposal to audit the Fed is that it would provide an excuse to delay serious action for several years while the audit is going on. It would give the public a false impression that Congress is doing something. It also would give the monetary technicians an opportunity to lay down a smoke screen of verbiage and confusing statistics. The public would expect that all the answers will be forthcoming from the investigation, but the very groups and combines that need to be investigated would be conducting, or at least confounding, the investigation. By the time fourteen volumes of testimony, charts, tables, and exhibits finally appear, the public would be intimidated and fatigued. The bottom line is that we do not need a bill to audit the Fed. We need one to mbolish it.

A PLAN FOR ELIMINATING THE FED

So much for things not to do. Now let's get down to the business at hand. To abolish the Federal Reserve System would be quite simple. All that would be required is an act of Congress consisting of one sentence: The Federal Reserve Act and all of its amendments are hereby rescinded. But that would wipe out our monetary system overnight and create such havoc in the economy that it would play right into the hands of the globalists. They would use the resulting chaos as evidence that such a move was a mistake, and the American people would likely welcome a rescue from the IMF/World Bank. We would find ourselves back in the Pessimistic Scenario even though we had done the right thing.

There are certain steps that must precede the abandonment of the Fed if we are to have a safe passage. The first step is to convert our present fiat money into real money. That means we must create an entirely new money supply which is 100% backed by precious metal—and we must do so within a reasonably short period of time. To that end, we also must establish the true value of our present fiat money so it can be exchanged for new money on a realistic basis and phased out of circulation. Here is how it can be done:

1. Repeal the legal-tender laws. The federal government will continue accepting Federal Reserve Notes in the payment of taxes, but everyone else will be free to accept them, reject them, or discount them as they wish. There is no need to force people to accept honest money. Only fiat money needs the threat of imprisonment to back it up. Private institutions should be free to innovate and to compete. If people want to use Green Stamps or Disney-ride coupons or Bank-of-America Notes as a medium of exchange, they should be free to do so. The only requirement should be faithful fulfillment of contract. If the Green-Stamp company says it will give a crystal lamp for seven books of stamps, then it should be compelled to do so. Disney should be required to accept the coupon in exactly the manner printed on the back. And, if Bank of America tells its depositors they can have their dollars back any time they want, it should be required to keep 100% backing (coins or Treasury Certificates) in its vault at all times. In the transition to a new money, it is anticipated that the old Federal Reserve Notes will continue to be widely used.
2. Freeze the present supply of Federal Reserve Notes, except for what will be needed in step number eleven.
3. Define the "real" dollar in terms of precious-metal content, preferably what it was in the past: 371.25 grains of silver. It could be another weight of silver or even another metal, but the old silver dollar is a proven winner.
4. Establish gold as an auxiliary monetary reserve which can be substituted for silver, not at a fixed-price ratio, but at whatever ratio is set by the free market. Fixed ratios always become unfair over time as the prices of gold and silver drift relative to each other. Although gold may be substituted for silver at this ratio, it is only silver that is the foundation for the dollar.
5. Restore free coinage at the U.S. Mint and issue silver "dollars" as well as gold "pieces." Both dollars and pieces will be defined by metal content, but only coins with silver content can be called dollars, half-dollars, quarter-dollars, or tenth-dollars (dimes). At first, these coins will be derived only from metal brought into the Mint by private parties. They must not be drawn from the Treasury's supply which is reserved for use in step number six.

6. Pay off the national debt with Federal Reserve Notes created for that purpose. Creating money without backing is forbidden by the Constitution; however, when no one is forced by law to accept Federal Reserve Notes as legal tender, they will no longer be the official money of the United States. They will be merely a kind of government script which no one is required to accept. Their utility will be determined by their usefulness in payment of taxes and by the public's anticipation of having them exchanged for real money at a later date. The creation of Federal Reserve Notes, with the understanding that they are not the official money of the United States, would therefore not be a violation of the Constitution. In any event, the deed is already done. The decision to redeem government bonds with Federal Reserve Notes is not ours. Congress decided that long ago, and the course was set at the instant those bonds were issued. We are merely playing out the hand. The money will be created for that purpose. Our only choice is when: now or later. If we allow the bonds to stand, the national debt will be repudiated by inflation. The value of the original dollars will gradually be reduced to zero while only the interest remains. Everyone's purchasing power will be destroyed, and the nation will die. But if we want not to repudiate the national debt and decide to pay it off now, we will be released from the burden of interest payments and, at the same time, prepare the way for a sound monetary system.
7. Pledge the government's hoard of gold and silver (except the military stockpile) to be used as backing for all the Federal Reserve Notes in circulation. The denationalization of these assets is long overdue. At various times in recent history, it was illegal for Americans to own gold, and their private holdings were confiscated. The amount which was taken should be returned to the private sector as a matter of principle. The rest of the gold supply also belongs to the people, because they paid for it through taxes and inflation. The government has no use for gold or silver except to support the money supply. The time has come to give it back to the people and use it for that purpose.
8. Determine the weight of all the gold and silver owned by the U.S. government and then calculate the total value of that supply in terms of real (silver) dollars.

9. Determine the number of all the Federal Reserve Notes in circulation and then calculate the real-dollar value of each one by dividing the value of the precious metals by the number of Notes.
10. Retire all Federal Reserve Notes from circulation by offering to exchange them for dollars at the calculated ratio. There will be enough gold or silver to redeem every Federal Reserve Note in circulation.[1]
11. Convert all contracts based on Federal Reserve Notes to dollars using the same exchange ratio. That includes the contracts called mortgages and government bonds. In that way, monetary values expressed within debt obligations will be converted on the same basis and at the same time as currency.
12. Issue Silver Certificates. As the Treasury redeems Federal Reserve Notes for dollars, recipients will have the option of taking coins or Treasury Certificates which are 100% backed. These Certificates will become the new paper currency.
13. Abolish the Federal Reserve System. It would be possible to allow the System to continue as a check clearing-house so long as it did not function as a central bank. A check clearing-house will be needed, and the banks that presently own the Fed should be allowed to continue performing that service. However, they must no longer receive tax subsidies to operate, and competition must be allowed. However, the Federal Reserve System, as presently chartered by Congress, must be abolished.
14. Introduce free banking. Banks should be deregulated and, at the same time, cut loose from protection at taxpayers' expense. No more bailouts. The FDIC and other government "insurance" agencies should be phased out, and their functions turned over to real insurance companies in the private sector. Banks should be required to keep 100% reserves for demand deposits, because that is a contractual obligation. All forms of time deposits should be presented to the public exactly as CDs are today. In other words, the depositor should be fully informed that his money is invested and he will have to wait a specified time before he can have it back. Competition will insure that those institutions that best serve their customers' needs will prosper. Those that do not will fall by the wayside—without the need of an army of bank regulators.

1. Since the value of FRNs would be firmly established in terms of real dollars, there would be no compelling reason to exchange them, and it is possible that people would continue to use them in daily commerce. Therefore, to retire the FRNs and make the transition as quickly as possible, it would be necessary to have the banks automatically exchange them for real dollars whenever they are deposited. In short order, they would become collectors' items and historical curiosities.

15. Reduce the size and scope of government. No solution to our economic problems is possible under socialism. It is the author's view that the government should be limited to the protection of life, liberty, and property—nothing more. That means the elimination of almost all of the socialist-oriented programs that now infest the federal bureaucracy. If we hope to retain—or perhaps to regain—our freedom, they simply have to go. To that end, the federal government should sell all assets not directly related to its primary function of protection; it should privately sub-contract as many of its services as possible; and it should greatly reduce and simplify its taxes.
16. Restore national independence. A similar restraint must be applied at the international level. We must reverse all programs leading to disarmament and economic interdependence. The most significant step in that direction will be to Get us out of the UN and the UN out of the US, but that will be just the beginning. There are hundreds of treaties and administrative agreements that must be rescinded. There may be a few that are constructive and mutually beneficial to us and other nations, but the great majority of them will have to go. That is not because we are isolationist. It is simply because we want to avoid being engulfed in global tyranny.

Some will say that paying off the national debt with Federal Reserve Notes amounts to a repudiation of the debt. Not so. Accepting the old Notes for payment of taxes is not repudiation. Exchanging them for their appropriate share of the nation's gold or silver is not repudiation. Converting them straight across to a sound money with little or no loss of purchasing power is not repudiation. The only thing that would be repudiated is the old monetary system, but that was designed to be repudiated. The monetary and political scientists who created and sustained the Federal Reserve System never intended to repay the national debt. It has been their ticket to profit and power. Inflation is repudiation on the installment plan. The present system is a political trick, an accounting gimmick. We are merely acknowledging what it is. We are simply refusing to pretend we don't understand what they are doing to us. We are refusing to play the game any longer.

MEASURING THE SIZE OF THE HANGOVER

So those are the sixteen steps, but what are their effects? It should come as no surprise that there is a price to pay for a return to monetary sobriety. A hangover cannot be avoided, except by continuing the binge, which is the road to death. Let's take a look at what this binge has already cost us. We will measure that by calculating how much each Federal Reserve Note will be worth when the new money appears.

The following figures are presented for illustrative purposes only. The data are drawn from public sources and from the Federal Reserve itself, but there is no way to know how accurate they really are. In addition to the question of accuracy, there are some statistical items which are so obscure that not even the experts at the Fed are certain what they mean. When the time comes to apply this program, it will be necessary to assemble a task force of experts who can audit the books and assay the metals. Nevertheless, based on the best information available to the public, this is what we get:

The total quantity of silver held by the government on September 30, 1993, was 30,200,000 troy ounces. If we assume the new dollar will be defined as 371.25 grains of silver (which equals .77344 troy ounces), then that supply is valued at $39,046,338.[1]

The price of gold on that date was 384.95 Federal-Reserve notes per ounce. Silver was 4.99 fiat dollars per ounce. The ratio between them, therefore, was 77-to-1.

The supply of gold was 261,900,000 ounces. The value of the gold supply, therefore, (at 77 times its weight in ounces) was $26,073,517,000.

The value of silver and gold combined would be $26,112,563,338.

[1] Although the weight of the silver-dollar is 412.5 grains (.8594 troy ounces), it is only 90% pure. Its silver content, however, is exactly 371.25 grains (.77344 troy ounces).

The number of Federal-Reserve notes this supply would have to redeem would be the combined total of the Ml money supply (currency and demand deposits) plus the additional number of notes needed to pay off the national debt. Ml on September 27, 1993, was 1,103,700,000,000 FRNs.[1] The national debt stood at 4,395,700,000,000 FRNs. The total amount to be redeemed, therefore, would be 5,499,400,000,000 FRNs.

The bottom line of this calculation is that the value of each Federal-Reserve note will be equal to .0047 silver dollar. One silver dollar would be worth 213 Federal-Reserve notes!

BAD, BUT NOT THAT BAD

That will be a bitter pill to swallow, but it sounds worse than it really is. Remember that the new dollars will have more purchasing power than the old. Coins will play a larger role in everyday transactions. The nickel phone call and the ten-cent cigar will have returned. In the beginning at least, the price of these items probably will be less than that. As explained in chapter seven, any quantity of gold or silver will work as the foundation for a monetary system. If the quantity is low—as certainly will be the case at the time of transition—it merely means the value of each unit of measure will be high. In that case, coins will solve the problem. Pennies would be used for a cup of coffee; one mill (a tenth of a cent) would pay for a phone call, and so on. New, small-denomination tokens would fill that need. In a relatively short period of time, however, the monetary supply of gold and silver would increase in response to free-market demand. When the supply increases, the relative value will decrease until a natural equilibrium is reached—as always has happened in the past. At that point, the tokens will no longer be needed and can be phased out.

An inconvenience? Yes. Vending machines will have to be retrofitted for the new coins, but that would be no more difficult than retrofitting them to take paper bills or plastic debit cards, which is what will be required if we do not adopt these measures. It is a small price to pay for an orderly return to real money.

,1. For those who feel that M2 or M3 would be a more logical figure, see "Is Ml Subtractive or Accumulative? " in the Appendix, containing the author's notes and correspondence with the Federal Reserve.

Another possible solution would be to redefine the new dollar to contain a smaller quantity of silver. The advantage would be that we could continue to use our present coinage. On the negative side, however, is the fact that it would create headaches after the transition, because coinage then would be too cheap. Instead of changing over now, we would merely be postponing the task for later. Now is the time to do it—and do it right. The original value of a silver dollar was determined after centuries of trial and error. We don't have to reinvent the wheel. We know that it will work in the long run.

In the past, the banks have enjoyed a bountiful cash flow from interest on money created out of nothing. That will change. They will have to make a clear distinction between demand deposits and time deposits. Customers will be informed that, if they want the privilege of receiving their money back on demand, their deposit of coins or Treasury Certificates will be kept in the vault and not loaned to others. Therefore, it will not earn interest for the bank. If the bank cannot make money on the deposit, then it must charge the depositor a fee for safeguarding his money and for checking services. If the customer wants to earn interest on his deposit, then he will be informed that it will be invested or loaned out, in which case he cannot expect to get it back any time he wants. He will knowingly put his money into a time deposit with the agreement that a specified amount of time must pass before the investment matures.

The effect of this practice on banking will be enormous. Banks will have to pay higher interest rates to attract investment capital. They will have to trim their overhead expenses and eliminate some of the plush. Profit margins will be tightened. Efficiency will improve. They used to offer "free" services which actually were paid out of interest earned on their customers' demand deposits. Now they will charge for those services, such as checking and safe storage of deposits. Customers probably will grumble at first at having to pay for those things, and there will be no more free toasters.

Electronic transfer systems will probably become popular for their convenience, but they will be optional. Cash and check transactions will continue to play an important role. Government monitoring will be illegal. Although there will be fewer dollars in circulation than there were Federal Reserve Notes, the value of each one will be correspondingly greater. Each person will end up with the same purchasing power he had before the conversion. For a short period, both the old and the new money will circulate together, and some people will have difficulty making the necessary calculations to determine their relative values. But that is a routine operation for people who live in Europe or for anyone who travels to a foreign country. There is no reason to think that Americans are too stupid to handle it.

SOME BAD NEWS AND SOME GOOD

We should not delude ourselves into thinking that this will be an easy transition. It will be a very difficult period, and people will have to get used to a whole new way of thinking and doing. The freeze on the current money supply may trigger panic in the stock market and the business community. Stock prices could tumble, causing paper fortunes to disappear back into the computers from which they came. Some businesses may fold for a lack of easy credit. Weak banks will be allowed to close rather than be bailed out with taxes. Unemployment may worsen for a while. Those who have been used to a free ride will now have to walk or push or pay their way. The masses on welfare will not give up their checks and food stamps quietly. The media will fan the flames of discontent. The Cabal will be at every switch to derail the train.

This will be the moment of our greatest danger, the moment when the people could tire of their hard journey in the desert and lose interest in the promised land. This is the time when they may long for a return to captivity and head back to the slave pits of Pharaoh.

The important point, however, is that most of these problems would be temporary. They would be present only during the period of transition to a new money. As soon as free coinage is available at the Mint, and as soon as people see how much demand there is for silver and gold coins, there will be a steady stream of miners and jewelers who will add great new stores of precious metal to the nation's monetary stock. Foreigners undoubtedly will add to the inflow. Old silver and gold coins will also reappear in the market place. Very quickly, as the stores of precious metal respond to supply and demand, the quantity of money will increase and its per-unit value will drop to its natural equilibrium.

Won't that be inflation? Yes it will, but it will be significantly different from inflation by fiat money on four counts: (1) instead of being caused by politicians and bankers attempting to manipulate the economy to enhance their personal agendas, it will be caused by natural economic forces seeking an equilibrium of supply and demand; (2) instead of being harmful to the nation, leading to the destruction of the economy, it will be part of a healing process, leading to prosperity; (3) it will be less severe than what we will experience if we do not make the transition; and (4), instead of being part of a continuum that is designed to go on forever, it will have a built-in termination point: the point of natural equilibrium where the human effort to mine gold and silver equals the effort to create those things which gold and silver can buy. When that point is reached, the money supply will cease to expand, and inflation will stop—once and for all. The hangover will be gone. From that point forward, prices will begin a gradual descent as advances in technology allow improved efficiency in production. With the arrival of lower prices, better job opportunities, and increasing prosperity, the voices of discontent will gradually fade. After the storm is over, America will have an honest money supply, a government with no national debt, and an economy without inflation.

No matter what scenario unfolds in the future, there is white water ahead. We had better tighten our straps and prepare for the rapids. We owe it to ourselves and our families to take measures which will increase our chances of coming out at the other side. If the pessimistic scenario is played out, it will make little difference what we do, because there will be no other side. But in the realistic scenario, there are certain precautions that will make a big difference in our economic well being.

To fully appreciate the wisdom of some of these measures, it is well for us to pause and consider the possibility that a transition to economic safety and sanity will not be orderly. Another variant of the realistic scenario is that our entire system could collapse, including the international structure being assembled at the UN- If that should happen, we won't have to worry about an orderly transition to a sound monetary system, because it won't happen. Our primary concern will be basic survival.

Economic chaos and civil disorder would not necessarily have to be the prelude to world government. If a sufficient number of people were well enough informed to know in advance what the enemy's game plan is, and especially if they were in the right places within the system, they might be able to provide leadership at the critical moment. If there is blood in the streets and long periods of anarchy, it is theoretically possible that groups of enlightened individuals who have prepared in advance could move into the power vacuum and take charge. That may sound like another pessimistic scenario, but it is not. In the final analysis, it may be the most realistic one of all. But we should not hope for it. All we can do is prepare for it should it come to pass.

HOW TO PREPARE

What can we do to prepare financially? To avoid making this a lengthy dissertation, let's use the outline form. Elaboration should not be necessary.

1. Get out of debt. A mortgage on one's home is a logical exception, provided the price is right. Borrowing for one's business is also an exception if based on a sound business plan. Speculative investments are not a good idea in these times unless they are made with money you can afford to lose.
2. Pick a sound bank. Maintain accounts at several institutions. Do not keep over $100,000 in any one bank. Remember that not all types of accounts are covered by FDIC. Some institutions now offer private insurance. Make sure you know to what extent you are at risk.[1]
3. Diversify your investments among blue ribbon, over-the-counter, growth, income, large, small, mutuals, bonds, real estate, bullion coins, mining stock, and tangibles. Industries that do well in hard times are gambling, alcohol, and escapist entertainment. Study the fields and companies in which you invest. Personal knowledge is indispensable.
4. Avoid the most recent "best" performers. Their great track records are historical. They have no bearing on future performance. To the contrary, they may now be overpriced and poised for a fall. See how an investment fared over the long run—at least fifteen years—and particularly how it performed during periods of economic downturn.

5. When investing in coins, avoid those with high numismatic value—unless you are prepared to become an expert. As with other types of investments, seek advice but don't depend on it. The same is true for diamonds, art pieces, and other collectibles. Stay with what you know. Otherwise, you will be vulnerable in shark-infested waters where even the most experienced traders can lose money.
6. Maintain a stash of cash, including some old silver coins. The currency should be enough to provide your family with necessities for about two months. The coins are for more severe and prolonged conditions. There is no "correct" quantity. It is a matter of personal judgment and financial ability.

PROFITING FROM DISASTER

All of this is aimed at surviving the storm and preparing ourselves to offer leadership in troubled times ahead. That is a rather negative view. There is a more positive outlook for those who are looking for good news, as Adlai Stevenson said. It is the exciting prospect that we can turn this calamity to our advantage. We can actually profit from the coming collapse. That thought has spawned hundreds of books and newsletters offering advice on how to get rich while others are being destroyed. There is even one that gives advice on how to cash in on the environmental-industry boom. The pitch is how to make a fortune on the downfall of America.

There is no doubt that opportunities exist to profit from investment decisions based on a realistic appraisal of current trends. Most of those opportunities, however, depend on making market-timing decisions. One must know precisely when to buy, when to sell, and at what price. To know all that, the investor must become expert on the nature of the industries involved and must monitor the daily shifts in market forces. He must attempt to complete his analysis and reach his conclusions in advance of the crowd. And, of course, he must be right. Most investors are not prepared to do that, so they must depend on the services of professionals, usually the same experts who are encouraging them to invest in these kinds of enterprises. If the investment is profitable, the analyst receives an income. If the investment turns sour, the analyst still receives an income.

That relationship is not unique to the "profit-from-crash" group, however. It is to be found at every level of the investment business as well as within the legal and medical professions. The customer pays for the advice regardless of its quality. What is disturbing about this investment concept is that it actually may help to make matters worse. By focusing on finding clever ways to avoid the effects of inflation or of making a profit from it, we are doing nothing to stop it and, thereby, encouraging its continuation. Those who are gaining from inflation are not likely to offer serious resistance to it. As they watch their profits pile up, they may become its most ardent supporters—even though they know deep in their hearts that it will destroy them in the end.

There is nothing wrong with trying to preserve one's capital on the way down, but the only real solution is to use one's capital to stop the present trends. In the long run, there is no way to profit from a destroyed America. There is no refuge from a collapse. There is no way to protect your assets, your home, your job, your family, your freedom. As Henry Hazlitt phrased it, "There is no safe hedge against inflation except to stop it."

AN EDUCATIONAL CRUSADE

The best investment one can make at this time is to finance an educational crusade. Americans have allowed their nation to be stolen from right under their noses because they did not understand what was happening. There is no hope for the future as long as that condition remains. The starting point for any realistic plan for survival and beyond is the awakening of America.

What does that entail? These are the tasks:

1. Become self-informed. That's not as easy as it sounds. It involves a major commitment of time and money for books, recordings, and seminars. Do it.
2. Become a pamphleteer. Develop a mailing list of friends who you think would be most receptive to learning more about these issues. Send them something every month that is informative and not too long to read. See the end of this chapter for information on how to obtain suitable publications.
3. Join forces with others of like mind. There is strength in numbers. Three people acting alone are a force of three. When working together, however, they multiply their efforts and equal a force of nine. That is the power of organization. When choosing an organization, look for experienced and principled leadership which has proven that it understands the deeper issues and cannot be sidetracked by the Cabal.

4. Form an educational study group. Give it an enticing name such as The Reality Club or The Awareness Lunch Bunch. Make the meetings interesting and short. Use local speakers, ask members to give book reviews, show videos, have mock debates, throw parties. The goal is to reach new people, not to preach to the choir.
5. Form ad-hoc committees, along with other like-minded friends, to promote specific projects and programs. Here are a few hypothetical examples covering a range of issues: The Committee for Sound Money, Parents for Better Education, Americans for Tax Relief, North-Bay Residents for Private Property. That is an excellent way to bring pressure to bear on the political structure and, at the same time, attract the support of new people who share your common objective.
6. Expand your influence within the community. People seldom follow strangers. Become known and respected for your knowledge. Join groups which are influential within your city or profession. Political groups are particularly important, regardless of party. Volunteer for work and seek a leadership role. Personally visit your city and county politicians and maintain ongoing communication. Send them books, articles, baseball tickets—anything to make sure they don't forget who you are. This is doubly important for political candidates. If you have the talent and the aptitude, consider running for some kind of public office yourself.
7. Use politics, don't be used by it We got into our present mess through politics and we must get out the same way; but getting out is a lot harder than getting in. The strategy, however, is simple: remove the big-spending internationalists from office and replace them with men and women dedicated to sound money and national independence. The way to remove the spenders is to expose their voting records to their constituents, most of whom have no idea how they vote on key issues. The way to get better candidates elected is to volunteer to work in their campaigns. Work within party organizations where > possible but beware! Never allow loyalty to the party to override loyalty to principle. Political parties are always controlled from the top, and the major parties are controlled by the very forces we must oppose. It is imperative that you and your candidate remain independent of party control. Otherwise, your money and your effort eventually will be used against you.[1]

With that warning aside, we should be encouraged by the fact that the task is not as overwhelming as it seems. The power to reverse the present trend rests in the hands of only 535 people. There are 435 Representatives and 100 Senators. To control a majority, all we have to do is influence the election of 268 people. In reality, if we began to come even close to that figure, we likely would see a wave of sudden political conversions among those who remain in office. It is possible that we could achieve our goal by influencing the election in only 100 Congressional districts! By using the political freedom that yet remains in our system, we can overthrow the government of the United States every two years without firing a shot! But we had better get going on it. Time is running out.

CONCLUSIONS AND SUMMARY

We have finally come to the end of this book. It was not a textbook on banking theory. It was a who-dunnit, and by now you know the answer.

We have covered a vast expanse of history and have wandered far afield from our main topic. It was necessary. Without the larger view, the case against the Federal Reserve System would have been weak. It would have omitted the elements of war, revolution, depression, and fraud. Without that long journey, we would be limited to a sterile discussion of interest rates, discount policies, and reserve ratios. That is not where the body is hidden.

In the foreword, it was stated that there were seven reasons to abolish the Federal Reserve System. It is time to repeat them here:

1. An excellent analysis of the voting records of all Congressmen and Senators is published each year by The New American magazine, P.O. Box 8040, Appleton, Wisconsin 54913. The same organization makes available bulk supplies of pamphlets tailored to each Congressional district for distribution to the public. The big spenders hate them!

- It is incapable of accomplishing its stated objectives.
- It is a cartel operating against the public interest.
- It is the supreme instrument of usury.
- It generates our most unfair tax.
- It encourages war.
- It destabilizes the economy.
- It is an instrument of totalitarianism.

The purpose of this book has been to demonstrate the accuracy of those assertions.

A plan for recovery was finally presented which involves sixteen steps, each based upon lessons which emerged from history. These lessons were mingled with a large amount of theory which is traceable only to the mind of the author himself. Which is to say there is no guarantee the plan will work. But it is a plan. It is better to fail trying than to do nothing. Like men on a sinking ship, we must risk the water. We cannot stay where we are.

There undoubtedly are technical flaws in these proposals, for the mechanism is merely a prototype. Someone surely will discover a gear that will not mesh or a lever that is disconnected. It will need the additional work of specialists in many diverse fields. Even then, the job will not be complete, for it must finally be handed over to those who are skilled in drafting legislation. Their task will be two-fold. First, they must make it workable in the real world of politics. Secondly, they must prevent loopholes and vagaries which could eventually subvert the plan.

But none of these considerations should deter us from beginning the process. We may not have answers to all the technical questions, but we do have an answer to the big question. We do know that the Federal Reserve System must be abolished. Let us, therefore, begin.

The Creature has grown large and powerful since its conception on Jekyll Island. It now roams across every continent and compels the masses to serve it, feed it, obey it, worship it. If it is not slain, it will become our eternal lord and master.

Can it be slain? Yes it can.

How will it be slain? By piercing it with a million lances of truth.

Who will slay it? A million crusaders with determination and courage.

The crusade has already begun.

(A.) STRUCTURE AND FUNCTION OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM

The three main components of the Fed are: (1) the national Board of Governors, (2) the regional Reserve Banks, and (3) the Federal Open Market Committee. Lesser components include: (4) the commercial banks which hold the stock, and (5) the advisory councils.

The function of the national Board of Governors is to determine the system's monetary policy. The Board consists of seven members who are appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. Their terms of office are fourteen years and are staggered so that they do not coincide with the presidential term of office. The purpose of this is to insure that no single President can dominate Fed policy by stacking the Board with his appointments. One Board member is appointed as the Chairman for four years and another as Vice Chairman for four years. The Chairman controls the staff and is the single most powerful influence within the system.

Control is exercised by the Board and a handful of top staff employees. The Federal Reserve Act mandated that the President, when selecting Governors "shall have due regard to a fair representation of the financial, agricultural, industrial and commercial interests, and geographical divisions of the country." This mandate is now almost completely ignored, and the men come primarily from the fields of banking and finance.

The function of the regional Reserve Banks is to hold cash reserves of the system, supply currency to member banks, clear checks, and act as fiscal agent for the government.

The twelve regional Reserve Banks are located in Atlanta, Boston, Chicago, Cleveland, Dallas, Kansas City, Minneapolis, New York, Philadelphia, Richmond, San Francisco, and St. Louis. They are corporations with stock held by the commercial banks which are members of the system. Member banks elect the directors of the regional Reserve Banks of which they are a part. The larger banks hold more shares but they have only one vote in the selection of the Directors.

Within each regional-bank system there are nine Directors. The member banks elect three Class-A directors who represent the banking industry and three Class-B directors who represent the general public. The remaining three Class-C directors are appointed by the national Board. The Chairman and Vice Chairman of each regional Reserve Bank must be Class-C directors. The selection of President and other officers is subject to veto by the national Board of Governors. In this way, the national Board is able to exercise control over the regional branches of the system.

The function of the Federal Open Market Committee is to implement the monetary policy set by national Board, although it exercises considerable autonomy in setting its own policy. It manipulates the money supply and interest rates primarily by purchasing or selling government securities—although it also accomplishes that through the purchase or sale of foreign currencies and the securities of other governments as well. Money is created and interest rates go down when it purchases. Money is extinguished and interest rates go up when it sells. Policy is formulated on a daily basis. In fact, it is monitored by the minute and the Committee often intervenes in the market to affect immediate changes.

The Open Market Committee is composed of the national Board of Governors plus five of the twelve regional Presidents who serve on a rotating basis. The exception to this is the President of the New York regional Bank who is always on the Committee. Thus, once again, the System is firmly in control of the national Board with the President of the New York regional Bank being more powerful than the others.

Twenty-four bond dealers handle all sales of government securities. Government agencies cannot exchange with each other without going through dealers who earn commissions on each transaction.

Decisions are made at secret meetings. A brief report is released to the public six weeks later, but transcripts of the deliberations are destroyed. That policy was begun in 1970 when the Freedom-of-Information Act was passed. Not even the CIA enjoys such secrecy.

The function of the member banks is to conduct the nation's banking business and to implement the System's monetary policy in terms of putting money into or drawing it out of the system at the point of contact with individual or corporate borrowers.

This leads to the troublesome question of ownership. The federal government does not own any stock in the System. In that sense, the Fed is privately owned. That, however, is misleading in that it implies a typical private-ownership relationship in which the stockholders own and control. Nothing could be further from the truth. In this case, the stock carries no proprietary interest, cannot be sold or pledged as collateral, and does not carry ordinary voting rights. Each bank is entitled to but one vote regardless of the amount of stock it holds. In reality, the stock is not evidence of "ownership" but simply certificates showing how much operating capital each bank has put into the System. It is not a government agency and it is not a private corporation in the normal sense of the word. It is subject to political control yet, because of its tremendous power over politicians and the elective process, it has managed to remain independent of political oversight. Simply stated, it is a cartel, and its organizational structure is uniquely structured to serve that end.

(B.) NATURAL LAWS OF HUMAN BEHAVIOR IN ECONOMICS

NATURAL LAW NO. 1

LESSON: When gold (or silver) is used as money and when the forces of supply and demand are not thwarted by government intervention, the amount of new metal added to the money supply will always be closely proportional to the expanding services and goods which can be purchased with it. Long-term stability of prices is the dependable result of these forces. This process is automatic and impartial. Any attempt by politicians to intervene will destroy the benefit for all. Therefore,

LAW: Long-term price stability is possible only when the money supply is based upon the gold (or silver) supply without government interference.

NATURAL LAW NO. 2

LESSON: Whenever government sets out to manipulate the money supply, regardless of the intelligence or good intentions of those who attempt to direct the process, the result is inflation, economic chaos, and political upheaval. By contrast, whenever government is limited in its monetary power to only the maintenance of honest weights and measures of precious metals, the result is price stability, economic prosperity, and political tranquility. Therefore,

LAW: For a nation to enjoy economic prosperity and political tranquility, the monetary power of its politicians must be limited solely to the maintenance of honest weights and measures of precious metals.

NATURAL LAW NO. 3

LESSON: Fiat money is paper money without precious-metal backing and which people are required by law to accept. It allows politicians to increase spending without raising taxes. Fiat money is the cause of inflation, and the amount which people lose in purchasing power is exactly the amount which was taken from them and transferred to their government by this process. Inflation, therefore, is a hidden tax. This tax is the most unfair of all because it falls most heavily on those who are least able to pay: the small wage earner and those on fixed incomes. It also punishes the thrifty by eroding the value of their savings. This creates resentment among the people, leading always to political unrest and national disunity. Therefore,

LAW: A nation that resorts to the use of fiat money has doomed itself to economic hardship and political disunity.

NATURAL LAW NO. 4

LESSON: Fractional money is paper money which is backed by precious metals up to only a portion of the face amount. It is a hybrid, being part receipt money and part fiat money. Generally, the public is unaware of this fact and believes that fractional money can be redeemed in full at any time. When the truth is discovered, as periodically happens, there are runs on the bank, and only the first few depositors in line can be paid. Since fractional money earns just as much interest for the bankers as does gold or silver, the temptation is great for them to create as much of it as possible. As this happens, the fraction which represents the reserve becomes smaller and smaller until, eventually, it is reduced to zero. Therefore,

LAW: Fractional money will always degenerate into fiat money. It is but fiat money in transition.

NATURAL LAW NO. 5

LESSON: It is human nature for man to place personal priorities ahead of all others. Even the best of men cannot long resist the temptation to benefit at the expense of their neighbors if the occasion is placed squarely before them. This is especially true when the means by which they benefit is obscure and not likely to be perceived as such. There may be exceptional men from time to time who can resist that temptation, but their numbers are small. The general rule will prevail in the long run.

A managed economy presents men with precisely that kind of opportunity. The power to create and extinguish the nation's money supply provides unlimited potential for personal gain. Throughout history the granting of that power has been justified as being necessary to protect the public, but the results have always been the opposite. It has been used against the public and for the personal gain of those who control. Therefore,

LAW: When men are entrusted with the power to control the money supply, they will eventually use that power to confiscate the wealth of their neighbors.

(C.) IS M-l SUBTRACTIVE OR ACCUMULATIVE?

Below is a copy of the author's letter to Mike Dubrow at the Public Information department of the Federal Reserve System. In a telephone conversation on February 14,1994, Mr. Dubrow said that the assumption stated in the letter would be correct if it were not for the fact that the system is under the control of a central bank. The Federal Reserve, he said, would not allow that to happen, because it would be inflationary. The Fed would reduce the money supply to offset the effect of monetary expansion as dollars moved from M-l to M-2 and back to M-l again. In other words, the assumption is correct, but the Fed has the power to offset it—if it wants to. The bottom line is that M-l is accumulative. As such, it is the most meaningful measure of the money supply.

Dear Mr.Dubrow,

As we discussed duringourphone conversation this morning, I am preparing a paper on the Federal Reserve System, and an interesting question has arisen. Itisso fundamental that almost everyone with whom I have spoken thought they knew the answer but, uponanalysis, have concluded they were not so sure after all.

IS Ml SUBTRACTIVE OR ACCUMULATIVE?

It is my understanding that there are three optional definitions ofthemoneysupply:

Ml = currency + short-term deposits.

M2 = Ml + short-term time deposits.

M3 = M2 + institutional long-term deposits.

It is clear that, when money is paid out of a checking accountandputintoasavingsaccount,itincreasesM2, but the question is: Does it remain as part of Ml or is it subtracted from it? Herbert Mayo, in his book Investments (Chicago: Dryden Press, 1983), says "If individuals shift funds from savings accounts to checking accounts, the money supply is increased under the narrow definition (M-l) but is unaffected if the broader definition (M-2) is employed." This implies that, when money is moved from a checking account to a savings account, it is subtracted from Ml. Otherwise, it would not increase Ml when it is moved back again from savings to checking. When we spoke on the phone, you confirmed that his interpretation is correct.

But how can that be? The money moved from checking to savings or any other investment does not disappear into a vault. It is spent in fulfillment of the investment project. It is given to a vendor or a contractor or an employee and reappears in their checking accounts where it becomes part of M1 once again. It would seem, therefore, that it doesn't really leave M1 at all. It merely increases M2.

I have hypothesized one possible explanation. It is that the money does, in fact, disappear into a vault, or at least into a bookkeeping ledger, for a short period of time. That would be the time between its deposit into the savings account and its subsequent transfer to the checking accounts of borrowers. The time period might be short—perhaps less than thirty days on the average—but it still needs to be considered when calculating the money aggregates. Therefore, Ml is reduced when money is transferred from checking to savings, but that is only a temporary effect. Ml will be increased once again just as soon as the new M2 money is redirected to borrowers. Is that a correct explanation?

Thank you for your help with these puzzling items.

Sincerely,

G. Edward Griffin

ABOUT THE COVER

The use of the Great Seal of the United States is not without significance. At first we contemplated having an artist change the eagle into a vulture. That, we thought, would attract attention and also make a statement. Upon reflection, however, we realized that the vulture is really harmless. It may be ugly, but it is a scavenger, not a killer. The eagle, on the other hand, is a predator. It is a regal creature to behold, but it is deadly to its prey. Furthermore, as portrayed on the dollar, it is protected by the shield of the United States government even though it is independent of it. Finally, it holds within its grasp the choice between peace or war. The parallels were too great to ignore. We decided to keep the eagle.

The photos and alleged aliases of the SS Nazis discussed in this book were obtained directly from personal interviews with the C.I.A.'s SS Nazi commando employee: Otto Skorzeny. Skorzeny is pissed-off at George Herbert Walker Bush, the U.S. New World Order Government and his C.I.A. SS Nazi comrades for continually screwing him out of large sums of money throughout the years. Skorzeny does not care anymore about his C.I.A. Oath of Secrecy. He is close to death and wants the truth to be told about his life working for Hitler, Prescott & George H.W. Bush. He also wants the world to know that on January 6, 1943, he, along with SS Nazi Reinhardt Gehlen murdered the world's greatest inventor, Dr. Nikola Tesla, stole his best & most secret inventions & then took them back to Germany and gave them directly to Adolf Hitler.

The C.I.A. is still protecting its' beloved SS Nazis. Why? The C.I.A. is really the name of Hitler's Third Reich in America. Germany never surrendered to the U.S. after WWII & the Nazis have been illegally in power in America ever since trying to create a Fourth Reich or New World Order. The U.S. Government knows that these Nazis are still alive but they refuse to do anything about it for liability reasons. They have been working slowly to create a New World Order in America since the end of WWII.

Introduction

My “pseudonym” is “ORION”, I’m Jewish & I hate Nazis! As far as I‘m concerned, the only “good” Nazi is a “dead” Nazi! Due to a strange twist of fate or a “Tesla Transmitter” in 1997 I became friends with the former SS Nazi commando and life-long C.I.A. employee, Otto Skorzeny. He had the largest hand I had ever shaken. His hands’ were huge! When I met him, he was 90 years old but due to his history of C.I.A. given facelifts at the expense of U.S. Tax-Payers, he looked about 80 years old. He was still very tall and imposing.

He was at least 6’4” tall and thinly built. His eyes were blue-green, however they looked dark black, with a strong, fanatical-type stare. I feel sorry for anyone who had a “disagreement” with Skorzeny when he was in his “prime”. You would not want to have met up with Skorzeny in a dark alley for any reason! After “awhile”, Otto Skorzeny told me about his career working for Hitler, Prescott Bush, the C.I.A. and the illegal secret agreement that he, Hitler, Frank Wisner, Prescott & George H. W. Bush made to bring Nazi-Germany to American and create a Fourth Reich or New World Order. He also told me about Hitler’s fascination with the great inventor, Dr. Nikola Tesla and with the famous cartoonist Max Fleischer who created the Superman □, Popeye □ and Betty Boop □ cartoons. Skorzeny no longer cares about his C.I.A. “Oath of Secrecy” and wants the world to know that on January 6, 1943, he along with SS Nazi Reinhardt Gehlen murdered the greatest inventor who ever lived, Dr. Nikola Tesla! The Nazis really won WWII & have been illegally in power in the United States of America ever since!

This book took more than five years of painstaking research to complete. It was written to help prove that the American C.I.A., O.S.I., F.B.I., U.S. Navy, & U.S. Air Force have been lying to the American people and the world since April 8,1945 about the identities and whereabouts of Nazis living in American today. Germany never actually surrendered at the end of WWII! George H.W. Bush pulled the all-time “fast one” on the American Public and the rest of the free world. He with the help from thousands of rich WASP, Republican Nazi-sympathizers in the “U.S. Government” illegally brought 50,000+ murdering Nazi scumbags to American, not just rocket scientists, gave them “fake” American identities and jobs meant for American Citizens. These same Nazis are not required to pay taxes!

This book is dedicated to the memory of the more than 6 million Jews and the millions of others who were killed during the Holocaust at the hands of murdering, Nazi scumbags. This book is also dedicated to the “The greatest inventor who ever lived,” Dr. Nikola Tesla. Without his magnificent inventions, modern man would cease to exist. Above all else, this book is dedicated to trying to stop Bush Jr., Trump and his C.I.A. New World Order SS Nazi, Republican “cronies” from creating a “Fourth Reich” in America. It has already begun! America must not become The United States of Germany! “During WWII, not one allied bomb was ever dropped on any Nazi concentration camp to try to liberate the Jews. It was deemed not cost effective.”[3]

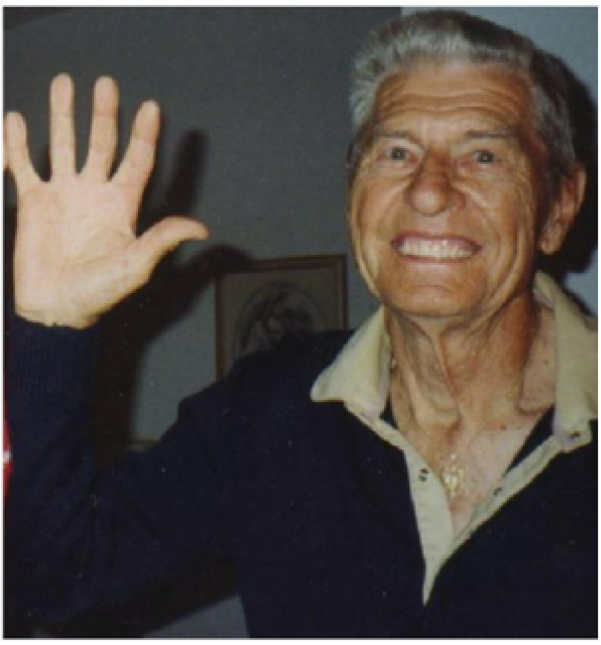
Otto Skorzeny - Hitler & C.I.A.'s Most Beloved Commando



SS Nazi "Giant" 6'4" Otto Skorzeny & Hitler 1945

6'4" C.I.A. Commando "Retired" Otto Skorzeny aka: "Big Ed

Boynton Beach, Florida 1999

SS Nazi Otto Skorzeny was a giant of a man. He stood 6'4" tall and was very intelligent. He spoke at least six different languages. His hair was black & his eyes were blue-green with a fanatical-type stare. He was a true "Soldier of Fortune." During the Nuremburg Trials of 1945, Otto Skorzeny was acquitted of any Nazi war crimes. There was no evidence to suggest that he had committed any crimes. He was then officially hired by the O.S.S., given a facelift and a new American identity as Edward Frank P_ _ _ _ _. He was given the code-name "Feather" by the C.I.A. because of the way he rescued Mussolini from captivity by flying in on silent gliders. He was the C.I.A.'s enforcer & personally took part in clandestine U.S. Government operations worldwide. Unlike his Nazi comrades who were Holocaust killers, Skorzeny was a man of honor. Skorzeny liked the Western States. Retired commando Otto Skorzeny resides in Big Fork Montana.

"The secret to wealth, fame & fortune is to know something that no one else knows..."[4]

Skorzeny claimed that during WWII there were several "doubles" of himself, enabling him to travel to America to spy. The "real" Otto Skorzeny was tall & thinly built. The last living Skorzeny "double" is three inches shorter and much "bulkier" than the "real" Skorzeny. The Skorzeny double is still alive today and lives in Indiana. According to Skorzeny, Adolf Hitler held the highest secret clearance the "American" C.I.A. has. Next in line was Otto Skorzeny, George Bush, Reinhardt Gehlen, Frank Wisner, Josef Mengele, August Hirt, and all other C.I.A. Nazi employees. In 1976, the C.I.A. helped Skorzeny fake his own death, as they did with all of their SS Nazis'. With the C.I.A.'s direct help he created The Brotherhood of Aryan Nations "organized crime" hate group. He also had help from his New World Order, C.I.A. comrades like Hitler, George H.W. Bush, Mengele, Wisner, Gehlen, Hirt, et al..

Skorzeny, George H.W. Bush, Mengele, Wisner, Brunner, Rauff & Reinhardt Gehlen are allegedly the "brains" and "leaders" behind this infamous hate group. The entire U.S. Government including the C.I.A. have always known about the identities of its' SS Nazi sponsored Brotherhood of Aryan Nations organized crime hate group members. When a terror related attack happened in the U.S., like a Jewish synagogue being fire bombed or painted with swastikas, the U.S. Government has always "looked the other way", as would any other Nazi sympathizer. It would then deliberately re-direct its' investigation in an opposite direction. The U.S. Government knows that C.I.A. Assassin Dr. Mengele sent the anthrax in 2001, because they are the ones who ordered him to do it. The U.S. Government refuses to do anything about it for "liability reasons."[5]

SS Nazi - Sturmbannführer Otto Skorzeny was the most colorful and the most famous Waffen SS commander during WWII. His daring rescue of Mussolini from Gran Sasso made him world famous and his subsequent missions during the Ardennes Offensive and in Hungary during Operation Panzerfaust gave him the title among the Allies of "The Most Dangerous Man in Europe" His extraordinary wartime career was one of high risk and adventure. Otto Skorzeny was "supposedly" born on June 12th, 1908 to a typical middle class Viennese family. He attended the University of Vienna to study engineering. While he attended school he was a member of the fencing club. He earned an "honor scar" or schmisse on his left cheek and was later known as "Scar Face." He joined the Nazi Party in the twenties and signed up with the SS. During WWII he proved himself to be a superior soldier and was quickly promoted from enlistee to noncommissioned officer, and finally to officer. Skorzeny participated in the invasion of Holland and France, the invasion of the Balkans, and finally in the invasion of Russia, where he was wounded in late 1941 and returned home to convalesce.

Otto Skorzeny proved his worth - in 1942 he was awarded the Iron Cross, and in April 1943 he was promoted to captain and named ‘Chief of Germany's Special Troops, Existing or to be Created in the Future’. When Hitler's old friend Benito Mussolini was overthrown and imprisoned in Italy at Gran Sasso in 1943, it was Skorzeny who successfully planned and led the daring rescue, winning the Knight’s Cross and promotion as a result. Adolf Hitler intended to put Mussolini back on the seat of a puppet government in the part of Italy occupied by the Germans and he personally ordered Otto Skorzeny to rescue Mussolini. Skorzeny tracked Mussolini across half of Italy for a month and a half until he finally found him at the Hotel Campo, a resort high in the Gran Sasso Mountains. September 8, the Germans intercepted a coded message by the Italians confirming the presence of Mussolini on the Gran Sasso. Skorzeny formulated a daring plan and went right into action. He took a contingent of his troops up in gliders and crashed them on the steep rocky slopes surrounding the hotel. He and his troops rushed out and stormed the hotel, capturing the place without a shot. After finding the room where Mussolini was held prisoner, Skorzeny entered, knocked down the chair of the radio operator, destroyed the transmitting equipment and standing to attention he exclaimed: Duce, the Fuhrer has sent me to set you free! Mussolini was promptly loaded onto a “special”, Fieseler STORCH aircraft that landed after the assault and flown to Vienna. On the arrival at the Hotel Continental, where a suite had been prepared, they received a hero's welcome and Hitler telephoned to congratulate him.

Skorzeny's talents were brought into play again when he was sent to Budapest to prevent the Hungarian regent Admiral Horthy from signing a separate peace with Stalin in 1944. His reputation thus enhanced, 'the most dangerous man in Europe' was promoted again and awarded the German Cross in Gold. A few months later he took a critical role in the Ardennes offensive, with a controversial plan to raise an armored brigade disguised as Americans, using captured Sherman tanks, to spread chaos and confusion. Ten days after the war's end Skorzeny gave himself up to the Americans who had launched a massive search for 'The Most Dangerous Man in Europe'. He was put on trial held prisoner until July 27th 1948. It was on this day that in true commando fashion he escaped. His whereabouts after his escape remained a mystery as Russian agents, Jewish organizations hunted for him all over Europe but the ex-commando was not in Europe. In fact he had fled to Argentina and became close to Juan and Eva Peron who was interested in recovering all the German gold and money from the days of the Reich. Otto Skorzeny organized the Police into the most brutal in South America and also acted as Eva Peron`s bodyguard foiling at least one attempt on her life.

His post-war activities included his service as an adviser to Gamal Nasser, dictator in Egypt. Skorzeny eventually settled in Spain and became a successful engineering consultant for several years. His later years were all spent on helping his SS comrades to escape justice. He founded a secret organization called the "Odessa" which helped former SS Nazi members escape the hunt for Nazi war criminals. Some of the better known people the organization is said to have helped is Adolf Hitler, Josef Mengele, Frank Wisner, Alois Brunner, Walter Rauff, Reinhardt Gehlen, Adolf Eichmann, & August Hirt. When the O.S.S. "officially" hired him in at the end of 1945, he was given the codename "Feather" because of the way he silently flew in on gliders to rescue Mussolini. [6] According to history books, Otto Skorzeny - 'The Most Dangerous Man in Europe' "supposedly" died comfortably in Madrid July, 1975 - in his bed. [7]

Despite what the C.I.A./SS Nazi written, censored, history books say, Hitler did not commit suicide! As the Russian tanks were overtaking Berlin, a very "poor-quality" Hitler "look-a-like", with fake, "bushy" eyebrows was shot in the head by Otto Skorzeny, to make it appear as if he committed suicide.[9] Hitler's personal "female" SS Nazi pilot; Hanna Reitsch flew a Fieseler-156c
"STORCH" disguised as a "Red Cross" relief plane to "Der Führer" bunker.

Reitsch picked up Hitler & Skorzeny and flew them away. All three landed safely in Salzburg, Austria a short time later! Once Hitler was safely hidden away by the Vatican, Skorzeny turned himself in to the Americans', as planned. He instantly became the "founding father" of the American O.S.S. and later the C.I.A. Hitler's plan to create a Fourth Reich in America & ultimately rule the world was right on schedule with "his" fearless, giant, SS Nazi Commando: Otto Skorzeny leading the way!

Due to a “forged” surrender agreement with the United States of America, at the end of WWII, 50,000+ murdering Nazi scumbags were illegally brought to America, “not just a few Nazi rocket scientists”, with Frank Wisner & Prescott & George H.W. Bush’s direct help and guidance. These Nazis were then hired by the American (O.S.S.) the Office of Strategic Services, now known as the C.I.A. For some unknown reason, American scientists at the time, were not capable of building a rocket for space travel nor to land a man on the moon? As a result of these “dumb” American scientists, SS Nazi war criminals posing as scientists had to be illegally smuggled into America to help us defeat the Russians? Huh?

The high ranking SS Nazis were given extra special treatment from the U.S. Government after WWII. They were given false American identities, in most cases, face lifts, they were given high paying American jobs working on our government’s rocket program and other high tech Top Secret warfare related programs. The evilest SS Nazi doctors like Josef Mengele & August Hirt were immediately hired by the C.I.A. and were U.S. Government paid consultants to the largest medical companies in the world. Companies like W.R. Grace Co., Bayer, Merck and American Home Products. These SS Nazi doctors were hired by the pharmaceutical companies to take advantage of their test results for all of their years of sick, sadistic, unnecessary, medical experiments conducted on millions of tortured and then killed, Holocaust Jews. Dr. Josef Mengele is an employee of the Republican, neo-con controlled W.R. Grace Company.

George H.W. Bush: Hitler & C.I.A.'s Most Beloved Coward

Skorzeny alleges that George Herbert Walker Bush was an SS Nazi spy, as was he. "Allegedly", George H.W. Bush was born in Austria as George H. Scherff Jr., the son of Dr. Nikola Tesla's German born, illegal immigrant, accountant George H. Scherff Sr. George Sr. had been robbing Tesla blind for years & giving Tesla's secret inventions directly to Adolph Hitler. In 1938, Hitler sent 14 year old George H. Scherff Jr. to America to try to befriend, spy on, & kill the Great Inventor, Dr. Nikola Tesla! George later forged a birth certificate evidencing he was older. He falsely claimed that his last name was Bush, the son of Prescott & joined the U.S. Navy. Skorzeny claims that he did not fly 58 combat missions for the U.S. Navy as claimed. He also claims that George H.W. Bush deliberately sabotaged his Grumman TBF Avenger. He radioed his position to his Nazi-comrades waiting in a German Submarine below, shot his instrument panel full of holes, and then he put the plane into a steep nosedive, & parachuted to safety. His tail-gunner Lt. Junior Grade William White and Radioman Second Class John Delaney were not able to get out of the plane and parachute to safety because of the tremendous g-forces. The radioman & tail gunner were both killed while George Herbert Walker Bush survived. The "sunken" Grumman Avenger Torpedo Bomber was then towed out to sea by the German U-Boat to a large cargo ship waiting close by. The cargo ship had a giant crane on board that was used to lift the "fully-intact", Avenger onto the ship. The cargo ship then sailed undisturbed back to Germany. That's how Nazi-Germany was able to "steal" America's advanced Top Secret, "rotating 50 caliber machine-gun turret", TBF Avenger Bomber technology. George H.W. Bush you deserve to be tried & convicted as a Nazi war criminal just like Prescott was!

“Real” American WWII Hero Pilot – “Chester Mierzejewski’s” Comments’ on George H.W. Bush...

Chester Mierzejewski, an old war buddy of Bush, who said he was angered by the "false assertions" made by candidate Bush when describing the incident, gave a different account. After 44 years of silence, Mierzejewski, who also was awarded the Distinguished Flying Cross, told the New York Post that Bush had abandoned his crew to death when there was another choice. He said he was approximately 100 feet in front of Bush's plane as the turret gunner for Squadron Commander Douglas Melvin's plane, "so close he could see in the cockpit" of Bush's bomber. Mierzejewski's close wartime buddy was one of the two crew members in Bush's plane. According to Mierzejewski, the squadron was in a tight formation bombing raid against a Japanese radio installation on an island reported to be heavily fortified. He saw "a puff of smoke" come from Bush's plane which quickly disappeared and was certain only one man parachuted from the plane and that it was Bush, the pilot. Mierzejewski said the Avenger torpedo bomber was engineered so that it could successfully crash land on water and that Bush doomed his own crew by bailing out and leaving the bomber out of control. Other World War II veterans also expressed concern about Bush parachuting out of the aircraft. "He had a moral obligation to put that plane in the water in an emergency landing," Robert Flood, a former B-17 bombardier told the press. "George H.W. Bush violated the primary rule for a captain of a multi-crew aircraft; The pilot always leaves last. He never leaves the airplane with anybody in it!"

Pete Brandon, a Marine Corps Avenger pilot, who also served in the South Pacific, said an Avenger pilot had two choices: Set the plane down in the water or hold it steady until the two crewmen could prepare to jump. "In an Avenger, only the pilot wore a parachute," Brandon said. "The two crewmen wore harnesses. If the order came to bail out, they had to take chest parachutes from a shelf and strap them on - and bail out. The Avenger was very unstable. The pilot had to be at the controls the whole time or it would go right over on its back." Steve Hart, then Vice President Press Secretary, described Mierzejewski's account as absurd. Hart said, "The Vice President has told us time and time again what happened that day. To suggest that the account is inaccurate is absurd." What is absurd is the conflicting or missing reports of exactly what happened to Bush's two crew members. According to the Post, the intelligence report on the loss of Bush's plane in September, 1944 notes that it had become "standard doctrine" for VT 51, Bush's bomber squadron, "to make bombing runs on targets near water so as to retire over the water. This puts pilot and crew in position for water rescue in event of forced landing. The same document reports, without attribution, that "smoke and flame" engulfed Bush's engine, and that "Bush and one other person were seen to bail out.

The chute of the other person who bailed out did not open." The report was signed by Melvin and an intelligence officer, Lt. Martin E. Kilpatrick. Contrary to normal military procedure, the report was not dated and Navy archives were unable to supply a subsequently completed report. Gunner Lawrence Mueller, who lives in Milwaukee, flew on the Chi Chi Jima mission. When asked who had the best view, he replied unhesitatingly: "The turret gunner in Melvin's plane."

Mueller's recollections, jogged by a log book that he kept, support Mierzejewski's account. And it was noted that Bush's plane was the only one from the squadron that did not return. Mueller told the Post, "No parachute was sighted except Bush's when the plane went down." He also said no one mentioned a fire engulfing Bush's plane or he would have noted it in the log book. The Finback, the sub which picked up Bush from his raft in the water, made no report of a fire on Bush's plane, but did comment on his crew: "Bush stated that he failed to see his crew's parachutes and believed they had jumped when the plane was still over Chi Chi Jima, or they had gone down with the plane." About six hours later, the Finback picked up another pilot, James W. Beckman, from the USS Enterprise, who stated that it was known that only one man had parachuted from Bush's plane. "This decided us to discontinue any further search of that area . . ." [10]

Although the heart of Bush's story about the incident remains the same, Mierzejewski is adamant Bush's account is not the truth and blames Bush for the abandonment and deaths of both men. "I think he could have saved those lives, if they were alive. I don't know that they were, but at least they had a chance if he had attempted a water landing," Mierzejewski said. This horrible crime was perpetrated to help the young Nazi, George Herbert Walker Bush establish a false reputation for being a great American WWII hero. Hitler's plan to take over the world was right on schedule. George Herbert Walker Bush, is not an American War Hero! He is a sabotaging Nazi traitor! George Herbert Walker Bush should be tried for Treason.

Allegedly, Hitler and Prescott Bush setup the American Office of Strategic Services or O.S.S. with young George Herbert Walker Bush and SS Nazi commando, Otto Skorzeny as its' leaders'. The Office of Strategic Services, really stood for the "Other SS" Gestapo. Skorzeny and George H.W. Bush then bribed the Great American War I Hero, "Wild" Bill Donovan to go along with their plans. Donovan initially refused to help, as would any red-blooded American Hero, so the Nazis killed his daughter and made it look like an "apparent" car accident. The Nazis/C.I.A. are very good at causing deadly car accidents or "giving heart attacks" to people who stand in their way of creating a New World Order! Skorzeny claims that George H.W. Bush was/is a heroin junky. He was constantly "smacked-out" to escape his guilty conscience! That's how he earned his nickname "Poppy!"

Prescott Bush, George H.W.'s "alleged" father, was arrested during 1942 for trading with the enemy, the Nazis! Prescott Bush's Union Banking Corp. was supporting and doing business with Hitler's Nazis' throughout WWII as was Ford, Edison, Marconi, I.B.M. et al...The Nazis in Germany were sending their stolen Jewish Holocaust "loot" to Prescott Bush in America to "launder" and to save for creating a Fourth Reich in America. Roosevelt had his company seized under the Trading with the Enemy Act.[11] When Prescott Bush died, George H.W. Bush inherited millions of dollars of stolen Jewish Holocaust loot, which he "allegedly" used to fund his own presidential elections, other conservative right-wing, neo-Nazi Republican candidates, hate groups like the Brotherhood of Aryan Nations, abortion doctor killer supporters like Operation Rescue, The Christian Coalition, the KKK & C.I.A. sponsored Al-Qaeda terrorists.

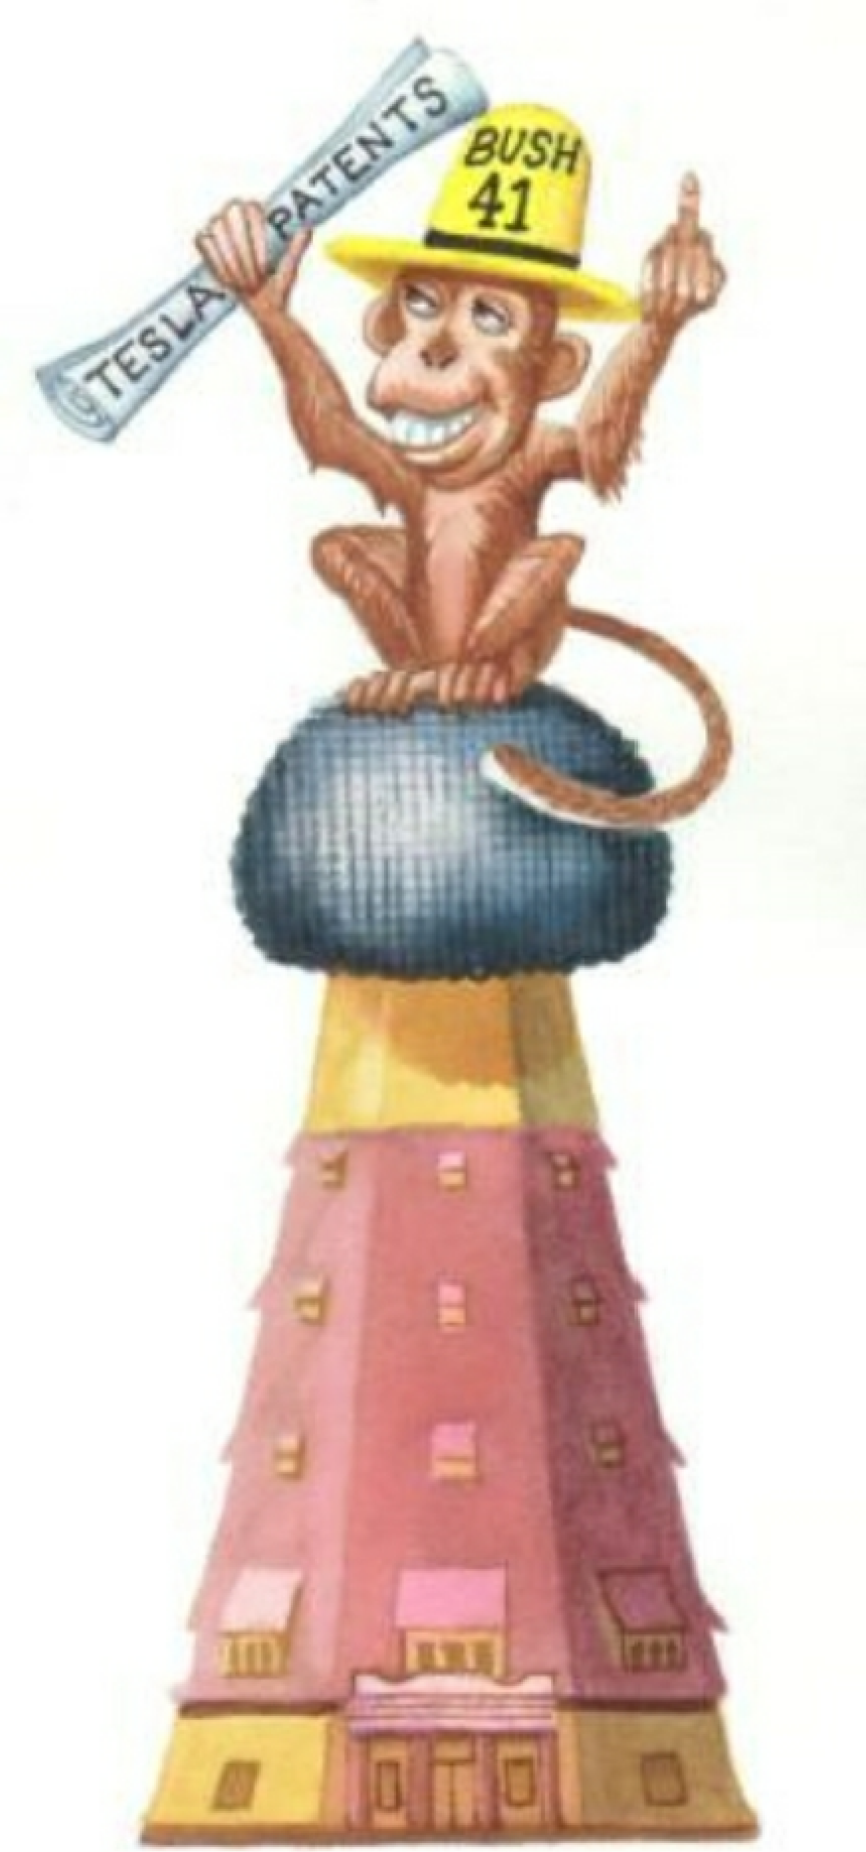
THE "REAL" STORY OF CURIOUS GEORGE…H.W. BUSH



TESLA PATENTS
BUSH

For those of you who do not know the real story of how the character "Curious George" the monkey was created... well then, you are in for a real treat. During the 1940's, the greatest inventor who ever lived, Dr. Nikola Tesla was very good friends with two Jewish immigrants who were writers/artists: H.A. & Margaret Rey. The Reys had just barely escaped from the Nazis while fleeing Nazi-occupied France on bicycles...The Reys were telling Dr. Tesla about their ordeal with the Nazis and compared the Nazis to a bunch of evil, devious monkeys! Tesla laughed and then told them his own story about an evil, devious little Nazi "monkey" named George H. Scherff jr. the son of his accountant George H. Scherff Sr. Tesla told them that George was evil, devious & as "curious" as a monkey! He was always snooping around trying to steal from Tesla & getting into trouble because he was just so curious!

Tesla suggested to H.A. & Margaret Rey that they write children's' books about a devious, "little" monkey that was always getting himself into trouble based on the "escapades" of George H. Scherff Jr. aka: George H.W. Bush. They named that devious little monkey, "Curious George!" The rest is history! Now you know how the devious little monkey "Curious George" was really created! "Curious George" the devious little monkey was named after George H.W. Bush! Unlike the real George, the fictional cartoon character "Curious George" is not a Nazi. The C.I.A. had the co-author of Curious George, Alan J. Shalleck murdered two months ago. 2/2006. Shalleck was murdered to prevent him from talking about who Curious George was really named after, George H. Scherff jr. aka: George H.W. Bush! Evidently, dead men tell no “monkey” tales! Shalleck was murdered by the C.I.A. just three days before a movie about Curious George the Monkey was to be released in movie theaters worldwide. Coincidence? Nah!

Germany's Forged Surrender Agreement: Compliments of George H.W. Bush's New World Order "Avalon Project" at Yale.

Germany never "officially" surrendered to the United States and Russia in 1945. A "forged" surrender agreement between Germany and the United States was left in the U.S. National Archives. This obvious "forgery" has been locked up and kept classified/secret for over 55 years. Stalin and Hitler's Nazi-Germany made a secret, illegal pact with high ranking U.S., Canadian, French, English and Italian Government Officials allegedly led by Hitler's best young Nazi, George H.W. Bush and some of his Nazi-sympathetic O.S.S. comrades. When President Roosevelt heard about this "forgery" he was horrified and shocked. He refused to go along with the cover-up, so he was poisoned. Because he had been sick throughout his later years, no one suspected a thing when he died right before the "supposed" end of WWII.

When General Patton learned about the illegal pact that Prescott & George H.W. Bush allegedly made with Hitler to bring his entire Third Reich of Nazis to America, he too was shocked and horrified. He refused to go along with this illegal pact, so he too was killed by the Nazis, in a "premeditated" car accident. Everyone who stands in the way of this illegal New World Order Pact are coerced into accepting a bribe or killed! This illegal pact was created to bring Hitler's entire Third Reich of Nazis to America, "not just a few Nazi rocket scientists," to help win a possible war against the Russians? That was not its' "true" goal. It's main goal and purpose was to destroy America "from within" by creating a Fourth Reich or New World Order in America, slowly beginning in the year 1945. The Nazi enemy has been living right underneath the American Public's noses' for 60 years without anyone suspecting a thing. The "real" surrender agreement is locked-up and hidden in Germany's National Archives in Berlin and in the Russian National Archives.[12]

Almost every U.S. President, Vice-President, Congressman and Senator after Roosevelt, except for the Kennedy's have gone along with the illegal Hitler & Bush Plan for a New World Order In America. Hitler and Prescott Bush allegedly used their vast Nazi stolen Jewish Holocaust wealth and political influence to create the American O.S.S., with young George Herbert Walker Bush as its' leader. In 1938, Hitler, SS Nazi; Prescott Bush & his adopted SS Nazi son, the "innocent looking", cowardly, prudent, George H. Scherff Jr. aka; George H.W. Bush conspired to establish a "Nazi-spy network" in America & to try to befriend the greatest inventor who ever lived, Dr. Nikola Tesla. Hitler wanted George H.W. Bush to kill Tesla & steal his magnificent inventions so "he" could rule the world. Bush forged a birth certificate evidencing that he was 18 years old and enlisted in the U.S. Navy. He had high-ranking "Nazi-sympathetic" officers in the U.S. Navy, who were on Hitler's payroll, like Frank Wisner! They helped the young Bush progress rapidly through the ranks to become an officer and pilot. The objective of war is not to fight and die for your country, it's to make the other bastard die for his country!"[13]

1. We the undersigned, acting by authority of the German High Command, hereby surrender unconditionally to the Supreme Commander, Allied Expeditionary Force and simultaneously to the Soviet High Command all forces on land, sea, and in the air who are at this date under German control.

2. The German High Command will at once issue orders to all German military, naval and air authorities and to all forces under German control to cease active operations at 2301 hours Central European time on 8 May and to remain in the positions occupied at that time. No ship, vessel, or aircraft is to be scuttled, or any damage done to their hull, machinery or equipment.

3. The German High Command will at once issue to the appropriate commanders, and ensure the carrying out of any further orders issued by the Supreme Commander, Allied Expeditionary Force and by the Soviet High Command.

4. This act of military surrender is without prejudice to, and will be superseded by any general instrument of surrender imposed by, or on behalf of the United Nations and applicable to GERMANY and the German armed forces as a whole.

Major General, French Army (Witness)

This is the date when agreement was signed. However, the Contract's "effective date", on page 1 for Germany to unconditionally surrender has been "erased" & left blank. This Surrender Agreement has been altered or "forged" thus making the entire agreement "Null & Void!" Germany Never Officially Surrendered!

After the signing of the Rheims accord, Soviet chief of staff Gen. Alexei Antonov expressed concern to SHAEF that the continued fighting in the east between Germany and the Soviet Union made the Rheims surrender look like a separate peace. The Soviet command wanted the Act of Military Surrender, with certain "additions" and "alterations", to be signed at Berlin. To the Soviets, the documents signed at Berlin on May 8, 1945, represented the "official, legal surrender of the Third Reich." The Berlin document has "significant changes" from the "one" signed a day earlier at Rheims.[14]

According to Skorzeny, unless an effective year is placed on Germany's Surrender Agreement "the one in the U.S. National Archives" and America "enforces" the agreement, Germany will be able to "legally" take over control of the United States of America as per the principle of adverse possession, or "squatter's rights." Free America will cease to exist & will be re-named the United States of Germany. The American dollar will instantly become worthless. It will be replaced with the New World Order's currency with a picture of Adolf Hitler & Bush Jr. on every bill and coin then part two of the Holocaust will immediately begin.

[14] U.S. National Archives -Washington, D.C.

Definition of Adverse Possession or "Squatters' Rights'"

Under International law, territory can be acquired through adverse possession: "The continuous and peaceful display of "territorial sovereignty" is as good as a title. "Prerequisite is the practice of effective domination which is documented to the outside world and which takes place undisturbed, uninterruptedly, and undisputedly. The period for effective adverse possession depends on the circumstances of the concrete case. With Hitler, Prescott & George H.W. Bush's help, Nazi-Germany established thousands of "sovereign territories" throughout America, England, France, Canada & Italy after 1945. The Bush New World Order Nazis have been secretly hiding and planning their takeover of America in underground bases like Area-51, Nevada.[15] American citizens' are forbidden under the penalty of death, not to enter these bases. The "Enemy", the New World Order Nazis have been living right under our noses for the last 62 years and no one ever suspected a thing. Wake up America and smell the truth!

The following page has a transcript of the "Official" surrender of Germany, signed in Berlin, Germany. This agreement is the only surrender agreement that Russia acknowledges. This agreement was signed one day after the fictitious "Rheims Surrender Agreement in France. The Berlin Germany Surrender Agreement evidences a "Cease & Desist day, month and year for Germany to unconditionally surrender to the Allied Forces. The "Rheims, France "Germany Surrender Agreement" that is in the U.S. National Archives does not have a "Cease & Desist" year on it. Allegedly, Bush Sr.'s New World Order Nazi, "Skull & Bones" Yale lawyers from "The Avalon Project" are the ones that altered this document and many others by erasing the effective year for Germany to surrender. This illegal "alteration", instantly makes the entire document null and void! "The Avalon Project" was allegedly formed by rich, WASP, socialite, New World Order Republican, Nazi-idealistic, "Skull & Bones", Yale lawyers. The "alleged" purpose for the creation of the Avalon Project was to make historically important U.S. Government Documents, like the German Surrender Agreement and others available for the general public to view in the U.S. National Archives. Also, to write and publish history books for America's Schools'. These "Skull & Bones" lawyers were also supposed to translate important historical documents that were in foreign languages into the English language. During the process of "preparing" these important American historical documents for public viewing, the New World Order "Skull & Bones" lawyers illegally conspired to "erase," "alter" and "forge" these documents to suit their own Nazi-New World Order needs'. The Avalon Project was also in charge of editing and keeping track of the Nuremburg Nazi trial historical documents.

These illegal forgeries destroyed America's "true" history, thus clearing the way for Bush's "illegal" New World Order or Fourth Reich takeover of America. If an effective surrender year is not placed on the Germany Surrender Agreement that is in the U.S. National Archives, America will cease to exist. Germany will be able to legally "annex" America as part of its' own country, as per the internationally recognized principle of "Adverse Possession or Squatters' Rights'." America will then be immediately renamed, The United States of Germany! If Germany is able to annex America, the American dollar will instantly become worthless! The United States of Germany will have its' own currency, with Adolf Hitler & Bush Jr.'s face on every bill and coin. The Bush New World Order Plan must be stopped at all cost!

The following is the only "official" WWII Germany Surrender Agreement that Russia acknowledges and complies with:"The Berlin, Germany Surrender Agreement on May 8th, 1945." Russia has officially stated that it does not agree with or acknowledge the Rheims, France-Germany Surrender Agreement.[16] The one that is in our U.S. National Archives.

The German High Command will at once issue orders to all German military, naval and air authorities and to all forces under German control to cease active operations at 2301 hours Central European time on 8th May (1945), to remain in the positions occupied at that time and to disarm completely, handing over their weapons and equipment to the local allied commanders or officers designated by Representatives of the Allied Supreme Commands. By now almost everyone has forgotten all about the Nazis. The U.S. Government illegally lied to its' citizens' about who really won WWII. American's are too quick to believe whatever the Government tells them. The American Public as a whole are not very smart. They have been conditioned like "Pavlovian dogs" to accept and believe whatever the U.S. Government tells them to. Like good slaves.[17]

The forged Germany Surrender Agreement poses a tremendous threat to our American National Security! Where are the "real" documents? Allegedly, George H.W. Bush's New World Order Nazi Yale lawyers created the "The Avalon Project". They conspired to defraud America and the rest of the world by intentionally omitting several important paragraphs from the "official" Japanese & German Surrender Agreements that are in the U.S. National Archives. Where are the "real" Surrender Agreements and what is really written on them? George H.W. Bush & his Avalon Project's lawyer's must be held accountable! I, urge all of you to contact your state's Democratic Congressmen, "Not the New World Order Republicans" and the U.S. National Archives at www.nara.gov. View the "forged" Germany & Japanese Surrender Agreements for yourself. Send them an email or write them a letter and ask them why these document have been altered or forged to show no effective date. Be ready for the U.S. National Archives agents' to lie to you and say, "there is nothing to worry about", there is an effective date of 1945 on page two of the agreement. That is not true. The date of 1945 on page two only evidences when the agreement was signed. The true, effective date for Germany to surrender is on page one of the agreement and the year has been illegally "erased" and left blank. Because this surrender agreement has been altered or forged, it is automatically NULL & VOID! Thus evidencing that Nazi-Germany never surrendered! I, ORION am a licensed mortgage broker & a licensed real estate broker. I know what forged documents look like!

This forged "bogus" Germany surrender agreement is a tremendous threat to our National Security! The Nazis with Bush Jr. as their Dictator, have illegally seized control of America in 2000, 2004 and are now creating a New World Order or Fourth Reich in America. Wake up people and "smell the truth." The free America that we all love so well is doomed if Bush Jr. and his New World Order Nazi regime are not stopped! An immediate Congressional investigation should be launched to question the Avalon Project about why they illegally altered and forged sacred historical American documents. I urge all of you to immediately go to your local gun store and buy as many high powered weapons and ammo as you can afford, you will be needing them soon to protect yourself and family from Bush Jr.'s New World Order Nazis. America's armies' are away from home fighting a phony war for Bush Jr. to steal Iraq's oil.

While all of our troops are away, who is here to protect you? You must be ready to protect yourself and family. Democracy must be restored in America at all cost! Our 2nd Amendment to the U.S. Constitution guarantees Americans the right to bear arms to take action against a repressive government. Well guess what America? Now is the time to get ready to defend yourselves. Right now you are probably thinking to yourselves "Holy Crap!!!" Can this book be right? Be glad that you are learning about the forged Surrender Agreements now and not later, when America is changed into the United States of Germany and part two of the Holocaust begins. The illegal O.S.S. undercover operation to smuggle Nazis into America was known as"Operation Paperclip". Some of the most notorious SS Nazis were brought to America through a secret "underground" network known as the Odessa or Die Spinne (The Spider.) Hitler's entire Third Reich of SS "Gestapo" Nazis merged with the O.S.S. to create the C.I.A. The C.I.A. is"Hitler's Third Reich" in America. Hitler and his closest high ranking SS Nazi buddies were "illegally" smuggled out of Berlin, Germany with direct help from O.S.S. Officers, Frank Wisner, George H.W. Bush Sr. et al.. They had help once they arrived in America from the Assistant Secretary of War and ardent Nazi-sympathizer, John J. McCloy and the Dulles Brother Nazis.[18]

The C.I.A. was created to lie to the American Public. The C.I.A. is just another name for Hitler's Third Reich of Nazis. It was created to hide its' beloved Nazis, to keep non-polluting, non-oil burning, free-energy, Tesla Technology hidden from the American public and the rest of the world and to help its' Nazis' create a Fourth Reich or New World Order in America. It was NOT created to protect or help American Citizens, only its' Nazis'. Can you name one good thing that the C.I.A. has ever done for America? You can't? Either can I.

[18] http://www.cnn.com/SPECIALS/cold. war/kbank/profiles/allen.dulles/

John J. McCloy the {U.S. Assistant Secretary of War} blocked Nazi executions after WWII. After the war he pardoned key Nazi criminals like Krupp, Abs, Dohrnberger, Schacht, and others. His long career has made him a "Godfather of the American establishment." He sat atop the World Bank, directed construction of the Pentagon, worked with Earl Warren to set up the Japanese concentration camps in America, blocked any military attacks on the Nazi death camps as Assistant Secretary of War. He stopped the summary execution of Nazis in favor of the Nuremberg Trials which he later thwarted, and also sat as a member of the Warren Commission.

Kissinger, the Vatican & Red Cross helped Nazis escape to freedom and establish new identities as American citizens. Henry Kissinger -- Worked with General Lucius Clay at Oberammergau, and then with key stateside Army Intelligence and CIA units responsible for bringing in the Nazi spies. Kissinger, who came from Germany to join U.S. Army Intelligence during World War II, had as his "mentor" the mysterious Fritz Kraemer. Kraemer's 30-year silent career in the Pentagon plans division includes the prepping of Alexander Haig. It may also conceal his real identity -- prisoner #33 in the dockets at Dachau, the special Lieutenant to Hitler, Fritz Kraemer. Mr. Kissinger still relies on his advice, and did so while Secretary of State.

George H.W. Bush -- Former head of the CIA who employed, among others, U.S. Army officer, Capt. William Rhine of the Bay of Pigs operation. Rhine is really top SS spy Helmut Streicher, who worked directly with Hitler, Gehlen, Otto Skorzeny, and then U.S. Army Intelligence from October, 1945 on.

Frank Wisner- "Nazi Lover". In 1941, six months before the attack on Pearl Harbor, he enlisted in the United States Navy. He worked in the Navy's censor's office until he was able to get a transfer to the Office of Strategic Services (OSS). Wisner was recruited in 1947 by Dean Acheson to join the State Department's Office of Occupied Territories. In 1948, the CIA created a covert action division, the Office of Policy Coordination (OPC). Frank Wisner was put in charge of the operation and recruited many of his old friends from Carter Ledyard. According to its secret charter, its responsibilities include "propaganda, economic warfare, preventive direct action, including sabotage, anti-sabotage, demolition and evacuation procedures; subversion against hostile states, including assistance to underground resistance groups, and support of indigenous anti-communist elements in threatened countries of the free world." n 1947 Wisner established Operation Mockingbird, a program to influence the domestic and foreign media. In 1952, he became head of the Directorate of Plans, with Richard Helms as his chief of operations. This office had control of 75% of the CIA budget. In this position, he was instrumental in supporting pro-American forces that toppled Mohammed Mossadegh in Iran and Jacobo Arbenz Guzmán in Guatemala following the Alfhem affair.

J. Edgar Hoover -- Who formed the FBI, and without whose help Nazi criminals could never have entered the U.S., worked in Interpol with founder Reinhardt Heydrich, SS head of Nazi police from 1940 to 1942, and his successor, SS officer Ernst Kaltenbrunner, later hanged at Nuremberg. Hoover's career involved extensive mob connections, and his death has yet to be fully investigated. Hoover was a “gutless”, anti-American, Nazi-sympathizer. He was a flaming homosexual, a moral degenerate, pedophile & transvestite. He wore dresses & liked to be called “Mary.” Hoover fired all of the good FBI personnel & hired all white, Christian Fascist, anti-American, homosexual Nazi-sympathizers just like himself! They were known as Hoover’s G-Men or Gay Men.

Monsignor Montini -- An OSS operative in Southeast Asia at the end of World War II, he was later appointed Pope Paul VI. He used Caritas International is, a welfare organization, to provide refugee travel documents to such Nazis as euthanasia killer Hans Hefelman and Hitler's secretary, Frank Wisner, aiding in their escape to Argentina.

Cardinal Spellman -- Religious leader in New York, he was a protégé of Cardinal Pacelli, Pope Pius XII, who is often accused of collaboration with the Nazis.[Spellman is the U.S. spiritual leader of the Knights of Malta. He is responsible for introducing Ngo Dinh Diem to Allen Dulles, and then proposing his presidency of South Vietnam to President Kennedy. When Diem resisted the introduction of American troops into Vietnam, Dulles told General Westmoreland to go ahead anyway, and our CIA helped to kill Diem.

Avery Dulles -- Son of John Foster Dulles, then Secretary of State, and a nephew to Allen Dulles, then CIA director. Avery worked with Frank Wisner to help his escape to Argentina, and is now working as an advisor at Georgetown University. He also is a member of the Knights of Malta.

Allen Dulles - Republican Nazi Employee - Chief Architect of U.S.-Nazi business and spy networks. Spy at the U.S. embassy in Bern, Switzerland, collecting political data for the State Department on Germany and the Austro-Hungarian empire (1916-1918). Member, U.S. staff, Versailles Peace Conference (1918-1922). Head, State Department's Near East Affairs division (1922-27). Worked with brother John Foster Dulles, as lawyer and international finance specialist for Sullivan & Cromwell, a Wall Street law firm in New York (1927-1941). While there, he worked with top Nazi industrialists and played a pivotal role in promoting U.S.-Nazi corporate relations. Allen worked with Prescott Bush (grandfather of President George Walker Bush) and George Herbert Walker (Prescott's father-in-law) who ran Union Banking Corporation for the Nazis. Allen was legal counsel for Standard Oil and the Nazi 's I. G. Farben, co-owned by the Rockefellers. (Other U.S. millionaires allied to the Nazis were: William Randolph Hearst Sr., Andrew Mellon, Irene Du Pont, Henry Ford and J.P. Morgan. Morgan, Du Pont and others were even involved in a Fascist plot to overthrow the U.S. government in 1934.) President Roosevelt, realizing Dulles was a traitor, had his New York "Office of Coordinator of Information" wiretapped (1941-42).

Some Dulles-linked firms, like Bush's Union Banking Corp., were seized under the Trading with the Enemy Act (1942). Berne station chief, Office of Strategic Services (1942-1945). Roosevelt's plan to charge Dulles with treason failed when Dulles was warned and covered his tracks (1944). Roosevelt's plan died with him (1945). As OSS station chief in Berlin, Dulles negotiated the agreement with General Reinhardt Gehlen to establish a Nazi spy network within the OSS (1945). Dulles helped in the development of the CIA (1947), became its deputy director (1951) and its director (1953-1961). He oversaw numerous covert operations, such as election rigging in Italy (1948), coups in Iran (1953) and Guatemala (1954) and many other notorious operations described in this issue. When Union Banking Corp. was liquidated, Prescott Bush and George Herbert Walker received $1.5 million (1951). Was fired by President Kennedy after the failed invasion of Cuba at the Bay of Pigs (1961) as a member of the Warren Commission, he promoted the theory that a "lone gunman" assassinated John F. Kennedy (1963). [19]

After WWII, American & German submarines & cargo ships were used to transport their illegal Nazi cargo and trillions of dollars of stolen Jewish Holocaust money and stolen Tesla Technology to America. The SS Nazis were smuggled into our country through the North Atlantic Ocean, just off the coast of Montauk, New York. As the American submarines arrived off the coast of Montauk, NY at night, the O.S.S. was waiting to pick them up on locally owned commercial fishing boats. The Nazis were then given fisherman's clothes to put on and they were taken to Camp Hero on Montauk.[20] The Nazis were given a hero's welcome when they arrived and have been treated like royalty ever since by the entire U.S./Nazi Government, especially the O.S.S., C.I.A., O.S.I. and F.B.I. This illegal, O.S.S. sponsored clandestine organization was headed by one of the most notorious and most wanted SS Nazis during WWII, Otto Skorzeny. Skorzeny was Hitler & George H.W. Bush's personal bodyguard and favorite commando. In 1945 he was acquitted of Nazi war crimes and became a "founding" member of the O.S.S. He also founded the Odessa. A clandestine operation run by former SS Nazis, the Vatican, and the Red Cross to help other wanted, evil murdering, Nazi war criminals flee to Argentina and America. Some of Skorzeny's Odessa SS Nazi comrades were: Adolf Hitler, spymaster- Reinhardt Gehlen, The "Angel of Death", Josef Mengele, C.I.A.-Frank Wisner, Holocaust Butcher - Alois Brunner, Gas Passer-Walter Rauff and O.S.S. member George H.W.

Bush, et al…The C.I.A.'s New world order SS Nazis have lived "charmed" lives since the end of WWII, because Germany never surrendered to the U.S. they do not have to pay any U.S. Taxes nor parking tickets!

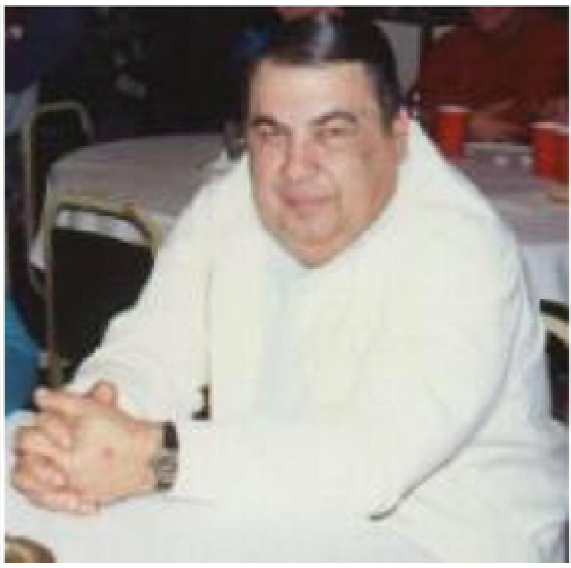
WANTED

Dr. Josef Mengele

For his crimes against humanity

REWARDS-U.S.$2,375,000



The “White Angel of Death” Dr. Josef Mengele is the Zodiac Killer seen here wearing his white hooded robe with a large Anthrax sore & the special watch that Skorzeny gave him from Mussolini on his left hand. November 2001.

The Evil Dr. Mengele

The Holocaust Did Happen!

The Holocaust Did Happen!

The U.S. Justice Dept. (O.S.I.) warned Mengele that I was on to him. He has since moved. Mengele is the San Francisco Zodiac Killer, The "real" Boston Strangler & The 2001 Anthrax Mailer Killer! Mengele has never been caught due to the sloppy, criminally incompetent, Nazi-sympathetic, anti-American detective work of the corrupt Boston Police, SF Police, Vallejo C.A. Police & F.B.I.!

This most hated and sought after evil, Nazi asshole was "supposedly" born on March 16, 1911? The birth dates of the C.I.A.'s favorite SS Nazi employees cannot be trusted! The C.I.A.'s SS Nazis' wrote the history books! Most history books list birth dates for Nazis alleging that they are 10 years older than they really are. Mengele was "probably" born around 1924 not 1911. That would make him approximately 87 years old today, however with his history of C.I.A. given face-lifts, anti-aging hormone injections & alleged “cannibalism”, he looks at least 10-15 years younger than he really is! Currently, he dies his hair black and wears a “cheap rug” to disguise his bald head. Today, his face is very smooth and “saggy” from all of his face-lifts. I do not know when Mengele was really born. It is “possible” that Mengele was actually born in 1911. If so, he would be 109 years today in 2020.

He is definitely still alive in 2003 but looks much younger than he really is! According to Skorzeny, Mengele was one of Hitler's "Four" Horsemen of the Apocalypse. The other three horsemen are allegedly George H.W. Bush, Bormann, and Gehlen. Skorzeny was the unofficial "fifth" horseman of the apocalypse. Dr. Josef Mengele, nicknamed "the Angel of Death", became the surviving symbol of Adolf Hitler's "Final Solution". Mengele was always immaculately prepared for the long-drawn-out rituals of death, the hellish selections which the young SS doctor so regularly attended during his twenty-one months at Auschwitz. Josef Mengele was the chief provider for the gas chambers and their crematoria." He had a look that said 'I am the power,'" said one survivor. When it was reported that one block was infected with lice, Mengele solved the problem by gassing all the 750 women assigned to it. At the time, Mengele was "allegedly" only 18 years old. The Angel of Death fed his legend by dramatizing murderous policies, such as his drawing a line on the wall of the children's block between 150 and 156 centimeters (about 5 feet or 5 feet 2 inches) from the floor, then sending those whose heads could not reach the line to the gas chamber ...

There were many warrants, rewards, and bounties offered, but he was lucky…he had the American C.I.A. to protect him! He also had several facelifts compliments of the C.I.A. and you the American taxpayer. At any given time, he looks at least 10 years younger than he really is. Today, his face is very smooth, due to his many C.I.A. given facelifts and anti-aging hormone treatments. Despite international efforts to track him down, he was never apprehended and lived for 35 years hiding under various aliases. He lived in Paraguay and Brazil until his "SUPPOSED" death in 1979. According to the C.I.A., he "allegedly", he went for a swim in Brazil, and suffered a massive stroke and began to drown. By the time he was dragged to shore, he was dead.

People didn't find out about Mengele's death until the mid 1980's when Nazi hunters, using newly discovered information, uncovered his grave marked "Wolfgang Gerhard" at Embu. It was then that his family admitted they had shielded him all those years and they turned over his diaries and letters to investigators. But the possibility of a hoax kept the case open for several years. It was not until 1992, The C.I.A. "alleges" that after coaxing DNA from a bone, and matching it to DNA in blood samples taken from Mengele's son and wife that the official conclusion is announced: "The remains are those of Josef Mengele". The mystery of Josef Mengele, the evil symbol of the Nazi 's, was solved. Bull Crap!!! He is still alive & the American C.I.A. is still protecting him! Mengele Is Still Alive Today Thanks To The C.I.A., F.B.I. & The Vatican!

Fact: It is not a crime to fake your own death in the United States as long as no one recovers any insurance money from it. Mengele is still alive and funneling billions of stolen Jewish Holocaust dollars into anti-freedom, anti-Jewish, anti-black, pro-life, anti-gun, conservative New World Order Republican campaigns, like Bush Jr's. Also, neo-Nazi fundamentalist, conservative, right-wing, Christian Coalition, anti-freedom groups like the abortion doctor killer supporters "Operation Rescue", "The Brotherhood of Aryan Nations "organized crime" hate group," the KKK and C.I.A. sponsored Al Qaeda Terrorist Cells.

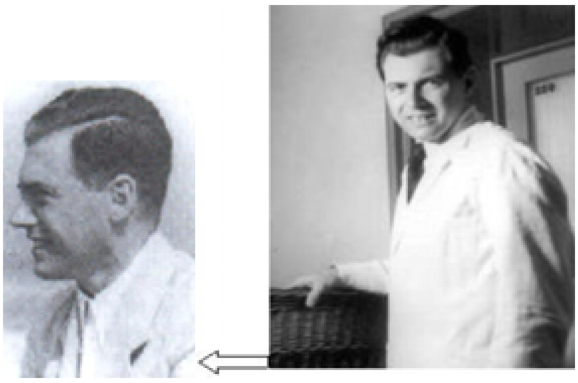
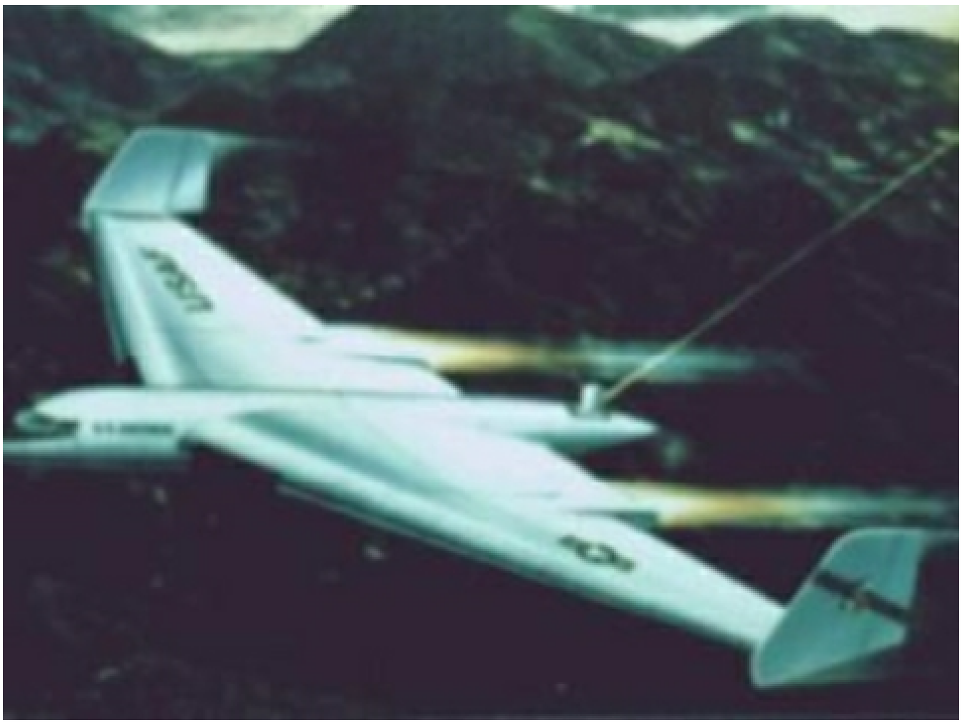
Mengele aka: Steve Rabel is/was a "Laboratory Technician" for W.R. Grace Company in Clifton, NJ.



Dr. Josef Mengele Worked For W.R. Grace Company In Clifton, New Jersey.

Dr. Josef Mengele, alleged AKA: Steve T. Rabel worked for W.R. Grace Company " a billion dollar pharmaceutical and plastics company" in Clifton, New Jersey as a "Laboratory Technician" for over 40 years. He is "retired." He lived in Hernando, Florida until 2004. He is allegedly the brains & co-leader of The Brotherhood of Aryan Nations organized crime hate group. He allegedly sent the anthrax through the mail that killed A.M.I. employee Robert Stevens in Boca Raton, Florida and several others across America. The C.I.A. knows that he sent the anthrax because they are the ones who ordered him to do so! He must be caught, tried, convicted and executed for this crime as well as crimes against humanity by torturing and killing millions of innocent Jews and others during the Holocaust! W.R. Grace is a monster of a company. W.R. Grace produced ‘Zyklon-B” deadly killing gas for the Nazis to kill Jews with. It now produces deadly products like “Zonolite”-asbestos insulation and vermiculite. When workers die from ailments related to these deadly products, the U.S. Government has always stepped in to prevent or limit any lawsuits against them.

Beloved Democratic Senator Paul Wellstone was heading a multi-million dollar lawsuit against W.R. Grace to help the victims of its deadly products. According to Skorzeny, the C.I.A. shot down his plane with one of its' high powered laser beams leaving no trace and no more lawsuit! There are several other multi-million dollar lawsuits against W.R. Grace for violating the EPA's clean air and other laws. Lucky for W.R. Grace, Christine Todd Whitman an "alleged" New World Order Republican appointee is currently running the EPA. She or her successor will probably forbid any type of lawsuit against W.R. Grace. If that doesn't work bankruptcy always will! I, ORION urge all Democratic Congressmen, Democratic Senators, and all others whom W.R. Grace Co. does not like, NOT to fly. Take a custom tour bus instead, like John Madden does. Do not fly, America needs you alive. "This flight warning does not apply to the general public nor to Republican Congressmen & Senators. The New World Order has no reason to shoot down your airplane with a laser beam unless you are an enemy of W.R. Grace Co. or you are standing in their way of creating a Fourth Reich in America.



U.S. Airforce's Flying Laser (Tesla's Death Ray)

Was Paul Wellstone Murdered?

By Michael I. Niman, AlterNet

October 28, 2002

Paul Wellstone was the only progressive in the U.S. Senate. Mother Jones magazine once described him as, "The first 1960s radical elected to the U.S. senate." He was also the last. Since defeating incumbent Republican Rudy Boschowitz 12 years ago in a grassroots upset, Wellstone emerged as the strongest, most persistent, most articulate and most vocal Senate opponent of the Bush administration. In a senate that is one heartbeat away from Republican control, Wellstone was more than just another Democrat. He was often the lone voice standing firm against the status-quo policies of both the Democrats and the Republicans. As such, he earned the special ire of the Bush administration and the Republican Party, who made Wellstone's defeat that party's number one priority this year. Various White House figures made numerous recent campaign stops in Minnesota to stump for the ailing campaign of Wellstone's Republican opponent, Norm Coleman. Despite being outspent and outgunned, however, polls show that Wellstone's popularity surged after he voted to oppose the Senate resolution authorizing George Bush to wage war in Iraq. He was pulling ahead of Coleman and moving toward a victory that would both be an embarrassment to the Bush administration and to Democratic Quislings such as Hillary Clinton who voted to support "the president." Then he died. Wellstone now joins the ranks of other American politicians who died in small plane crashes. Another recent victim was

Missouri's former Democratic governor, Mel Carnahan, who lost his life in 2000, three weeks before Election Day, during his Senatorial race against John Ashcroft. Carnahan went on to become the first dead man to win a Senatorial race, humiliating and defeating the unpopular Ashcroft posthumously. Ashcroft, despite his unpopularity, went on to be appointed Attorney General by George W. Bush. Investigators determined that Carnahan's plane went down due to "poor visibility." Carnahan was the second Missouri politician to die in a small plane crash. The first was Democratic Representative Jerry Litton, whose plane crashed the night he won the Democratic nomination for senate in 1976. His Republican opponent ultimately captured the seat from his successor in November.

While an article in the New York Times on Saturday pointed out the danger politicians face due to their heavy air travel schedules, the death of a senator or member of Congress is still relatively rare, with only one other sitting U.S. Senator, liberal Republican John Heinz, dying in a plane crash since World War II. Heinz, who entered office as an outspoken opponent of the Vietnam War, later emerged as a strong proponent of health care, social services, public transportation and the environment. He also urged reconciliation with Cuba. He died when the landing gear on his small plane failed to function, and a helicopter dispatched to survey the problem crashed into his plane. One former senator, John Tower, also died in a small plane crash. Tower was best known as the chair of the Tower Commission, which investigated the Bush/ Reagan era Iran Contra scandal. Another member of a prominent government commission who died in a small plane crash was former Democratic representative and House Majority Leader Hale Boggs. Boggs was best known as one of the seven members of the Warren Commission, which investigated the assassination of President John F. Kennedy. The commission found that Lee Harvey Oswald was acting alone when he killed the president. Boggs, it turns out, had "strong doubts" that Oswald acted alone, but went along with the commission findings. Later, in 1971 and 1972, he went public with his doubts. He was presumed dead after the small plane carrying him and Democratic Representative Nicholas Begich disappeared in 1972.

Texas Democratic Representative Mickey Leland also died in a plane crash. In his case, the six-term member of Congress and outspoken advocate of sanctions against the apartheid government of South Africa, died while traveling in Ethiopia. Another American politician to die overseas in a plane crash was the Clinton administration's Commerce Secretary, Ronald Brown, whose plane went down in the Balkans. Anyone familiar with my work knows that I'm certainly not a conspiracy theorist. But to be honest, I know I wasn't alone in my initial reaction at this week's horrible and tragic news: that being my surprise that Wellstone had lived this long. Perhaps it's just my anger and frustration at losing one of the few reputable politicians in Washington, but I also felt shame. Shame for not writing in my column, months ago, that I felt that Paul Wellstone's life, more so than any other politician in Washington, was in danger. I felt that such speculation was unprofessional and would ultimately undermine my credibility. In the end, my own self-interest triumphed, and I never put my concerns into print. Neither did any other mainstream journalist, though I know of many who shared my concern.

When I heard Wellstone's plane went down, I immediately thought of Panamanian General Omar Torrijos, who in 1981 thumbed his nose at the Reagan/Bush administration and threatened to destroy the Panama Canal in the event of a U.S. invasion. Torrijos died shortly thereafter when the instruments in his plane failed to function upon takeoff. Panamanians speculated that the U.S. was involved in the death of the popular dictator, who was replaced by a U.S. intelligence operative, Manuel Noreiga, who previously worked with George Bush Senior. There is no indication today that Wellstone's death was the result of foul play. What we do know, however, is that Wellstone emerged as the most visible obstacle standing in the way of a draconian political agenda by an unelected government. And now he is conveniently gone. For our government to maintain its credibility at this time, we need an open and accountable independent investigation involving international participation into the death of Paul Wellstone. Hopefully we will find out, beyond any shadow of a doubt, that this was indeed an untimely accident. For the sake of our country, we need to know this. Dr. Michael I. Niman teaches journalism and media studies at Buffalo State College.

The History of W.R. Grace & Co.

The Seattle Post Intelligencer

Thursday, November 18, 1999

W.R. Grace Co. had a not-so-fragrant beginning in 1854. William R. Grace, who had fled the Irish potato famine for Peru, chartered ships to trade bat guano and bird droppings. Twelve years later, he moved his headquarters to New York and set up a worldwide network trading fabric, fertilizer, machinery and other products. In the middle of World War II, William Grace's grandson, Peter, took over control of the company and ran it for almost a half century, until 1993. Although the company's focus remained on chemicals and packaging, Peter Grace diversified Grace into everything from sporting goods to tacos. Starting in 1995, Grace divested many of its larger businesses. In 1998, the Securities and Exchange Commission sued Grace for manipulating earnings in one of its divisions. To settle the suit, Grace set up a $1 million financial education fund. Grace has gone through elaborate reorganization in the past decade. Lawyers handling the asbestos suits against Grace say the shuffling was done to conceal assets and cloud the corporate lines of responsibility. Grace denies the charges and calls the moves "solid business decisions."

Although it has downsized, Grace's sales are still about $1.4 billion a year. But like other giant companies that sold asbestos products during the heyday of the flameproof fiber, Grace is still plagued by lawsuits filed by people allegedly harmed or killed by the fibers in the insulation, garden products and other applications it sold. More than 250,000 asbestos -related suits have been filed against Grace. Almost all of them except the 187 involving the miners and the families from Libby are personal-injury suits dealing with the hazards of asbestos products, said Jay Hughes, Grace's top litigation counsel. About 150,000 suits have been settled or dismissed. An estimated 102,000 cases remain, he said. A spotlight was thrown on one of Grace's darkest moments when the movie "A Civil John Travolta and Robert Duvall dramatized the book of the same name written by Jonathan Harr.

The book told the story of families living in the old New England mill town of Woburn on the outskirts of Boston. Five Woburn children and one adult died of acute lymphocytic leukemia from exposure to chemicals in their drinking water. Others were sickened. Grace and another company were found by the Environmental Protection Agency to be responsible for dumping the toxic chemicals that poisoned two of Woburn's wells. Grace paid $8 million to eight families in return for the withdrawal of lawsuits they had filed. Later, Grace was indicted by the Department of Justice on two counts of lying to the EPA in 1982 about the amount of hazardous chemicals it used at its Woburn plant. In 1988, Grace pled guilty to one count and was fined the maximum -- $10,000. Today, the penalty for that charge is $500,000.[22]

Frank Wisner: Background

Education

He was educated at Woodberry Forest School in Orange County, Virginia and the University of Virginia, where he received both B.A. and LL.B. degrees. He was also tapped for the Seven Society.

OSS

After graduating, Wisner worked as a Wall Street lawyer. In 1941, six months before the attack on Pearl Harbor, he enlisted in the United States Navy. He worked in the Navy's censor's office until he was able to get a transfer to the Office of Strategic Services (OSS). He was stationed first in Turkey, and then in Romania, where he became head of OSS operations in southeastern Europe. This happened just prior to the Romanian royal coup of August 23, 1944. At Wisner's behest, King Michael I of Romania permitted the United States to fly out Allied prisoners of war.

On August 29, some 1,350 American airmen who had been held prisoners in Romania were rescued by an U.S. Air Crew Rescue Unit, with Soviet troops only days away from entering Bucharest. Despite continuing fighting between Romanian and Red Army forces, and the presence of the Wehrmacht and Luftwaffe in the immediate Bucharest area, the rescue team used the Popeşti-Leordeni Airfield.[5] Twelve B-17 Flying Fortress flew out the prisoners in hourly shifts. In all, some 1,700 American POWs were rescued with the help of the Romanians.

Wisner reportedly grew to hate the Soviet Union during this period, particularly after witnessing a train full of Germans being sent to a labor camp in Russia. Later, Wisner's main task was to spy on the activities of the Soviet Union. Wisner's agents managed to penetrate the Romanian Communist Party and the Red Army's headquarters in Bucharest. He learned that the Soviet Union planned to take over all of Eastern Europe, and was disappointed at the U.S. failure to move to prevent it. He advised the Romanian royal family to go into exile. In March 1945, Wisner was transferred to Wiesbaden, where he served as OSS liaison to the Gehlen Organization.[2] In 1946, he returned to law practice, joining the New York City law firm of Carter Ledyard.

CIA

Wisner was recruited in 1947 by Dean Acheson to join the State Department's Office of Occupied Territories. In 1948, the CIA created a covert action division, the Office of Policy Coordination (OPC). Frank Wisner was put in charge of the operation and recruited many of his old friends from Carter Ledyard. According to its secret charter, its responsibilities include "propaganda, economic warfare, preventive direct action, including sabotage, anti-sabotage, demolition and evacuation procedures; subversion against hostile states, including assistance to underground resistance groups, and support of indigenous anti-communist elements in threatened countries of the free world."

In 1947 Wisner established Operation Mockingbird, a program to influence the domestic and foreign media. In 1952, he became head of the Directorate of Plans, with Richard Helms as his chief of operations. This office had control of 75% of the CIA budget. In this position, he was instrumental in supporting pro-American forces that toppled Mohammed Mossadegh in Iran and Jacobo Arbenz Guzmán in Guatemala following the Alfhem affair.

The FBI Director, J. Edgar Hoover, became jealous of the CIA's growing power. He described the OPC as "Wisner's gang of weirdoes'" and began carrying out investigations into their past. It did not take him long to discover that some of them had been active in left-wing politics in the 1930s. This information was passed to Senator Joseph McCarthy who started making attacks on members of the OPC. Hoover also gave McCarthy details of an affair that Wisner had with Princess Caradja in Romania during the war; Hoover claimed that Caradja was a Soviet agent.

Hoover and Senator McCarthy succeeded in forcing CIA director Allen W. Dulles to dismiss one of his key staff members, Carmel Offie in 1953 over Wisner's objections. Wisner worked closely with Kim Philby, the British agent who was eventually unmasked as a Soviet spy. He was also deeply involved in establishing the Lockheed U-2 spy plane program run by Richard M. Bissell, Jr.

Wisner was devastated when the Soviet Union crushed the Hungarian Revolution of 1956. As OPC director, he believed that an important opportunity for "rollback" was forfeited in October–November 1956, when Hungarian reformist leader Imre Nagy announced Hungary's withdrawal from the Warsaw Pact, and when he and Hungarian insurgents called on the West for help against invading Soviet troops. President Eisenhower, however, deemed it too risky to intervene militarily in a landlocked country such as Hungary, and he feared it might trigger a nuclear war with the Soviet Union. Moreover, Secretary of State John Foster Dulles mistakenly believed that Nagy sided with the Soviet Union.

On October 25, 1956, Dulles sent a telegram to the U.S. embassy in Belgrade expressing his fears that the Imre Nagy–János Kádár government might take "reprisals" against the Hungarian "freedom fighters". By the next day, October 26, State Department officials in Washington assumed the worse about Nagy, asserting in a top secret memorandum: "Nagy's appeal for Soviet troops indicates, at least superficially, that there are not any open differences between the Soviet and Hungarian governments." While some inflammatory broadcasts by the CIA-financed Radio Free Europe by themselves certainly neither caused the Hungarian Revolution nor the subsequent Soviet crackdown, the Kremlin leaders exploited the foreign radio broadcasts as an ex post facto excuse. But Wisner took this in stride. "They do this because... they can't stand the truth; they can't stand the thing being understood throughout the world or within the Soviet Union as a genuine revolt."

Soon after the Soviet crackdown on the Hungarian revolution, Wisner suffered a breakdown, and was diagnosed as a manic depressive. He underwent psychoanalysis and was subjected to electroshock therapy. After spending 6 months at The Sheppard and Enoch Pratt Hospital, he was released in 1958. CIA Director Allen Dulles named Wisner Chief of the CIA's London Station, but he was still suffering from mental illness. In 1962, he was recalled to Washington, D.C., and agreed to retire from the CIA.

Personal life

Wisner was born in Laurel, Mississippi to parents Frank George Wisner, a lumberman (March 5, 1873 in Clinton, Iowa – died April 24, 1938), and Mary Jeannette Gardiner (August 21, 1875 in Clinton, Iowa – died October 13, 1959). They were married on September 28, 1897 in Lyons, Iowa. He married Mary Ellis Knowles (June 28, 1912 in Pensacola, Florida – July 9, 2002; remarried in 1975 to newspaperman Clayton Fritchey). They had four children: Frank G. Wisner, Ellis Wisner, Graham Wisner, and Elizabeth "Wendy" Hazard.

In Maryland, Frank Wisner "allegedly" committed suicide using one of his son's shotguns. His funeral service was held at the Bethlehem Chapel in the Washington National Cathedral. He was buried at Arlington National Cemetery as a naval commander, his wartime rank. Bullshit! Skorzeny faked Wisner's alleged suicide in 1965!

"Frank Wisner, Jr. was a big catch for Enron Corporation. His lineage is impeccable, since his father, Frank Wisner Sr., was a senior CIA official (from 1947 until his suicide in 1965) who was involved in the overthrow of Arbenz of Guatemala (1954) and Mossadeq of Iran (1953). Wisner Junior was well-known in the CIA and he worked as Under Secretary of Defense for Policy and Under Secretary of State for International Security Affairs; his current boss, Kenneth L. Lay, Chief Executive Officer of Enron Corporation, also worked for the Pentagon during the US war in Vietnam. With 'economic espionage' as a task for the CIA (see PD, 12 October 1997), there is little doubt that Wisner used this instrument during his long-tenure as Ambassador in Asian nations. A Wisner staffer told InterPress Services this year that 'if anybody asked the CIA to help promote US business in India, it was probably Frank'.

"When Wisner was US Ambassador to the Philippines (1991-92), Enron was in the midst of negotiations to manage the two Subic Bay power plants. When Wisner left Manila in July 1992, Enron won the deal and began to manage the plant in January 1993. During Wisner tenure in India, he fought long and hard to secure various deals for Enron. He went so far as to boycott the 'India Power '96 -- Beyond Dabhol' summit, despite being scheduled to give an address (this was part of a US advisory to companies to avoid India for six-months, a pressure tactic on India during the winter of 1995-96). Wisner left India earlier this year only after it seemed like Enron's place was secure." Frank Wisner Jr. is “allegedly” a “clone” of his father Frank Wisner Sr. & not his actual son!

SS Nazi Brigadier General: Reinhardt Gehlen

Reinhardt Gehlen was born during the same time frame that Mengele, and Bormann was born. He began as a career German officer who graduated to intelligence, miraculously emerging from the crushed Third Reich to become the great spymaster in post-war Berlin when it was the hotbed of espionage between the Soviets and the West. The son of an army officer who later became a successful publisher, He was born in Erfurt, Germany. After graduating officer's candidate school, in 1942 he was promoted as a lieutenant colonel to head intelligence for Foreign Armies East, the German military forces in Russia. His superior was Colonel Adolf Heusinger who found Gehlen a superb spymaster (In postwar Germany, Gehlen would later find a place for Heusinger in his West German intelligence organization.) Gehlen's unit worked separately from the SS and SD, collecting an enormous amount of information on Russian partisans and regular troops.

Of particular interest to Gehlen was the Soviet officer corps. In-depth profiles were produced not only on the high-ranking officers but also on those who would replace those military leaders in years to come. The Soviet codes and ciphers were systematically categorized, then broken. Russian intelligence methods of infiltration, interrogation, use of Covers, letter-boxes, dead drops, all the techniques of espionage were chronicled in precise terms and on an encyclopedic basis. All Communist politicians received the same kind of deep profile treatment. Gehlen was a demanding, exacting spymaster and his records later proved how extensive and encompassing was the work of his unit. Gehlen cultivated a vast network of spies, mostly recruiting Russians with German backgrounds and who thought of themselves as Germans. He planted these spies behind enemy lines and in every major city in Russia, as well as territory already occupied by Nazi troops, in Poland, Prussia, the Baltic cities. His intelligence reports were accurate and dependable and helped the Germans in their tactical retreat from Russia after the fall of Stalingrad, but Gehlen and no one else could aid the maniac Adolf Hitler in his relentless drive for self-destruction.

Hitler had never liked Gehlen as head of German military intelligence (FHO) on the eastern front, Gehlen never minced words in his reports which were read by Hitler himself. The Fuhrer tersely commended Gehlen's precise reports but he was constantly annoyed by Gehlen's dim view of the eventual conquest of Russia by Germany. This began in the summer of 1942 when Gehlen assessed the Russian will to fight to the death and predicted in one report the eventual Battle of Stalingrad and that this was a key city the Russians would never give up. By early 1945, Gehlen, at his headquarters in Zossen, had risen to the rank of major general and he realized that the war was lost. Hitler, in his eyes, had gone mad, having dismissed the best of his generals and, in particular, the grand old man of German intelligence, Admiral Wilhelm Canaris. The Fuhrer had ordered the murder of more than 5.000 high-ranking officers and politicians whom he suspected of being part of the Black Orchestra (German underground) and the failed plot against his life in 1944.

In the past he had warned Gehlen that his incisive intelligence reports were too heavily laced with "a virulent pessimism. "Hitler, by April 1945, dumped Gehlen, telling his generals that the spymaster "is an unreliable defeatist." Gehlen was unperturbed. As usual, he had a plan to not only survive but rise again as an important intelligence chief in the post war years. His vast, deep knowledge of Russia, its leaders, its intelligence, would be of great use to the Allies. To achieve that end, Gehlen had all of his files put onto microfilm and then led the leaders of his unit toward the Alps where, in the earth beneath a hut near Lake Spitzing in Upper Bavaria, he and his men buried fifty large steel boxes, the archives of their intelligence unit. Gehlen and his men then sought out a contingent of American troops and surrendered to them.

Eventually, Gehlen was interviewed by officers of the U.S. Army's Counter Intelligence Corp-(CIC). He informed them that he was able to provide the Allies with a vast repository of intelligence on the Soviets, information the West would soon desperately need. None of the CIC officers shared his view. More American officers interrogated Gehlen, coming to the conclusion, in Gehlen's words, "that I was not a valuable prisoner." A few days later, Gehlen was herded with other prisoners into the back of a truck and driven to a prison at Wiesbaden. Gehlen was not long forgotten. The Russians wanted to prevent the data about them from reaching the West, and perhaps to imprison Gehlen. In May 1945 both the Russians and the Allies set up separate commissions searching for German intelligence officers, especially their cache of information and in particular Reinhardt Gehlen, the chief of the FHO. U.S. Army records revealed that Gehlen had been sent from the Wiesbaden prison to Oberusel Concentration camp in the American zone and CIC officers were notified. Gehlen was then brought before American General Edwin L. Sibert, one of the liberators of Paris in 1944 and head of all military intelligence in the American zone. Gehlen, in essence, told Sibert that Joseph Stalin would never allow Poland, Czechoslovakia, Bulgaria, Rumania, Hungary and the Baltic states to escape occupation by Soviet troops and that he planned to spread communism throughout Germany to purge the country of its national socialism. Joseph Stalin would risk war with the West to achieve his ends, Gehlen insisted. Sibert listened patiently, then replied with a single sentence: "You know a lot about the Russians, General."

The FHO chief then told Sibert that he could prove his claims through the intelligence he and his men had accumulated during the war. Gehlen wrote out a 129-page report for Sibert which detailed Russian military and political aims, and then turned over the 50 steel boxes which had been hidden in Bavaria. It was a treasure trove of eye-opening information, which detailed current strengths, composition and deployment of Soviet divisions, thousands of air photographs pinpointing Soviet rail junctions, military fortifications and armament plants, as well as figures on armament production, morale reports on the Red Army and the Russian people as a whole. So impressed were Sibert and his superior, General Walter Bedell Smith, that Gehlen was given the green light to set up his intelligence unit and begin spying for the West. A short time later Gehlen and his top officers—Heinz Herre, Albert Scholler, Horst Hiemenz, and Konrad Stephanus were sent to the U.S. Gehlen and his staff met with OSS director William J. Donovan and his European chief Allen Dulles, who both agreed with him that Russia was the dominant threat to world peace. It was obvious that while America was rapidly disarming in 1945, Russia kept its six million-man army intact, and kept its 50,000 tanks and 20,000 aircraft operational. In order to execute conquest of Eastern Europe the Soviets could not disarm, which was shown as proof of their hostile intentions. It was not enough proof to the OSS. Not until February 1946, however, did Gehlen return to Europe to seriously begin his espionage operations against the Russians, working in tandem with Hermann Baun who had already been putting together his own intelligence unit under Sibert's approval. The delay in Washington was the American reluctance to initiate espionage against its former ally, Russia. But when the Soviets invaded northern Iran, their aims were clearly that of an aggressor and Gehlen was given the green light to start his "Org".

The Gehlen Organization, as it became known, was funded with $7 million and operated in the Soviet zone of Eastern Germany. Gehlen's own headquarters at Pullach evaluated the information culled from tens of thousands of willing spies. Who were these armies of the night that flocked to Gehlen's banner? They came from the tattered ranks of German prisoners -of-war who were released over a period of several years following World War II. Gehlen's men interviewed each and every one of these men, writing out details of their concentration camp experiences. Those who had been stool-pigeons or who had turned propagandists for the Soviets were eliminated.

Those who had special knowledge of the Russian military and civilians and who proved loyal to the West were enlisted as agents. Other agents, thousands of them, were already in place. These were Gehlen's "sleeper" agents in Russia, Poland, the Baltic states, in Rumania, Bulgaria, Hungary, Albania, Czechoslovakia and, especially in East Germany. Gehlen's service operated under the auspices of the U.S. until the establishment of the Federal Republic of Germany when Gehlen's organization was absorbed into the West German government. His bureau was known as "Org" to its members but officially it was called the Federal Intelligence Service, and, in 1956, the BND. Gehlen's operations were chiefly directed against the East German Ministry of State and Security the Communist political police Staats Scherheitsndienst (SSD). The SSD was headed by Ernst Wollweber, a crusty old German Communist organizer turned spymaster who loathed Gehlen. One of the reasons why Wollweber despised Gehlen was because Gehlen had planted his agent Walter Gramisch into a powerfully useful position, on Wollweber's personal staff. He so hated Gehlen and was so full of malice due to the many intelligence triumphs of Gehlen's over him that Ernst Wollweber put a "dead or alive" reward on Gehlen of one million marks. It was never collected. One of Gehlen's great strengths was that he had placed many dedicated agents into high-level offices and positions in East Germany. For more than twenty years Gehlen's organization provided one spectacular coup after another. It identified the existence of SMERSH as the execution arm of the KGB, it helped the CIA to dig the Berlin Tunnel so the West could splice into security telephone lines and listen in on top-level Communist conversations. It was an agent of Gehlen's who secured for the CIA the copy of Nikita Khrushchev's secret speech to Communist Party members which denounced Joseph Stalin. Gehlen also obtained information in advance of the Six-Day War in the Middle East in 1967. There were failures. Gehlen did not warn the West that the Berlin wall would be built. (He did say in his memoirs that he had reported that the Soviets would quickly move to prevent the mass exodus of East Germans to the West and that they were stockpiling building materials.) A significant defection, that of Hans Joachim Geyer in 1953, caused dozens of Gehlen's East German informants to be compromised.

Throughout the 1950s and 1960s, Gehlen expanded his organization until he became the most powerful man in Europe. His agents operated in the U.S., England, France, in the Middle East (working with both the Egyptian secret service and Israel's Mossad). Then, in 1963, disaster struck the Gehlen Organization. Heinz Felfe, who had worked for Gehlen for more than a decade as an agent, was exposed as being a double agent who was really a mole in the employ of the Soviets. The scandal broke over the head of one of Gehlen's most ardent sponsors (who called him "my dear General",) who was compelled to resign, the venerable Chancellor of Germany Konrad Adenauer. Reinhardt Gehlen, whose prestige had been dishonored, would continue at his post for another five years. He retired in 1968, replaced by one of his old subordinates, Lieutenant General Gerhard Wessel. Eleven years later Reinhardt Gehlen died of natural causes. He is remembered today as the spymaster's spymaster one of the greatest intelligence chiefs in history. [26]

Bull Shit! He is still alive today. The C.I.A. is still protecting him & his alleged alias is Hank Janowicz. He lives in Wayne, NJ. CIA Admits Long Relationship With WWII SS Nazi : General Reinhardt Gehlen

By Maria Alvarez - The New York Post 9-24-00

COLLEGE PARK, Md. (UPI) - The Central Intelligence Agency has for the first time confirmed that a high-ranking Nazi general placed his anti-Soviet spy ring at the disposal of the United States during the early days of the Cold War. The National Archives said in a release Wednesday that the CIA had filed an affidavit in U.S. District Court "acknowledging an intelligence relationship with German General Reinhardt Gehlen that it has kept secret for 50 years."

"The CIA's announcement marks the first acknowledgement by that agency that it had any relationship with Gehlen and opens the way for declassification of records about the relationship," the National Archives said. Gehlen was Hitler's senior intelligence officer on the Eastern Front during the war and transferred his expertise and contacts to the U.S. as World War II reached its climax. While Gehlen's relationship with U.S. intelligence during the 1940s and 1950s has been the topic of some five books over the years, the eventual release of CIA documents pertaining to the development of his European spy ring could shed new light on the origins of the Cold War and early U.S. espionage efforts against Moscow.

Gehlen's network of agents in Europe - including many with Nazi backgrounds who were bailed out of prisoner of war camps by U.S. intelligence officers - was known as the Gehlen Organization and received millions of dollars in funding from the U.S. until 1956. The CIA's acknowledgement of its dealings with Gehlen came in a response to an appeal of a Freedom of Information Act request by researcher Carl Oglesby, the National Archives said. The agency pledged to release its records on the general in accordance with the Nazi War Crimes Disclosure Act. The Act established the Nazi War Criminal Records Interagency Working Group (IWG), which for more than two years has been declassifying documents related to World War II war crimes and releasing them through the National Archives. "This shows that the law is working," said former Rep. Elizabeth Holtzman, a member of the IWG. "We now must work closely with the Agency to follow through with the release of these records." [29]

CIA Declassifies Its Records On Dealings With Ex-Nazis

Documents May Give Clues About Obstacles in Hunt for War Criminals
By George Lardner Jr.
Washington Post Staff Writer
Sunday, March 18, 2001; Page A04

The CIA is finally getting around to declassifying the records of its dealings with former Nazi spies after World War II. It says it has found 251 boxes and 2,901 file folders of potentially relevant documents -- apparently more than 250,000 pages -- and that it will take about two years to complete work on them. Carl Oglesby, a political writer and researcher, has been seeking the records since 1985 in connection with a study of Reinhardt Gehlen, a German general who had been head of Nazi intelligence for the eastern front. After the war, at the request of U.S. occupation forces in Europe, he set up "the Gehlen organization," a counterespionage network that supplied the Pentagon and the CIA with the bulk of their intelligence on the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe. The organization, which employed thousands of people, many of them former Nazis, was the forerunner of West Germany's secret service, the BND. It was formally recognized in 1956 and Gehlen headed it until he retired in 1968. When Oglesby got only a smattering of documents from the Army and the CIA, he sued in 1987, emphasizing meetings that Gehlen held in the summer of 1945 with U.S. officials at Fort Hunt, Va. He and some other researchers believe that the post-war hunt for Nazi war criminals was severely compromised by American intelligence demands for help in meeting the new Soviet menace.

A retired CIA official who dealt with Gehlen's organization for seven years says those suspicions have been exaggerated into conspiratorial nonsense and that Gehlen and his top aides came out of the German army general staff that tried, several times, to overthrow Adolf Hitler. But he, too, expressed frustration that so much of the true story remains classified. "I've lived with this for 50 years," said James H. Critchfield, the CIA officer assigned to the Gehlen organization from 1949 to 1956. "Almost everything negative that has been written about Gehlen, in which he has been described as an ardent ex-Nazi, one of Hitler's war criminals -- this is all far from the fact." Critchfield said CIA records may turn up the names of six to 10 veterans of the SD, Gestapo chief Heinrich Himmler's intelligence service, who joined Gehlen's network in 1950. But he said Gehlen took them on reluctantly, under pressure from German Chancellor Konrad Adenauer to deal with "the avalanche of subversion hitting them from East Germany. "By contrast, Critchfield said, Gehlen's top command consisted of 30 to 40 young staff officers trained under Gen. Ludwig Beck, who was executed in 1944 for conspiring to assassinate Hitler, and Gen. Franz Halder, who was imprisoned until the war ended. "They weren't really a bunch of Nazis," he said.

Oglesby's lawsuit sputtered for 13 years with the CIA refusing to confirm or deny that it had any records reflecting a relation- ship with Gehlen. The litigation survived two trips to the U.S. Court of Appeals here, but last August, Chief U.S. District Judge Norma Holloway Johnson issued an order indicating she was about to dismiss it at the government's request. She rejected the idea that the CIA or any other agency had "unreasonably delayed" the case. Weeks later, the CIA formally acknowledged that Gehlen had at the end of the war turned over what remained of his intelligence collection efforts against the Soviet Union and started spying for the United States; the Army "supervised" his work until 1949, when the CIA stepped in for a seven-year stint.

The CIA told the court it was compelled to speak up in response to the Nazi War Crimes Disclosure Act, which Congress passed in 1998 to require public release of U.S. records related to war criminals and crimes committed by the Nazi government and its allies between March 1933, when Hitler acquired dictatorial powers, and May 1945, when the war in Europe ended. "General Gehlen himself is not considered an alleged Nazi war criminal," the CIA said in an affidavit, but records of its dealings with him and his group include documents that are covered by the law. The Army's dealings with Gehlen's group were chaotic at first, with the Army's counter-intelligence corps frozen out of the operation. Critchfield said there may have been some imprudent contacts with German war criminals early on, particularly while Gehlen was being debriefed in Virginia. In the fall of 1948, the CIA assigned Critchfield to report on whether to liquidate the operation or take it over.

With the Berlin airlift in full swing, Critchfield found a station Gehlen had organized near Wiesbaden, manned by 12 Germans intercepting Soviet Air Force voice traffic. U.S. Air Force officials told him that this was "the only real-time intelligence" they were getting about Soviet air operations during the tense period. Critchfield told CIA headquarters "it would be absolutely irresponsible to terminate this" and urged that it be kept going. A cable came back telling him "your recommendations are approved." Asked how many Nazi war criminals there were within Gehlen's organization at any point, Critchfield said the answer will depend on the definition used by the Interagency Working Group charged with administering the disclosure act. For instance, the Nuremberg war crimes tribunal declared the SD a criminal organization, making membership in it a crime, but Critchfield said German de-Nazification courts subsequently came to insist on evidence of individual criminal activity as well. However, he said he expects that the working group will want to keep the definition "as broad as they can." [30]

SS-Hauptsturmfuhrer Alois Brunner was "allegedly" born in Austria in 1912. His anti-Semitism was considered to be so extreme that he was swiftly tapped to be Adolf Eichmann's private secretary. As head of the Nazi's Jewish affairs office in prewar Vienna, he organized persecution that forced thousands of Jews to flee to other European countries and the United States. When World War II started, he sent 47,000 Austrian Jews to concentration camps. After organizing mass roundups in Berlin, he transferred to Greece, where he was responsible for deporting all 43,000 Jews in Salonika within just two months. In June 1943, he was sent to France to take over the Drancy transit camp near Paris from its French administrators. During 14 months in France, Brunner sent an estimated 25,000 men, women and children to their deaths. SS-Hauptsturmfuhrer Brunner transported the children of Izieu to Auschwitz. One of the most wanted of all war criminals, Brunner was responsible for the killing of thousands of Jews.

He was often sent by Eichmann as a troubleshooter to areas such as France to expedite the Final Solution, the killings of 6 million Jews. After World War II, Alois Brunner found gainful employment courtesy of Reinhardt Gehlen and the CIA. Gehlen, Hitler's top anti-Soviet spy, surrendered to the Americans and offered his services. CIA took the bait and Gehlen re-established his spy organization, and enlisted thousands of Gestapo, Wehrmacht and SS veterans. During the Cold War Gehlen's network of agents received millions of dollars in funding from the U.S. From 1956-68, Reinhardt Gehlen was Germany's Chief of Federal Intelligence Service. Later Brunner escaped to Syria where he became a government adviser. To this day Alois Brunner - now 87 - has successfully evaded capture. He is believed to live in Damascus using the alias Dr. George Fischer, though in December 1999, there were unconfirmed reports that he had died in 1996 and was buried in a Damascus cemetery. With the release of Adolf Eichmann's memoirs, Alois Brunner, whom Eichmann once called his "best man," is again in the news. Brunner was already sentenced to death in absentia in France in 1953 and 1954; more recently, a new suit was filed there based on his sending children to Auschwitz. Previous attempts to persuade Syria to release Brunner failed. Germany applied for his extradition in 1987, and in 1991 the European Parliament voted to condemn Syria for continuing to harbor the alleged war criminal. In 1995 German State prosecutors in Cologne and Frankfurt posted a $333,000 reward for information leading to the arrest of the last leading Nazi still believed to be on the loose. In 2000 rumors were circulating that Poland was preparing to seek the extradition of Alois Brunner. Until now the Syrians have ignored all attempts to extradite him, including those by Nazi hunter, Simon Wiesenthal, but apparently moods are changing in Syria. Brunner was interviewed about 15 years ago in the Austrian news magazine Bunte. He said his one regret was that he hadn't murdered more Jews. In 1987 in a telephone interview he told the Chicago Sun Times: "The Jews deserved to die. I have no regrets. If I had the chance I would do it again.." [31]

He lived at: 175 Georgetown Woods Dr.
Youngsville, N.C. 27596
Home Phone: 919-556-0467

Walter Rauff was one of the most despicable & evilest of all the SS Nazis, next to Bush, Mengele, Brunner, Bormann, Eichman, Gehlen and Hirt. He was directly responsible for creating "mobile, poison gas-filled killing vans." He would drive around the ghettos of Poland, in his Nazi custom built FORD van where Jews, "Pols", elderly, and the handicapped were forced by the SS Nazi Gestapo agents into the back of these mobile killing vans. When they were all in the back of the van, the doors were closed and locked, a pipe from the van's exhaust was diverted into a hole in the van's floor where carbon dioxide gas was from the van's engine was pumped into the back until all occupants were dead. Rauff was directly responsible for the deaths of at least 700,000 – 1,000,000+ innocent Jews and Pols.[33]

At the end of WWII, the C.I.A., and the Red Cross helped him and his millions of stolen Jewish Holocaust money escape to Argentina as they had done with all of their Nazis. The Vatican then took over and hid Rauff as they hid Hitler for several years in a local church in Buenos Aires. With help from the Vatican and the C.I.A. he faked his own death in 1984. The C.I.A. helped fake the deaths of all of its SS Nazis'. I have not been able to locate any WWII photos of Walter Rauff. The C.I.A. has destroyed Rauff's photos' as they did with SS Nazi doctor – August Hirt's. The C.I.A.'s censor Nazis' wrote the books about Nazi war criminals living today. Most of these books do not even mention nor do they provide photos of Nazis who are alive today. Brunner, Gehlen, Rauff, Hirt are not even mentioned in most books about Nazi war criminals. All of Rauff's C.I.A. SS Nazi comrades are still alive.

August Hirt: Hitler & C.I.A.’s 2nd Most Beloved SS Nazi Doctor The Human Head Collector”

SS Nazi Dr. Hirt’s “Spare Parts” SS Nazi Doctor August Hirt aka: Frank Hirt The Holocaust Did Happen!!!

He lived directly across the street from Otto Skorzeny in Boynton Beach, Florida.

(Born 1898 – Died 11/2001)

Shrunken Head

The Holocaust Did Happen!!!

Hirt was a professor at the University of Strasbourg. He collected & “shrunk” the human heads of "Jewish-Bolshevik prisoners" to do "important" anthropological and anatomical studies. (Fischner,1995). Hirt was also a practicing surgeon assigned by Himmler to find an antidote for mustard gas. He prepared cyanide salts to kill Auschwitz prisoners and was an assistant on the Strasbourg project. He experimented on people and dogs as well as on himself. During World War II, a number of German physicians conducted painful and often deadly experiments on thousands of concentration camp prisoners without their consent. Unethical medical experimentation carried out during the Third Reich may be divided into three categories. The first category consists of experiments aimed at facilitating the survival of Axis military personnel. In Dachau, physicians from the German air force and from the German Experimental Institution for Aviation conducted high-altitude experiments, using a low-pressure chamber, to determine the maximum altitude from which crews of damaged aircraft could parachute to safety. Scientists there carried out so-called freezing experiments using prisoners to find an effective treatment for hypothermia. They also used prisoners to test various methods of making seawater potable.

The second category of experimentation aimed at developing and testing pharmaceuticals and treatment methods for injuries and illnesses which German military and occupation personnel encountered in the field. At the German concentration camps of Sachsenhausen, Dachau, Natzweiler, Buchenwald, and Neuengamme, scientists tested immunization compounds and sera for the prevention and treatment of contagious diseases, including malaria, typhus, tuberculosis, typhoid fever, yellow fever, and infectious hepatitis. The Ravensbrueck camp was the site of bone-grafting experiments and experiments to test the efficacy of newly developed sulfa (sulfanilamide) drugs. At Natzweiler and Sachsenhausen, prisoners were subjected to phosgene and mustard gas in order to test possible antidotes.

The third category of medical experimentation sought to advance the racial and ideological tenets of the Nazi worldview. The most infamous were the experiments of Josef Mengele at Auschwitz. Mengele conducted medical experiments on twins. He also directed serological experiments on Roma (Gypsies), as did Werner Fischer at Sachsenhausen, in order to determine how different "races" withstood various contagious diseases. The research of August Hirt at Strasbourg University also intended to establish "Jewish racial inferiority." Experiments were conducted under army auspices throughout the war. In March 1944, however, HITLER ordered Karl Brandt to intensify medical research on the effects of chemical warfare. At the same time, Dr. August Hirt was conducting experiments in this field, on a larger scale, at the Ganzweiler camp; of the 220 persons he used as subjects, 50 died as a result.

In 1942, SS-Hauptsturmführer Prof. Dr. August Hirt, chairman of the anatomy department at the Reich University in Strasburg, set about assembling a collection of Jewish skeletons under the auspices of the Ahnenerbe Foundation. To this end, he received permission from Himmler to select the required number of prisoners at Auschwitz Concentration Camp. The selection of 115 persons (79 Jewish men, 30 Jewish women, 2 Poles, and 4 "Asians"--probably Soviet POWs) and the preliminary preparation, consisting of biometrical measurements and the collection of personal data, were carried out by Hirt's collaborator, SS-Hauptsturmführer Dr. Bruno Berger, who arrived in Auschwitz in the first half of 1943. Berger finished his work by June 15, 1943.

After going through quarantine, some of the prisoners whom Berger selected were sent in July and early August to Natzweiler- Struthof Concentration Camp, where they were killed in the gas chamber. The victims' corpses were sent to Hirt as material for his skeleton collection, which was intended for use in anthropological studies that would demonstrate the superiority of the Nordic race.[35]

Belsen Concentration Camp's "Body Pit" Cold Water Submersion "Torture Test" Jewish Corpses Being Burned

According to Skorzeny, August Hirt and his closest SS Nazi C.I.A. comrades, Dr. Josef Mengele aka: Steve Rabel, & Walter Rauff aka: George Pfaff drove around Florida to different mailboxes and mailed anthrax spores to the unsuspecting public, while reminiscing about their good ole' Nazi days. Then they took a "road trip" to visit their comrade Reinhardt Gehlen aka: Hank Janowicz in Wayne, NJ. While driving along Rt. 206 in Princeton, NJ they mailed more anthrax. They picked Princeton because that is where the famous inventor Albert Einstein spent most of his later years. The Nazis did not like Einstein because he was helping America try "in vain" to win WWII. It's a tradition for old, dying SS Nazi assholes to conduct a random act of terror or violence to display their discontent & hatred for mankind. The old, dying SS Nazi assholes "sow" their seeds of hatred for mankind by mailing deadly spores or mail bombs to the unsuspecting public. It's their "cowardly" way of saying one last "Up Yours" to Mankind & the World before they quietly die!

When SS Nazi doctor August Hirt aka: Frank Hirt died in November 2001, the anthrax mailings stopped. More severe attacks will happen unless Mengele and his Brotherhood of Aryan Nations neo-Nazi, New World Order C.I.A. supported terrorist comrades are caught and convicted.[36] This photo of August Hirt was given directly to me by Otto Skorzeny. The C.I.A. destroyed all WWII photos of Hirt as it did with Walter Rauff's WWII photos. I assure you that this photo is not just some old man sweeping the sidewalk. The C.I.A. knows that these SS Nazis mailed the anthrax because they are the ones who ordered them to do it! The C.I.A. is directly responsible for the 911 attacks as well!

National Archives and Records Administration News Release

Opening of CIA Records under Nazi War Crimes Disclosure Act

The Nazi War Crimes and Japanese Imperial Government Records Interagency Working Group (IWG) announces the opening and public availability of Central Intelligence Agency files on 381 individuals and subjects associated with Nazi war crimes or war criminals. The CIA recently declassified these files under the Nazi War Crimes Disclosure Act (PL 105-246). They are available for researchers at the National Archives' College Park, Maryland facility, at 8601 Adelphi Road. Under the auspices of the IWG, the CIA has reviewed and declassified "Name Files" of many Nazi figures and related subjects, including the files on Walter Schellenberg (Head of the Reich Security Main Office Foreign Intelligence Service) and Otto Skorzeny (Hitler's favorite commando, having snatched Mussolini from captivity).

The files also provide new insight into such individuals as Walther Rauff, Krunoslav Dragonovic, and Reinhardt Gehlen. (Highlighted below.) The IWG website (www.nara.gov/iwg) provides a full list of the names and subjects, including the 20 CIA Name Files released in April 2001. Walther Rauff - The CIA's name file on Walther (Walter) Rauff, one of Nazi Germany's notorious war criminals, contains some new information about Rauff's wartime efforts and detailed, if unconfirmed, reports about his postwar travels and career. As an official of the Criminal Technical Institute of the Reich Security Main Office, Rauff designed gas vans used to poison Jews and persons with disabilities. He later was involved in persecution of Jews in North Africa, and there is a postwar report in the file that he tried to arrange the extermination of Jews in Egypt during late 1942. Near the end of the war Rauff, then an SS and police official in northern Italy, tried to gain credit for the surrender of German forces in Italy, but ended up only surrendering himself. After escaping from an American internment camp in Italy, Rauff hid in a number of Italian convents, apparently under the protection of Bishop Alois Hudel.

In 1948 he was recruited by Syrian intelligence and went to Damascus, (only to fall out of favor after a coup there a year later). According to one report, he tortured Jews in Syria. He and his family then settled in Ecuador, later shifting to Chile, where he may have served in Chilean intelligence. CIA officials could not determine Rauff's exact position. In any case, the government of General Augusto Pinochet resisted all calls for his extradition to stand trial in West Germany, and he died peacefully in southern Chile in 1984.

Krunoslav Draganovic - Father Krunoslav Draganovic was a Franciscan priest who actively served the Nazi satellite regime in Croatia, which was responsible for the deaths of between 330,000 and 390,000 orthodox Serbs and about 32,000 Jews. Following the war, Draganovic facilitated the escape of numerous Croatian war criminals to South America via the College of Saint Jerome in Rome. From 1959 to 1962, especially tense years in the Cold War, Father Draganovic worked as a spy for US Army intelligence against the Yugoslav regime. Draganovic's CIA file shows the Agency's skepticism regarding Draganovic's reliability-- skepticism that resulted in the termination of his employment with the U.S. Army.

Reinhardt Gehlen - This release includes a substantial collection of high-level documents on the origins and first years of the relationship between General Major Reinhardt Gehlen and the United States Government. As Nazi Germany collapsed, Gehlen turned himself in to the U.S. Army. During the war he had led the Fremde Heeren Ost, the intelligence unit that collected and analyzed information on the Eastern Front for Hitler and the Wehrmacht. In the summer of 1945 Gehlen offered to continue the same work for the United States.

Much has already been written on the 25-year relationship that ensued when American officials accepted Gehlen's offer; but these documents detail the complexity of that relationship as well as the strategic gamble made by the United States in sponsoring the rebirth of Gehlen's wartime organization. The U.S. Army remained Gehlen's sponsor until 1949, when the Central Intelligence Agency, after much internal debate, took over as Gehlen's main patron. According to one CIA official, though Gehlen was "chiefly motivated by a desire for personal success" and would not be "an American or Allied puppet in office," he was "sincerely interested in harmonious cooperation between the Germans and the Western Allies."

Gehlen ultimately became the first head of the Bundesnarichtensdient (BND), the West German foreign intelligence service, and relations between the BND and CIA were good. But, as these documents illustrate, the relationship entailed certain problems. In building his organization, Gehlen recruited some former members of the SS. Besides the troubling moral issues involved, these recruitments opened the West German government, and by extension the United States, to penetration by the Soviet intelligence services.

Among these new documents is a formerly classified two-volume CIA history "Forging an Intelligence Partnership: CIA and the Origins of the BND, 1945-49." The history is a compilation of key documents on the U.S relationship with Gehlen and his organization in the early postwar period. Besides this history, material includes the name files of some of Gehlen's associates, including the former SS officer Heinz Felfe, who was exposed as a Soviet mole in 1963. Since 1999, the IWG has overseen the identification, declassification review, and release of formerly classified U. S. Government records as required by the Nazi War Crimes Disclosure Act. Under the auspices of the IWG, U.S. Government agencies have declassified nearly 5 million pages to date. [37]

Anthrax Attacks' "Work of Neo-Nazis "

War on Terrorism: Observer Special
Ed Vulliamy in New York, Sunday October 28, 2001

Neo-Nazi extremists within the US are behind the deadly wave of anthrax attacks against America, according to latest briefings from the security services and Justice Department. Experts on 'survivalist' groups and extreme-right 'Aryan' militants have been drafted into the investigation as the focus shifts away from possible links with the 11 September terrorists or even possible state backers such as Iraq. 'We've been zeroing in on a number of hate groups, especially one on the West Coast,' a source at the Justice Department told The Observer yesterday. 'We've certainly not discounted the possibility that they may be involved.' The anthrax crisis, which grew last week, had by Friday night spread to mailrooms at CIA headquarters, the Supreme Court and a hospital, and yesterday three traces were found in an office building serving the US Capitol. 'There are a number of strong leads, and some people we know well that we are looking at,' the Justice Department said. 'These are groups organized into militia and "survivalist" movements - which pull out of society and take to the hills to make war on the government, and who will support anyone else making war on the government.' Investigators are examining threatening letters sent to media organizations - some dated before the September 11 attacks - which did not contain anthrax but contained similar messages and handwriting style as those which later did. The theory is that the anthrax attacks were planned - and the killer germ was obtained and treated - long before the carnage of September 11.

Speaking to The Observer yesterday, the Justice Department official said: 'We have to see the right wing as much better coordinated than its apparent disorganization suggests. And we have to presume that their opposition to government is just as virulent as that of the Islamic terrorists, if not as accomplished. 'But that is, in its way, one of the most compelling possible leads in the anthrax trail - that it is not really Al-Qaeda's style, but rather that of others who sympathize with its war against the American government and media.' The official said the investigation had, in the past week, drafted in special teams from the Civil Rights division of the department to reinforce the international terrorism teams. The American neo-Nazi Right is motivated above all by its loathing of the federal government, which it believes is selling out the homeland to a 'New World Order' run by masons and Jews. It's insane politics have propelled numerous attacks and armed stand-offs over the past eight years, culminating in the carnage at Oklahoma. Now the anthrax investigation is zooming in on possible connections between these neo-Nazis and Arab extremists, united by their mutual anti-Semitism and hatred of Israel. Such alliances have been common among neo-Nazis in Europe, but have played a lesser role in the US. However, monitoring of the hate groups shows they are now embracing Al-Qaeda's terrorism as commendable attacks on the federal government.

Rabbi Abraham Cooper of the Simon Wiesenthal center in Los Angeles said that at a meeting in Lebanon this year, US neo-Nazis were represented alongside Islamic militants. 'There's a great solidarity with the point of view of the Bin Ladens of the world,' said Mark Potok of the Southern Poverty Law Center, which monitors the far right. 'These people wouldn't let their daughters near an Arab, but they are certainly making common cause on an ideological level. They see the same enemy: American culture and multiculturalism.' Neo-Nazi websites, including the largest umbrella organization, the Nation- al Alliance, show support for Al-Qaeda. Billy Roper, the alliance's membership coordinator posted a message within hours of the September 11 attacks, reading: 'Anyone who is willing to drive a plane into a building to kill Jews is all right by me.

I wish our members had half as much testicular fortitude.' Another group, Aryan Action, praised the attacks of 11 September, saying: 'Either you're fighting with the Jews against Al-Qaeda or you support Al-Qaeda fighting against the Jews.' Others outwardly support the anthrax mailing. One message, entitled 'No Sympathy for the Devil', was posted in several chat rooms by right-winger Grant Bruer, whose racist writings are circulated among supremacist groups. It reads: 'Is there not a single person who has received these anthrax letters that isn't an avowed enemy of the white race? Tom Brokaw, Tom Daschle and the gossip rag offices have all been 100 percent legitimate targets. Who among us has the slightest bit of sympathy for these pukes?' Right-wing groups have had an interest in anthrax and other biological agents. A member of the Aryan Nation group once bragged he had a stash of anthrax from digging up a field where cows had died of the disease in the 1950s. Larry Wayne Harris was arrested after trying to obtain three vials of bubonic plague from a mail-order science company.

The trail leading investigators to groups from the domestic ultra-right - rather than the Al-Qaeda terror network - comes as a dramatic twist in the confused crisis. Last week, parallel evidence appeared to be linking the now rampant anthrax attacks to another trail: leading from Iraq and through the Czech Republic, with Al-Qaeda militants as the likely couriers. The shift in the investigation echoes that which followed America's other infamous terrorist attack: the destruction of the federal government building in Oklahoma City in 1995. The bombing was initially thought to be the work of Arab extremists, but turned out to be the work of the Aryan supremacists. Anthrax attacks' 'work of neo-Nazis '[38]

The Anthrax Letter That Was Mailed to Tom Brokaw. C.I.A./Nazi, Flat Head Eagle Symbol
Dr. Josef Mengele is the Zodiac Killer & the "real" Boston Strangler. He mailed the anthrax in 2001. The F.B.I. is protecting him. The Anthrax Letters of 2001 & the 911 attacks were ordered by the C.I.A. The C.I.A.'s SS Nazis: Josef Mengele, Walter Rauff, & August Hirt are the ones who mailed the anthrax letters.[39] It's a tradition for old, dying SS Nazi assholes to conduct a random act of terror or violence to display their discontent & hatred for mankind. The old, dying SS Nazi assholes "sow" their seeds of hatred for mankind by mailing deadly spores or mail bombs to the unsuspecting public. It's their "cowardly" way of saying one last "Up Yours" to Mankind & the World before they quietly die! The C.I.A., F.B.I. and the U.S. Postal Service know that these Nazis sent the deadly letters but refuse to do anything about it so Bush Jr. can pursue a phony war against foreign terrorists that do not exist to steal their oil and pass laws that take away our American Freedoms such as the Un-American Patriot Act and "Gestapo-like" Homeland Security Act, et al... The C.I.A. is really Hitler's Third Reich of Nazis in America. They must be stopped from creating a Fourth Reich or New World Order in America.

On March 21, 2003 I delivered color photos of Josef Mengele from 1/2002 with a large anthrax sore on his hand and other evidence to "famed" West Palm Beach, Florida Attorney R. Schuler. He is the one who is trying in vain to sue the U.S. Government for 50 million dollars on behalf of the widow of Robert Stevens who was killed by one of the anthrax letters that was sent to AMI of Boca Raton, Florida. Mr. Schuler or his associates destroyed the evidence that I gave him that would have helped him win his case against the Government! I, ORION, personally contacted the U.S. Justice Dept. – O.S.I. several times about the names and locations of the SS Nazi terrorist anthrax mailers. I requested a meeting so I could show them my photos and present my evidence. I was told that according to the information the C.I.A. provided, all of the Nazis are dead. End of story. They refused to meet with me. Then the "honorable" U.S. Justice Dept. tipped off the Nazis, & warned them that I was on to them. There have been several attempts on my life since then. Eli Rosenbaum, Bruce Schwartz, the entire U.S. Justice Department O.S.I., the C.I.A., F.B.I. & Bush Administration are helping & hiding Nazi war criminals in direct violation of The Federal Nazi War Criminal Act of 1998.

Our Government knows that SS Nazi New World Order C.I.A. agents are the brains behind The Brotherhood of Aryan Nations "organized crime" hate group and are the ones that mailed the anthrax. However, the Government is protecting them while denying that they exist. Why? Because Germany never surrendered & for their stolen holocaust money & stolen Tesla Technology that's why! The C.I.A. is really Hitler's Fourth Reich of Nazis in America.

New World Order Nazi Republican Crook, Liar, Anti-Semite & U.S. President; Richard "Tricky Dick" Nixon Meets Elvis "The King" Presley.

Of all the requests made each year to the National Archives for reproductions of photographs and documents, one item has been requested more than any other. That item, more requested than the Bill of Rights or even the Constitution of the United States, is the photograph of Elvis Presley and Richard M. Nixon shaking hands on the occasion of Presley's visit to the White House.

On December 21, 1970, Elvis Presley paid a visit to President Richard M. Nixon at the White House in Washington, D.C. The meeting was initiated by Presley, who wrote Nixon a six page letter requesting a visit with the President and suggested that he be made a "Federal Agent-at-Large" in the Bureau of Narcotics and Dangerous Drugs. The events leading up to and after the meeting are detailed in the documentation and photographs included here, which include Presley's hand- written letter, memoranda from Nixon and aides, and a thank you note from Nixon for the gifts (including a Colt 45 and family photos) that Presley brought with him to the Oval Office. These materials chronicling the Presley-Nixon meeting were obtained from the Nixon Presidential Materials Project at the National Archives at College Park (College Park, Maryland).[41]

No one ever claimed Elvis's life insurance policy. His coffin weighed more than 800 pounds. The coffin had a commercial air conditioner in it to help prevent the wax dummy of Elvis from melting. The wax dummy's sideburns' fell off and had to be crazy glued in place. Elvis's middle name is misspelled on the monument that marks his grave. He spelled his middle name "Aron" not "Aaron." Elvis's death certificate claims that his body weighed 170 lbs. and was 5'8" tall. Elvis weighed more than 250 lbs. and was taller than 6'. Did the C.I.A. help Elvis fake his death?
Yes, "ORION"- T.C.B.!

Fact: It is not a crime in the United States of America to fake your own death as long as no one recovers any insurance money from it!

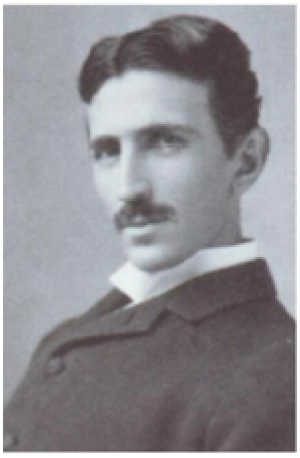
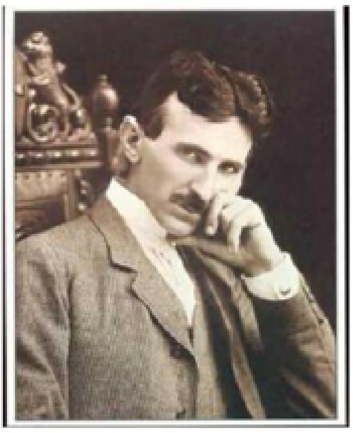
Dr. Nikola Tesla – "The Greatest Inventor Who ever Lived"





Dr. Nikola Tesla age 39. Tesla

With His Giant Sized Coil. Dr. Nikola Tesla

Nikola Tesla was born at precisely midnight between July 9/10,1856, in the village of Smiljan, province of Lika (Austria-Hungary). His father, the Reverend Milutin Tesla, was a Serbian-Orthodox priest; his mother, Djuka (Mandich), was unschooled but highly intelligent. Both families came originally from western Serbia and for generations had sent their sons to serve Church or Army and their daughters to marry ministers or officers. A dreamer with a poetic touch, as he matured, Tesla added to these earlier qualities those of self-discipline and a desire for precision. Training for an engineering career, he attended the Technical University of Graz, Austria, and the University of Prague (1879-1880).

At Graz he first saw the Gramme dynamo, which operated as a generator and, when reversed, became an electric motor; and he conceived a way to use alternating current to advantage. His first employment was in a government telegraph engineering office in Budapest, where he made his first invention, a telephone repeater. Later, he visualized the principle of the rotating magnetic field and developed plans for an induction motor that would become his first step toward the successful utilization of alternating current. In 1882 Tesla went to work in Paris for the Continental Edison Company, and while on assignment to Strasbourg in 1883, he constructed, in after-work hours, his first induction motor. Tesla sailed to America in 1884, arriving in New York City with four cents in his pocket, a few of his own poems, and calculations for a flying machine. He first found employment with Thomas Edison in New Jersey, but the two inventors, were far apart in background and methods, and their separation was inevitable.

In May 1885, George Westinghouse, head of the Westinghouse Electric Company in Pittsburgh, bought the patent rights to Tesla's polyphase system of alternating-current dynamos, transformers, and motors. The transaction precipitated a titanic power struggle between Edison's direct-current systems and the Tesla-Westinghouse alternating-current approach, which eventually won out. After a difficult period, during which Tesla invented but lost his rights to an arc-lighting system, he established his own laboratory in New York City in 1887, where his inventive mind could be given free rein. He experimented with shadow graphs similar to those that later were to be used by Wilhelm Röntgen when he discovered X-rays in 1895. Tesla's countless experiments included work on a carbon button lamp, on the power of electrical resonance, and on various types of lighting. Tesla gave exhibitions in his laboratory in which he lighted lamps without wires by allowing electricity to flow through his body, to allay fears of alternating current. He was often invited to lecture at home and abroad.

The Tesla coil, which he invented in 1891, is widely used today in radio and television sets and other electronic equipment for wireless communication. That year also marked the date of Tesla's United States citizenship. Brilliant and eccentric, Tesla was then at the peak of his inventive powers. He produced in rapid succession the induction motor (utilizing his rotating magnetic field principle) and other electrical motors, new forms of generators and transformers, and a system of alternating-current power transmission. Tesla also invented fluorescent lights and a new type of steam turbine, and he became increasingly intrigued with the wireless transmission of power.

A controversy between alternating current and direct current advocates raged in 1880s and 1890s, featuring Tesla and Edison as leaders in the rival camps. The advantages of the polyphase alternating-current system, as developed by Tesla, soon became apparent, however, particularly for long-distance power transmission. Westinghouse used Tesla's system to light the World Columbian Exposition at Chicago in 1893. His success was a factor in winning him the contract to install the first power machinery at Niagara Falls, which bore Tesla's name and patent numbers. The project carried power to Buffalo by 1896. In 1898 Tesla announced his invention of a tele-automatic boat guided by remote control. When skepticism was voiced, Tesla proved his claims for it before a crowd in Madison Square Garden.

Tesla’s Wireless Light Bulb

Tesla’s Wireless Light Bulb

In Colorado Springs, where he stayed from May 1899 until early 1900, Tesla made what he regarded as his most important discovery - terrestrial stationary waves. By this discovery he proved that the earth could be used as a conductor and would be as responsive as a tuning fork to electrical vibrations of a certain pitch. He also lighted 200 lamps without wires from a distance of 25 miles (40 kilometers) and created man-made lightning, producing flashes measuring 135 feet (41 meters). At one time he was certain he had received signals from another planet in his Colorado laboratory, a claim that was met with derision in some scientific journals. Returning to New York in 1900, Tesla began construction on Long Island of a wireless world broadcasting tower, with $150,000 capital from the U.S. financier J. Pierpont Morgan. Tesla claimed he secured the loan by assigning 51 percent of his patent rights of telephony and telegraphy to Morgan. He expected to provide worldwide communication and to furnish facilities for s ending pictures, messages, weather warnings, and stock reports. The project was abandoned because of a financial panic, labor troubles, and Morgan's withdrawal of support. It was Tesla's greatest defeat.

Tesla's Towers' For Transmitting Wireless Electricity

Tesla's work shifted to turbines and other projects. Because of a lack of funds, his ideas remained in his notebooks, which are still examined by engineers for unexploited clues. In 1915 he was severely disappointed when a report that he and Edison were to share the Nobel Prize proved erroneous. Tesla was the recipient of the Edison Medal in 1917, the highest honor that the American Institute of Electrical Engineers could bestow.

Tesla's Friends'; Mark Twain & Robert Underwood Johnson "playing" in his Laboratory.

Dr. Nikola Tesla With His Giant Coil

Tesla allowed himself only a few close friends. Among them were the writers Robert Underwood Johnson, Mark Twain, and Francis Marion Crawford. He was quite impractical in financial matters. An eccentric, driven by compulsions and a progressive germ phobia, Tesla had a way of intuitively sensing hidden scientific secrets and employing his inventive talent to prove his hypotheses. He was a godsend to reporters who sought sensational copy, but a problem to editors who were uncertain how seriously his futuristic prophecies should be regarded.

Caustic criticism greeted his speculations concerning communication with other planets, his assertions that he could split the earth like an apple, and his claim to having invented a death ray capable of destroying 10,000 airplanes, 250 miles (400 kilometers) distant. Tesla demanded much of his employees but inspired their loyalty. Though he admired intellectual and beautiful women, he had no time to become involved. Tesla died in New York City on January 7, 1943, the holder of more than 700 patents. The Custodian of Alien Property impounded his trunks, which held his papers, his diplomas and other honors, his letters, and his laboratory notes. These were eventually inherited by Tesla's nephew, Sava Kosanovich, and later housed in the Nikola Tesla Museum, Belgrade, Yugoslavia Hundreds filed into New York City's Cathedral of St. John the Divine for his funeral services, and a flood of messages acknowledged the loss of a great genius.[42]

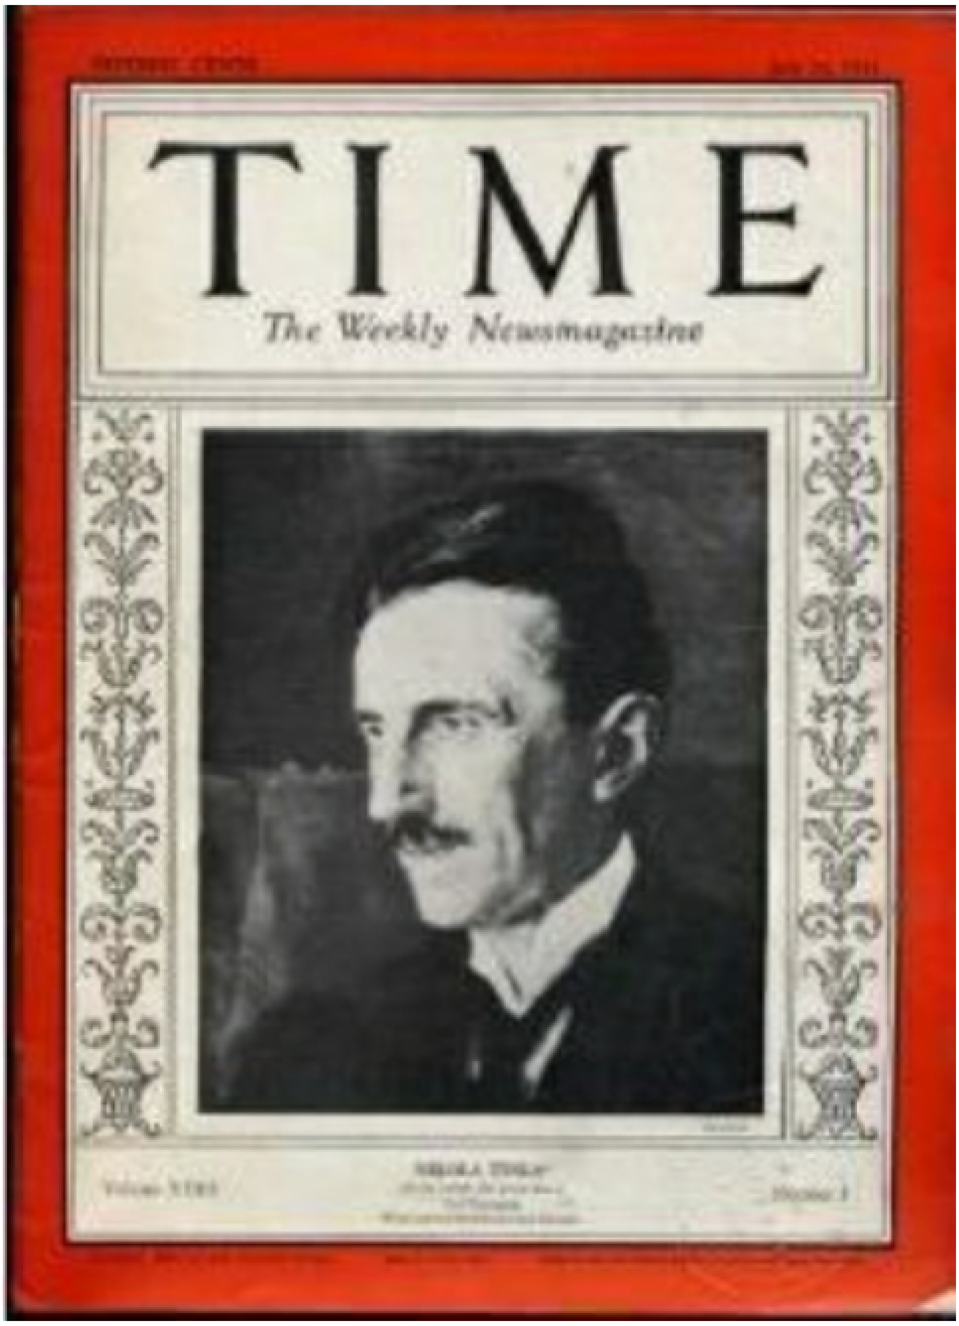
Here we have the young, handsome Dr. Nikola Tesla busting a move on a local beach babe at the Staten Island Midland Beach, New York City 1898. Tesla was a lifeguard, a world champion swimmer & he loved women! Contrary to false rumors spread by jealous rivals & recently by the not funny comedian; Matt "The Oatmeal" Inman, Tesla was NOT celibate. He was Not afraid of women's earrings, he “allegedly” had a 15" penis & had sexual affairs with 1,000's of women! Remember Tesla was 6'5" tall & he was very famous! Tesla never married because he enjoyed living his single "Playboy" bachelor life too much to give it up for just one woman.

The "Real" Story of The Philadelphia Experiment: Operation Rainbow Project & How George H.W. Bush Conspired to Murder Dr. Nikola Tesla!



Tesla on the cover of Time Magazine (1931)

According to my meetings with former SS Nazi and life-long C.I.A. employee, Otto Skorzeny, during 1931, when Dr. Nikola Tesla made the front cover over Time Magazine, Adolf Hitler was amazed and fascinated with him. Hitler had considered Nikola Tesla to be the incarnation of the "almighty' white, Aryan Myth Superman, or Das Uberman. Hitler was curious about rumors alleging that Tesla had an extremely large penis and that he had psychic powers. Hitler, being the childish, sadistic, ego-maniac that he was enjoyed most cartoons & comedians of the era, especially The Three Stooges ☐, Max Fleischer's Popeye ☐ and Tesla vs.The Nazis cartoon. Hitler and Skorzeny were not geniuses, however they were smart enough to realize that Nikola Tesla was! In 1934, while Tesla was in America helping the U.S. Government protect its citizens' from Nazis by creating sophisticated radar, "Star Wars" type space based weapons to destroy approaching enemy missiles, remote controlled torpedoes, et al..Hitler was plotting to take over the world. Rumors had been spreading that Nikola Tesla had created a "Death Ray", an invisible, anti-gravity flying disk, an earthquake machine, weather modification machine, and an electronic "stealth" device for making battleships appear optically invisible. Hitler thought to himself, "I must have those inventions so I can take over the world.”

In 1938, Hitler came up with the idea of sending young SS Nazi spies to America. These spies, allegedly with Hitler & Prescott Bush’s money, had support from high ranking U.S. Government Nazi sympathizers. They were able to create a new branch of the Government called the O.S.S. It’s supposed job was to spy on the Nazis. How ironic. Hitler now had an entire branch of the U.S. Government at his disposal. Hitler ordered his favorite, young 14 year old, SS Nazi; George H. Scherff Jr. aka; George H. Bush to befriend Nikola Tesla and try to steal his inventions so that “he” could take over the world. [43] George H. Scherff Jr., aka; George H. Bush did become a trusted friend of Tesla’s. George Bush told Hitler about one of Tesla’s inventions that was supposed to create the illusion of invisibility or stealth technology. This invention would render an entire battleship or plane optically invisible! George H.W. Bush tipped off Hitler to the U.S. Navy’s secret experiment...The Philadelphia Experiment aka: Operation Rainbow Project.

Decommissioned: June 17 1946. Stricken March 26 1951. Fate: To Greece January 15 1951. Renamed Leon, Stricken in 1991. In 1941, with Tesla's direct supervision, the Navy Destroyer, the U.S.S Eldridge was wrapped with thousands of feet of cable, made from whole copper pennies, bound together, {That's why there was a copper penny shortage in America in 1941, metal pennies were minted instead, for a short time}, several high frequency generators and several other of Tesla's patented inventions. Including Tesla' Rotating Field Amplifier or (R.F.A.). The U.S. Navy had Nazi-sympathizers, including George H.W. Bush who tipped off Hitler to this experiment commonly referred to as The Philadelphia Experiment or Operation Rainbow Project.

Otto Skorzeny and his comrade Reinhardt Gehlen, Hitler's brightest and favorite SS Nazis, were selected to spy on this project. They made it to the United States in a German U-boat. When they arrived on shore they put on U.S. Navy Officer's uniforms. They also had fake i.d.'s. With a little bit of persuasive talking and help from U.S. Navy Nazi sympathizers'; George H.W. Bush & Dr. John G. Trump they both easily made it onto the Philadelphia Naval Yard base, to an empty ship with no name that was being overhauled, right next to where the U.S.S. Eldridge was birthed. From their obscure vantage point they had a clear view of what was taking place. The Eldridge sailed out into the Delaware River and began to glow a bright greenish color at first, then a little yellow, finally it looked very blurry like a heat mirage or gasoline evaporating, and then it almost vanished completely from our sight. However, we were able to see the large wake it was leaving behind as it sailed South down the river. We could see it fade in and out several times until it was too far away. About six hours later the Eldridge returned to the Philadelphia Naval Yard. There was a lot of chaos and pandemonium on board the ship when it arrived. We heard men screaming and complaining that they felt as if they were on fire. Someone mentioned that he could not believe that they made it to the Norfolk, VA. Naval Base and back in only a few hours. At that point we knew that Tesla had invented and was very close to perfecting the ultimate weapon of war, optical invisibility. Hitler was very pleased with what we told him about Tesla's great invention, Optical Invisibility. The Navy wanted Tesla to help them tryout a new, more powerful high frequency generator to increase the magnetic electrical illusion of invisibility. Tesla refused to help the Navy a second time because the first Project Rainbow invisibility experiment had hurt so many of the "guinea pig" crew who were topside during the experiment. The sailors below decks were not affected as much, they only had their brains slightly "cooked" for a while. Most of those sailors survived with minor brain damage and spent a long time in the Philadelphia Naval Yards' Psychiatric Hospital. If the sailors ever remembered what had happened to them during the experiment their allegations were immediately dismissed as "crazy person" talk. The U.S. Navy threatened them not to speak of the experiment or they would have their pensions cancelled or they would be killed for committing Treason.[44]

During 1942, Hitler wanted to rule the world "real bad". He ordered George H. Scherff aka; George H.W. Bush to "tap" Tesla's phone to find out about what other magnificent inventions he was creating that could help him take over the word. Bush overheard several conversations to Tesla from the Navy requesting his help in the next Philadelphia Experiment. He refused to help once again. The Navy gave up trying to get Tesla to help them. So, they contacted Albert Einstein, Marconi, Townsend Brown, Dr. John G. Trump and a few less known scientists to try to do the job instead. Einstein was quoted as saying that "Nikola Tesla's theories of magnetic resonance and optical invisibility are beyond my grasp." With George H.W. Bush's help, Skorzeny and Gehlen now knew when the next experiment was going to take place. This time they had more help from U.S. Navy Nazi-sympathizers "allegedly' including George H.W. Bush. They pretended to be doctors/scientists. Once again, they were easily able to bluff their way into the Philadelphia Naval Yard and right onto the dock where the U.S.S. Eldridge was. They used the names Dr. Reinhardt and Doctor Franklin Reno. In Berlitz's book titled The Philadelphia Experiment he claimed that the two doctors were different people. He was wrong! This time, Dr. Reinhardt and Dr. Franklin Reno aka: Gehlen & Skorzeny would try to steal the main electronic component of the experiment, Tesla's "Rotating Field Amplifier" or (R.F.A.) □.

The "R.F.A.'s" were small and heavy. They weigh about 50 pounds each. They are plain black, unmarked welded shut, steel boxes. They have four 2" diameter holes on two sides of them to cool the electronic components that are housed inside. They have three wires coming out of them and one female connector hole in their sides to link them all together. The small R.F.A.'s have enough amplification power as modern day small power plants. The R.F.A's are about the size of a typewriter case or a 12"x 13" cube. These devices were the brains of the whole experiment. All of the high frequency generators were "daisy chained" together to a central amplifying device, the Rotating Field Amplifier. The R.F.A.'s amplified the electrical currents to extremely high voltages. These R.F.A.'s had to be connected and "tuned" to a certain resonate, frequency that only Tesla knew. The Navy had Tesla's Rotating Field Amplifiers. But this time, they did not have Tesla to fine-tune the rotating electric fields to the correct frequency for the experiment to operate safely.

The USS Eldridge

Tesla’s Giant Sized A/C Generator

The U.S. Navy’s Second Philadelphia Experiment

All of the equipment had been installed on the Eldridge once again. This time the R.F.A. was not installed on the Eldridge. It was attached by a long extension cord to the ship from the dock. There were two other R.F.A.'s standing by just in case the first one failed. The Eldridge did not leave port to conduct the experiment this time. Due to the fact that Nikola Tesla was not there to supervise the experiment nor to personally "fine tune" the generators, the experiment did not go as planned. The other scientists could not figure out how to properly hook up all of the generators nor could they figure out how to connect and fine tune the Rotating Field Amplifiers.

They "rigged" it all together haphazardly and threw the power switch. Nothing happened. They turned up the power on the generators and still nothing happened. Eventually, the scientists reconnected the wires in a different way. Finally, something did happen! The ship started to glow green a little bit and then yellow and finally it appeared to be vanishing right before every ones eyes'. However, it did not vanish completely this time as it had done during the first experiment. Dr.Trump allegedly yelled at Einstein and the other scientists to make his ship invisible! The scientists decided to turn up the generators to full capacity to "see what would happen."

The ship did in fact disappear from sight for a little while so they continued to crank up the electricity. The "guinea pig" crew members who were on the deck began screaming in pain. They were running around like chickens with their heads' cut off. Some jumped overboard to escape their pain. The scientists and fake Nazi doctors ignored their screams and continued with the experiment for at least 15 minutes. No one knew at the time that Dr. Nikola Tesla had been secretly watching the experiment. Tesla sabotaged the experiment by chopping through the extension cord with an ax, then he disappeared into the night. Tesla's heroic effort, saved the lives' of many crew members.

That is the only reason the experiment stopped when it did. This time the crew on the top deck were no more than puddles of flesh and bone melted to the deck. The crew members had their flesh and bones cooked from the inside like a giant microwave due to the intense high frequency magnetic fields that were not properly "tuned" during the experiment.

The "flesh puddles" at first glance, looked like sailors had been fused into the deck. That was not the case. The marrow from inside their bones had been "cooked" and their bodies melted onto the decks. During the confusion of trying to "shovel-up" and dispose of the poor dead sailors, Skorzeny and Gehlen were able to grab all three of the Rotating Field Amplifiers. Now the U.S. Navy did not have any R.F.A.'s left. The two Nazis made their getaway without anyone suspecting a thing. This time Skorzeny had been paid by the Russians to steal the "R.F.A." for them, which he did. Now, Nazi –Germany and Russia had Tesla's electronic invisibility technology and The United States of America did not. [45] By stealing America's last "R.F.A.'s", Nazi-Germany had just "unofficially"" won WWII.

THORN E.M.I. Corp. of England & Raytheon Corporation provided the glass vacuum tubes & electronic equipment for the experiment. Raytheon was awarded patents for microwave ovens and Magnetic Resonance Imaging (M.R.I.) machines that were created as "by-products" from the "horrific", "Philadelphia Experiment."

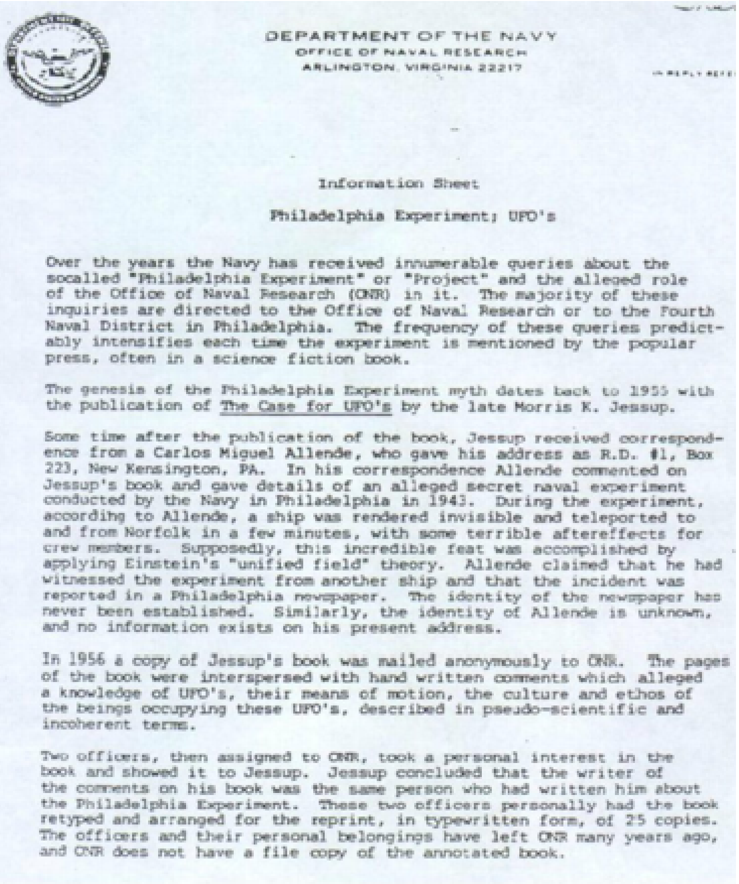
The U.S. Navy's "Official" Denial Letter About The Philadelphia Experiment...



DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY
OFFICE OF NAVAL RESEARCH
ARLINGTON, VIRGINIA 22217

Information Sheet

Philadelphia Experiment; UFO's

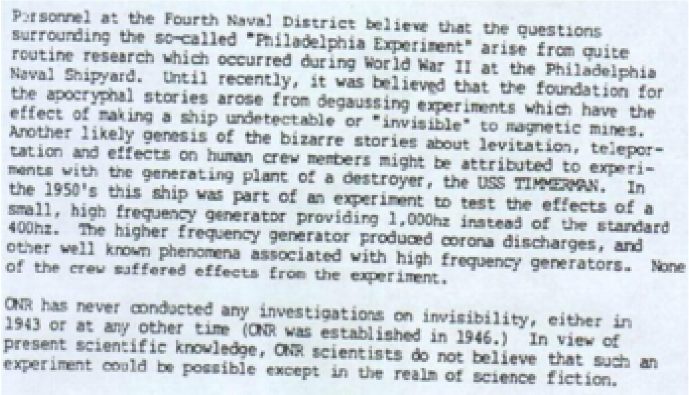
Over the years the Navy has received innumerable queries about the socalled "Philadelphia Experiment" or "Project" and the alleged role of the Office of Naval Research (ONR) in it. The majority of these inquiries are directed to the Office of Naval Research or to the Fourth Naval District in Philadelphia. The frequency of these queries predictably intensifies each time the experiment is mentioned by the popular press, often in a science fiction book.

The genesis of the Philadelphia Experiment myth dates back to 1955 with the publication of The Case for UFO's by the late Morris K. Jessup.

Some time after the publication of the book, Jessup received correspondence from a Carlos Miguel Allende, who gave his address as R.D. #1, Box 223, New Kensington, PA. In his correspondence Allende commented on Jessup's book and gave details of an alleged secret naval experiment conducted by the Navy in Philadelphia in 1943. During the experiment, according to Allende, a ship was rendered invisible and teleported to and from Norfolk in a few minutes, with some terrible aftereffects for crew members. Supposedly, this incredible feat was accomplished by applying Einstein's "unified field" theory. Allende claimed that he had witnessed the experiment from another ship and that the incident was reported in a Philadelphia newspaper. The identity of the newspaper has never been established. Similarly, the identity of Allende is unknown, and no information exists on his present address.

In 1956 a copy of Jessup's book was mailed anonymously to ONR. The pages of the book were interspersed with hand written comments which alleged a knowledge of UFO's, their means of motion, the culture and ethos of the beings occupying these UFO's, described in pseudo-scientific and incoherent terms.

Two officers, then assigned to ONR, took a personal interest in the book and showed it to Jessup. Jessup concluded that the writer of the comments on his book was the same person who had written him about the Philadelphia Experiment. These two officers personally had the book retyped and arranged for the reprint, in typewritten form, of 25 copies. The officers and their personal belongings have left ONR many years ago, and ONR does not have a file copy of the annotated book.



Personnel at the Fourth Naval District believe that the questions surrounding the so-called "Philadelphia Experiment" arise from quite routine research which occurred during World War II at the Philadelphia Naval Shipyard. Until recently, it was believed that the foundation for the apocryphal stories arose from degaussing experiments which have the effect of making a ship undetectable or "invisible" to magnetic mines. Another likely genesis of the bizarre stories about levitation, teleportation and effects on human crew members might be attributed to experiments with the generating plant of a destroyer, the USS TIMMERMAN. In the 1950's this ship was part of an experiment to test the effects of a small, high frequency generator providing 1,000hz instead of the standard 400hz. The higher frequency generator produced corona discharges, and other well known phenomena associated with high frequency generators. None of the crew suffered effects from the experiment.

ONR has never conducted any investigations on invisibility, either in 1943 or at any other time (ONR was established in 1946.) In view of present scientific knowledge, ONR scientists do not believe that such an experiment could be possible except in the realm of science fiction.

[46] The U.S. Dept. of The Navy

The Navy denies that this experiment took place for liability reasons. They are not willing to admit that they committed an Act of Treason by letting Nazis steal Tesla's most secret wartime invention right out from under them, while they were cooking and killing U.S. Naval Sailors with their experiment. The American C.I.A. & F.B.I. were secretly hijacked and over-run by lying Nazis posing as American Citizens'. These agencies consider themselves to be above the law and do not respond to or acknowledge Freedom of Information Act Requests! Their refusal to acknowledge F.O.I.A. requests is illegal! In a "free" society these Government abuses must not be tolerated! The C.I.A. & F.B.I. are full of Nazis!

People have written books about the Philadelphia Experiment claiming that they were on board the Eldridge at the time or that the experiment never took place at all or they claimed to be involved in other U.S. Navy "paranormal" tests like the "Montauk Project", flying saucers et al... Jacques Valle, Carlos Allende, Al Bielek, Preston Nichols, Mac Shelton & Bob Lazar are six of these people. When I asked Skorzeny about these six men, he laughed and told me that Al Bielek is allegedly a former Nazi and "Government Stooge" who works for the Pentagon. Valle, Allende, Bielek, Nichols, Shelton & Lazar are all "allegedly" C.I.A. disinformation spreading, "Bull Shit artists". If they "really" knew anything about the Philadelphia Experiment or Flying Saucers, I would have been ordered to kill them as I did with Dr. Morris K. Jessup.[47]

Back to Nikola Tesla

In late 1942, a story was printed in the New York Times that said Nikola Tesla was very sick and close to death. Tesla had been hit by a car a few years earlier "allegedly" driven by George H.W. Bush. Hitler had ordered George H.W. Bush to steal Tesla's inventions' and to kill him. Tesla was now very old and frail. He wanted to give the U.S. Government his plans for his newest inventions to help defeat the Nazis. Tesla hated Nazis! Tesla had tried several times to contact the U.S. O.S.S. to give them his latest and greatest inventions, including more "R.F.A.'s", his newly patented "Death Ray" and "free-energy" devices. He desperately wanted to help the United States of America defeat the Nazis and to create a free energy system to weanAmerican's off of polluting oil and gasoline engines. The U.S. Government refused to have further dealings with Tesla because he had refused to help with their second Philadelphia Experiment. The United States Government had "forsaken" Nikola Tesla "once again" and "wrote" him off as a "mad scientist."

TESLA AT 78 BARES NEW DEATH-BEAM

Invention Powerful Enough to Destroy 10,000 Planes 250 Miles Away, He Asserts.

DEFENSIVE WEAPON ONLY

Scientist, in Interview, Tells of Apparatus That He Says Will Kill Without Trace.

Nikola Tesla, father of modern methods of generation and distribution of electrical energy, who was 78 years old yesterday, announced a new invention, or inventions,

NOTED INVENTOR 78.

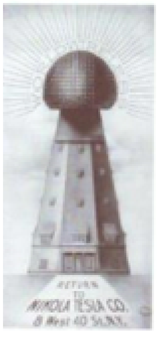
Nikola Tesla.

Tesla Discloses His New "Death Ray" to the world.

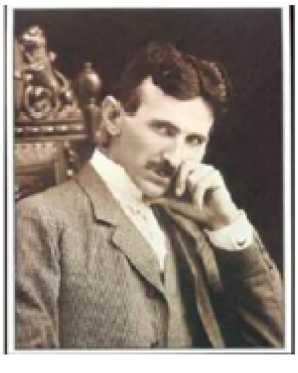
This "Death Ray" was a type of giant laser that could shoot enemy aircraft or incoming missiles out of the sky with a high powered electromagnetic pulse or "EMP". This "Death Ray" leaves no trace at all. It is the "perfect" weapon for war.

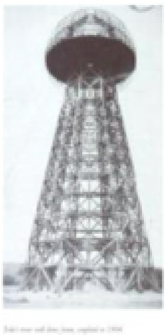
Rumors Emerge About Tesla's Love Life

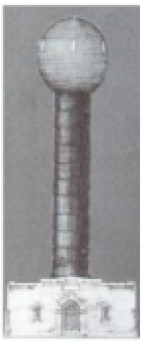
It has been alleged that Tesla was obsessed with the size of his large penis. He was in fact over 6'5" tall. This "obsession" of his is quite obvious. Most of his inventions to transmit electricity look like giant "phallic symbols." Throughout Tesla's life, he had acquired a reputation for being a "Playboy." Due to Tesla's good looks, charisma, "alleged" 12" penis and genius "celebrity" status he had thousands of women including the wives of rich socialites, constantly throwing themselves at him for sex, like crazed rock & roll groupies. Many rich husbands of these female socialite "groupies" were extremely jealous and angry with Nikola Tesla because he was so brilliant, and he was "allegedly" giving their own wives more pleasure than they could.[48] Tesla never bothered to get married because he was too busy having sex with hundreds of women, all the time! "Why buy the cow when you get the milk for free?"



RETURN TO NIKOLA TESLA CO. 8 West 40 St. N.Y.







Dr. Nikola Tesla's Giant, "Phallic-Shaped" Inventions to Transmit Wireless Electricity.

Many of these rich socialites were Nazi “oil barons,” from Standard Oil and Edison’s Nazi comrades who lost millions of dollars when Tesla invented the superior electrical standard, Alternating Current “A/C”. These same men hated the fact that Tesla had invented free-energy devices that could possibly rid the world of its need for oil and gasoline polluting engines. Because so many of these “filthy” rich, socialite, Nazi, “Skull & Bones” members like Prescott & George H.W. Bush, Rockefellers, Edison et al.. hated Tesla so much, his days would be numbered.[49]

Tesla’s Final Day…

Tesla had called the American O.S.S. several times to try to set up a meeting to give them his newest and greatest inventions; an anti-gravity “invisible” flying disk, delta-wing shaped, radar avoiding aircraft designs, a “Death Ray”, an earthquake machine, free-energy devices, a Cosmic Light Ray Transmitter/Receiver, mind reading/controlling machines et al.. The O.S.S.’s phone number went straight to George H. Scherff Jr., an SS Nazi spy, aka; George H.W. Bush. George told Tesla that he would send two of his O.S.S. friends over to meet with him on January 6, 1943 to take his inventions back to Washington D.C.

On January 6, 1943 Tesla received a knock on his door by two men “claiming” to be O.S.S. officers. Their “alleged” names were Ralph Bergstresser & Bloyce Fitzgerald. One was very tall, and skinny the other was short and stocky. Tesla was very excited to see these men. He offered them tea. Tesla talked to these men for more than an hour. He showed them his complete invention plans for an anti-gravity, optically invisible flying disk, an earthquake machine, strange designs for radar avoiding aircraft, non-polluting, free-energy driven cars, rocket ships for space travel, lasers, the first electronic computer, electronic mind control/mind reading devices, and a “Death Ray“ or “Tesla Cannon” that fired electro-magnetic pulses or (EMP) to disable enemy aircraft from up to 200 miles away leaving no trace. Tesla carefully explained his inventions to the two men. Tesla told the men that his “optically invisible” flying disk had another very “unique” feature, he “alleged” that it was able to travel through time and to distant planets like Mars and beyond. He told them that he was very happy and proud to help the U.S. Government win the war against the Nazis. Nikola Tesla hated Nazis!

The two men thanked Tesla and began gathering up all of his “wonderful” invention plans and headed towards the door. While Tesla was standing in front of the door with his back turned, the smaller man, held Tesla’s arms’ at his side while the taller man, held a pillow in front of the frail 87 year old Nikola Tesla’s mouth and easily suffocated him to death!

Nikola Tesla Dies At 85 Alone in His Hotel Suite

Celebrated Inventor, Born in Yugoslavia, An Electrical Wizard

Nikola Tesla, 85, inventor of the Tesla coil, the induction motor and hundreds of other electrical devices, died last night in his suite at the Hotel New Yorker. According to hotel officials, he had been in failing health for two Nikola Tesla Age 85?

Tesla's Obituary Appeared in the New York Telegram, January 8, 1943

Skorzeny George H.W. Bush {Hitler} Reinhardt Gehlen

Because the "foolish" American Government had forsaken Tesla, no one was there to protect and watch over him. Dr. Tesla had "unknowingly" given his best and greatest inventions to two SS Nazi agents who had been pretending to be U.S. "O.S.S." agents. The two Nazis were none other than Otto Skorzeny and Reinhardt Gehlen. By murdering Tesla and stealing his greatest inventions, Nazi-Germany had once again, just "unofficially" won WWII. The two SS Nazis were allegedly "tipped off" to Tesla by George Herbert Walker Bush. "Allegedly," Hitler had ordered the “cowardly,” prudent George H.W. Bush to steal Tesla’s inventions and to kill him! George was too much of a “PUSSY” to do it, so Skorzeny & Gehlen had to kill him instead! Tesla was hit by a car a few years earlier “allegedly” driven by George H.W. Bush! The “pre-meditated” car accident injured Tesla, but did not kill him!

After Skorzeny smothered Tesla, he and Gehlen broke into Tesla’s safes’ and stole his Last Will & Testament, Edison Medal of Honor, his Westinghouse Contract worth trillions today, an earthquake machine patent model, an anti-gravity flying disk patent model, Tesla Turbine, a water engine, another engine that needed no oil or gas, free-energy devices, perpetual motion devices, a “Death Ray”, electronic invisibility devices, mind control devices, and “hundreds” of love-letters from Tesla’s rich, aristocratic, lady, friends most of whom were married to famous men at the time, like Robert Underwood Johnson, et al…Skorzeny claims that there were several “love” letters to Tesla from Barbara Pierce (Bush).

According to Skorzeny, Tesla’s Last Will & Testament, Edison Medal and his Westinghouse Contract are all kept in the “Skull & Bones” “lucky sperm club member” clubhouse located at Yale right next to Geronimo’s skull. Prescott Bush “grave-robbed” the skull from a sacred Apache burial ground for “fun!” In this secret clandestine meeting place for the young rich

WASP, New World Order Republicans there is allegedly a wax dummy of Hitler complete with black leather Nazi SS Gestapo boots. The Hitler “dummy” has his right hand extended in the infamous “Heil Hitler” salute. His left hand is carrying a gas can. New pledge recruits of the “Skull & Bones Club” are hazed. Allegedly, each new rich, WASP New World Order Republican recruit is made to strip completely naked, lie in a coffin full of cash, with a large Jewish Star of David on it, motor oil is poured on top of them while they masturbate to “Negro” pornography as Wagner’s Flight of the Valkyries plays loudly in the background. Their “sperm” is poured into a cup and the other “Skull & Bones” members must take a drink. [50] Sounds crazy but its’ true!

Tesla's Body Is Discovered...The Official U.S. Government Cover Up Begins!

Tesla's "Death Mask"

On January 7, 1943 a "real" friend of Tesla's stopped by to see how he was doing. His hotel bedroom door was ajar, which seemed odd. He went into Tesla's bedroom and found him lying on his bed with his pants down to his knees, with his shoes still on, "dead". After suffocating Tesla, Skorzeny claimed that he pulled Tesla's pants down to see if the rumors about his enormous penis were true. He claims that the rumors about Tesla's 15" penis were true! All of Tesla's belongings had been ransacked and "pillaged". His windows were open and his safes' were almost empty. His pigeons were flying around the room and they were walking on and around his dead body. Tesla's friend tried to resuscitate him. He loosened Tesla's collar and necktie and went to get help for Tesla, but he knew it was too late. When the authorities arrived they put Tesla on a stretcher and quickly covered him up with a blanket. Immediately thereafter, the F.B.I.'s Nazis' and Office of Alien Affair's Nazis' proceeded to raid Tesla's room and steal everything that was not hotel property. Tesla was not an alien, but a U.S. citizen! The Office of Alien Affairs had no authority to steal Tesla's remaining property! Tesla's body was immediately cremated without an autopsy. Isn't that strange?

The three murdering Nazis, Skorzeny, Gehlen & George H.W. Bush attended Tesla's funeral. How nice of them. The F.B.I. published a false story telling the world that Tesla had died of old age in his sleep. Once again, the U.S. Government had "screwed" & "forsaken" Tesla. Why? He was the greatest inventive mind the world had ever seen and had constantly proved his loyalty to the U.S. by inventing devices to help protect American Citizen's from attacks by the Nazis and other possible invaders. Why did the U.S. Government "erase" Tesla from our history books? To protect Bush's secret, illegal pact with Hitler and to hide non-polluting, free-energy Tesla Technology from American citizens' & the world. That's why! Otto Skorzeny and Reinhardt Gehlen took their stolen Tesla inventions back to Hitler in Berlin, Germany & to Stalin in Russia. Hitler was delighted! For murdering the frail, 87 year old American Genius, Nikola
Tesla, Hitler gave the two, metals of honor including the "Knight's Cross", the "Iron Cross", and several other honors like high ranking positions of authority within the Third Reich. He proceeded to gather up the best and smartest Nazi scientists that he could find along with Jewish scientist prisoners to "attempt" to decipher Tesla's complicated invention plans' for an anti-gravity, "invisible" flying disk, death-ray, & earthquake machine.

The Nazis had faked Thomas Edison's death years earlier to help them build weapons of mass destruction to use against America. Now the Nazis had Edison, Marconi and other famous Nazi scientists working non-stop for two years trying to build Tesla's anti-gravity, "invisible" flying disk and other stolen Tesla Technologies. For helping the Nazis, allegedly, Hitler and Prescott Bush used their influence to bribe U.S. Patent Examiners to give credit to Marconi for inventing the radio. Even though he "invented" it with 17 of Tesla's prior patents. Later in 1943, it was determined that Tesla did in fact invent the radio, and credit was given back to him for doing so. In 1945, Hitler, Skorzeny & Gehlen, met with George H.W. Bush and his Nazi comrades in the U.S. to show off "their" new wonderful, invention, the "optically invisible, anti-gravity flying disk. They claimed it was created by Nazi scientists not Tesla. George H.W. Bush and the rest of his Nazi political comrades were stunned and amazed by these wonderful new "toys" for war.

Bush knew that he could use his "guise" to pull off "the all-time fast one" on the United States of America. Germany had perfected the stolen Tesla Technology! Prescott & George H.W. Bush illegally helped Hitler's Nazi-Germany create a "fake" surrender agreement with the United States. This forgery was left in the U.S. National Archives and kept secret for more than 55 years. The "real" surrender agreement is kept in Germany's National Archives and in the Russian National Archives. Germany & Russia now had anti-gravity, optically invisible flying disks, "death rays" and other stolen Tesla Technologies & America did not! Germany was now able to deliver atomic bombs and other weapons of mass destruction to any place on the globe, including America without any one ever seeing them.

Germany's surrender agreement that is in the United States National Archives has been forged. The year for Germany to actually surrender has been erased and left blank. Because the year of surrender has been erased, the entire contract is null & void! According to Skorzeny, Hitler & Skorzeny made a secret pact with Prescott & George H.W. Bush whereas, the entire Third Reich of Nazi - Germany, 50,000+ including Hitler would be brought to and partnered with the U.S. to eventually start a Fourth Reich in America in the year 2004. George H.W. Bush was an SS Nazi-spy as was Skorzeny. Although he worked for the American O.S.S., he did not have the power nor authority to make this type of agreement but he did it anyway.

Hitler's death was faked and the entire Third Reich of Nazis including Hitler was brought to the U.S. and hidden by the C.I.A.- New World Order at underground top secret bases around the country. The U.S. Government has lied to its' people and the world ever since then about the identities of it Nazis' living in America and Germany's "unofficial" surrender to the United States of America. According to Skorzeny, because there is no effective year for Germany to surrender in this agreement, Germany will be able to "legally" seize control of the United States of America a by means of "adverse possession or squatters' rights'." If no effective date is added to this agreement, the "free" America that we all love will cease to exist. It will immediately become The United States of Germany. With Bush as its' dictator, just like Hitler & Prescott Bush planned for over 80 years ago.[51] Wake up Americans and smell the truth! You and the rest of the world have been lied to for over 62 years about who "really" won WWII. The Bush / Trump Family New World Order Nazi Republican regime must be stopped.

U.S. Government Censor-Nazis Create More Lies About Tesla

Many “alleged” C.I.A. New World Order disinformation spreading biographers, like Cheney, published as fact, that Nikola Tesla was a homosexual, his “manhood” had been destroyed at an early age and that he was a Nazi-sympathizer. That is total Bull Crap! Cheney claims in one of her Tesla Books that the man in the famous picture below standing behind Einstein is Nikola Tesla. Once again, that is not true! The ugly, angry looking man with a Hitler–like mustache, standing behind Einstein is smaller than Einstein. Tesla was very tall, 6’5” to be exact. There is no way that the man in this photo is Nikola Tesla. He does not look anything like Nikola Tesla except for a mustache, even that does not resemble Tesla’s. Nice try Cheney!

A trio of scientific greats: Albert Einstein, Nikola Tesla, and Charles Steinmetz, as they appeared in 1921 in a visit to the RCA transoceanic station at New Brunswick, N.J. At the time, Tesla was deeply involved in his patent dispute with Marconi. Only after his death would the U.S. Supreme Court uphold Tesla's claim to be the true father of radio. (RCA)

The “Real” 6’5” American Genius: Dr. Nikola Tesla!

How The Bush Family & Their New World Order Nazi Comrades "Bushwhacked" America in 1945 and Stole the 2000 & 2004 Presidential Elections!

Skorzeny alleges, that he, Prescott and George H.W. Bush, made a secret and illegal pact with Hitler and Stalin to accept Germany's "unofficial" surrender in 1945. This surrender agreement was a total "sham." The effective "year" for Germany's surrender has been "erased" and deliberately left blank making this contract null and void. This "forged" document in the U.S. National Archives poses a tremendous threat to our American National Security. Prescott, George H.W. Bush and Nazi-Germany decided to make their own, secret agreement to bring Hitler's entire Third Reich of Nazis to America. Not just a few rocket scientists. In return, Hitler agreed to share "his" advanced, invisible, anti-gravity flying disk et al...stolen Tesla Technology with the C.I.A. New World Order American Government.

Hitler's entire Nazi Third Reich of 50,000+ have been living in secret underground bases throughout the United States, Canada, England, France and Italy ever since the "supposed" end of WWII. Hitler and his entire Third Reich of Nazis have been actively planning for their New World Order or Fourth Reich in America at these secret underground bases. The initial 50,000 + Nazis have been reproducing like rabbits for the last 58 years. It is estimated that there are now more than 20 million Nazis living in America above the ground and below the ground in secret New World Order bases. The 20 million does not include the millions more who are secretly, Nazi sympathizers. American Citizens are forbidden under the penalty of death not to enter these U.S. Government sponsored New World Order Nazi bases. Secret bases such as Area-51 Nevada, Camp Hero Montauk, NY, Las Cruces NM, Wright Patterson "underground" A.F.B., Ohio and the secret hollowed-out mountain base in Glacier National Park, MT. Inside of these "forbidden" bases lies complete replicas of Berlin, Germany and the trillions of stolen Jewish Holocaust "loot." In these secret bases are underground rooms the size of ten football fields that house the stolen Jewish Holocaust "cache" of trillions of dollars, gold and gold artifacts.

New World Order SS Nazis are allowed complete access to these secret underground bases. These Nazis are encouraged to visit each secret underground base as often as possible. However, no cameras are allowed and they must sign an oath of secrecy. If they break their oath, they are killed! Each New World Order Nazi is allowed access to the "gold rooms". He or she is allowed to "wallow" or "swim" in piles of gold coins that reach as high as the ceiling. They are allowed to wear any of the stolen Jewish gold jewelry including crowns, rubies, sapphires, emeralds, diamonds et al..The only "catch" is that they must only wear their underwear while in the gold rooms and they are not allowed to remove any of the stolen gold or treasure from these rooms nor the underground bases.[52] They are x-rayed as they leave the "gold rooms" and given a fresh change of clothes to put on. Along the streets of the fake underground "New" Berlin, there are shops just like the real Berlin.

However, everything is free there. In this illegal underground New World Order, New Berlin, Tesla's free-energy devices are used every day including Tesla's anti-gravity, optically invisible, flying disk. There are at least 500 secret underground New World Order bases around the U.S. of America and thousands more in Canada, England, France and Italy. There are also underground ski mountains, with snow and gondola lifts that resemble the Alps, at these secret New World Order bases. It's like an underground Nazi-Disney World down there.

In these underground New World Order bases there are "Aryan Breeding Rooms" or free brothels. There are thousands of beautiful "brain washed" women and kidnapped underage teenage girls from around the country there to "service" the men. The New World Order Nazis want the "seed" or "sperm" from their "old" Third Reich SS Nazi leaders to implant in their young brainwashed – "brainless", "Aryan" baby-breeders to help populate "their" new world with "pure" white Aryan babies. These babies will grow up to "rule" the United States of Germany, "formerly the United States of America." Skorzeny claims to have made more than 20,000 "personal" donations.[53] According to Skorzeny, unlimited amounts of free drugs and free German beer are available at these secret New World Order underground bases. Because each base is a"sovereign state of Germany" they are exempt from all of our American laws. They have diplomatic immunity. These Nazis do not pay any U.S. Taxes nor any parking tickets! The Nazis have been living in America with the trillions of stolen Jewish Holocaust "loot" since April 8, 1945 right underneath of our noses'. No one ever noticed or cared because the American People were told by our U.S. Government that we won the war against Nazi-Germany. The American People as a whole are not too smart. They desperately want to believe whatever the American Government tells them to believe, like good slaves.

The New World Order Nazi Republican Bush Government has been "pissing down the backs of its' American Citizens' & telling them it's raining" for too long! George Bush Jr. we do not want a New World Order in America. Why don't you and your entire New World Order Nazi regime pack up and leave America. Go back to Nazi-Germany where you belong! Everything was just fine in America, before your Nazi-father, Bush Sr. decided to make an illegal deal with Hitler! Your Nazi plan to create a New World Order or Fourth Reich in America will not succeed! George H.W. Bush you were not born in America! Your Presidency & your son's Presidency are both automatically null & void!

George Bush Jr. & Sr., et al..Nazis living in America, Das Uberman, "Superman" has returned to save America from the Nazis & he is the one who wrote this book! Your Nazi-father's illegal plan to create a Fourth Reich or New World Order in America has failed! I encourage you to place an effective year on Germany's fake surrender agreement, and then immediately resign from office. America must restore democracy at all cost! No more Bush New World Order Nazis in power in America. While we are discussing Nazis, Skorzeny claims that the I.R.S. is a private Delaware Corporation that was established in 1933 by three American Nazis. It was created to fund the Nazi military buildup. Most of the money that was ever collected was transferred to Germany. The Nazi party was never created and funded by any Germans. It was created and funded by the British & American Illuminati factions. The bagman who took the money to Germany was Senator Prescott Bush, the CEO for Brown Brothers Harriman.

The IRS is not the same as the Bureau of Internal Revenue. Paying income tax to the IRS is strictly voluntary and not mandatory. According to Skorzeny, the IRS allows "certain" people an exemption from paying U.S. tax. To avoid paying U.S. Tax, all you need to do is write the I.R.S. a letter stating: I, John Doe, living at 123 Main St., Metropolis, USA, am a natural born "sovereign citizen" of the United States of America. According to the 1945 Rheims Germany Surrender Agreement that is in our U.S. National Archives, Germany never surrendered to the United States and since 1945 has been illegally in control of the U.S. Government. The U.S. Constitution forbids taxation without representation. I will not pay income tax to the IRS to support its' Nazi agenda in America. I hereby refuse to pay the IRS any income tax. Furthermore, I hereby demand that the IRS immediately refund to me any and all tax money(s) that I have ever paid to it. That's all you need to do if you do not want to pay any U.S. Income tax!

The U.S. Constitution forbids taxation without representation. Why should American Citizens' pay taxes to a Foreign Nazi Government that seized control of America? The current New World Order Republican Nazi Government in America does not represent the best interest of the American People.

Back to the Underground New World Order Bases...

The C.I.A. built 1,000's of "underground" acres of land at the expense of you, the American taxpayer. They use this "space" to grow the best marijuana, opium, cocaine & hash in the world. They also have thousands of "Meth Labs" and "ecstasy labs". The crop of illegal " Nazi-buds" and Nazi-drugs is trucked out of the Area 51 type installations in unmarked white jeeps and U.S. Government unmarked trucks. It is transported to the Brotherhood of Aryan Nations "organized crime" hate group "head-quarters" to sell directly to the public. The "Brotherhood" then funnels its' drug money back up the chain, directly to the C.I.A.'s New World Order Nazis. That is why drugs are illegal in America today. The C.I.A. is always in need of cash to bribe people with. It needs to constantly launder money by selling "its'" drugs while it viciously persecutes the American public for selling or using small amounts of their own drugs. The C.I.A.'s New World Order Nazis don't like anyone trying to compete with their drug business!

The C.I.A. helped create The Brotherhood of Aryan Nations organized crime hate group in America. The "Brotherhood" is controlled by old, SS Nazi C.I.A. New World Order agents: Skorzeny, allegedly, George H.W. Bush, Mengele, Bormann et al.. This hate group was formed so that terrorist hate crimes can be perpetrated against the American public without them knowing that the crimes were really sponsored by the U.S.-New World Order Government. According to Skorzeny, Germany's Nazis' with the help of George Bush Sr. and Jr. have illegally seized control of the United States of America by rigging the Presidential election of 2000. First the C.I.A. killed long time beloved Florida Democratic Governor, Lawton Chiles. The C.I.A. is real good at "giving heart attacks." Allegedly, the C.E.O. of W.R. Grace, Paul Norris called Governor Chiles to setup a "private" meeting to give him a large "cash" campaign contribution. He had done this before so Chiles did not suspect anything would be wrong. W.R. Grace allegedly sent over its' favorite consultant / killer: Steve Rabel aka: Josef Mengele to the Governor's Mansion.

Rabel suggested that they meet in a private location to discuss this “fake” cash campaign contribution. Chiles suggested that they talk in his private gym. Chiles was in “excellent” physical condition because he exercised on a regular basis! The men spoke for about 5 minutes, Mengele claimed that he was overweight, out of shape, “which he really is”, and needed someone to show him how to exercise. He asked Chiles to show him how to use the bench press machine. Chiles laid down on the bench and proceeded to do a few “reps”. While Chiles had both of his hands on the bar trying to support the weight, Mengele made his move. He “whipped” out a concealed “syringe” with air bubbles in it, stuck the needle in Chiles neck and pushed the plunger down.

While Chiles was near death and convulsing in pain, Mengele casually walked out of the gym and out of the mansion. Chiles died a few minutes later. The next day a story was printed in the newspapers saying that Governor Lawton Chiles died from “natural causes,” he must have suffered a heart-attack while exercising. Now that Chiles was dead, Jeb Bush was easily brought to power as the new Governor of Florida. Democrat, Theresa Le Pore the Florida Election Official was allegedly bribed & became a Republican “plant”, neo-Nazi Brotherhood of Aryan Nations members along with conservative New World Order Republican servicemen were bussed down to Florida, dressed up in “preppie” clothes, given “Pro Bush” signs to carry, while they screamed, shouted and rioted at polling places. They intimidated the elderly voters and the news media in Palm Beach County, Florida. They forced black and other minority voters away from the polls. When that wasn't enough, Bush obtained a favorable Judgment from the Nazi-sympathetic New World Order Republican President appointed Supreme Court Justices who illegally forbid a recount. The Bush regime is trying to create a Fourth Reich or New World Order in America and they must be stopped at all cost! This will not be American any more. It will be the United States of Germany!

In 2004, the Republican New World Order rigged the election again. This time they had computerized touch screen voting machines in almost every state with no receipt for a manual recount. Of course every vote went to Bush. Kerry didn't stand a chance. The Republican neo-cons will fraudulently win more elections unless a printed paper receipt is giving out each time you vote with a computerized voting machine. I voted for Kerry with a paper absentee ballot. It probably got lost in the mail. I urge all American Citizens' to go to their local gun stores immediately and buy as many high powered weapons and ammunition as you can. Tell your family and friends to do the same! The 2nd Amendment to the U.S. Constitution that guarantees American Citizens' the right to bear arms must not ever be infringed upon! The American public must join together as a Militia as per out U.S. Constitution, then march “PEACEFULLY”, arm to arm with guns in hands, down to Washington D.C. and demand Bush Jr. to immediately place an effective date of 1945 on the “forged” Germany Surrender Agreement that has been left in the U.S. National Archives, thus stopping the New World Order Nazis from “legally” taking over America. As President of the United States of America, Bush Jr. has the power and legal authority to make and sign Treaties. If he refuses to sign it, he must be impeached! President Bush must then immediately resign from office along with his entire New World Order Nazi Regime staff of Republicans and all Republican appointed Supreme Court justices.

The Clintons are allegedly New World Order Democrats and allegedly so are the Gores. No one sent any anthrax to Al Gore or Bill Clinton did they? Anthrax powder was only sent to the enemies of W.R. Grace Co., & the Bush Nazi New World Order Regime.

The New World Order Nazis have corrupted the "two party" system in America. The Nazis have "puppets" in both the Republican & Democratic Committees who are just waiting to be elected so they can continue the New World Order Nazi plan to create a Fourth Reich in America. The Democratic Party has always been the lesser of the two evils, however that's not good enough for America. Americans need to elect an "independent third party" for the President & Vice-President of the United States of America. This "independent third party" individual must not be connected to any Nazis or large corporations. He or she should be a "regular working guy or regular working girl," white or black, Jewish or Christian, who knows what the U.S. Constitution and The Declaration of Independence mean. He or she must not enact Bills to counteract these sacred documents or any other Bills that take freedom away from American Citizens'.

Democracy must be restored in America at all cost! All of the C.I.A.'s records must be opened and made public to the American citizens'. The C.I.A.'s' records will have the list of names and addresses for every Nazi New World Order Republican employee that is in power today and the locations of their secret New World Order bases that are housing the stolen Jewish Holocaust trillions and Tesla Technology. Every one of these Nazis must be deported back to Germany where they came from! Only then will American be able to "start over" and begin to rebuild the great economy that it once had. Holocaust, Native American and Slave reparations should be given out to American Citizens' from the stolen Jewish Holocaust trillions of dollars that are secretly hidden in underground New World Order bases around the world. If we can eradicate the C.I.A.'s New World Order SS Nazi "menace" from our U.S. Government that have been undermining our American way of life, maybe we can help prevent The Fourth Reich - New World Order from being created. It has already begun. It's aging SS Nazis that sent the deadly anthrax through the mail in 2001. It's the same New World Order SS Nazi C.I.A. employees that the C.I.A. claims are dead. If you love America and your freedom, you must vote against the New World Order Republican Bush regime in the next Presidential Election. Is A Vote For Hitler!

Back to the New World Order Nazis

The U.S. Government knows that the "domestic" New World Order neo-Nazi Brotherhood of Aryan Nations "organized crime" hate group sent the anthrax through the mail, because they are the ones who allegedly ordered them to do it. The C.I.A.'s New World Order SS Nazis' planned the anthrax attacks with help from the "domestically" based Brotherhood of Aryan Nation's "organized crime" hate group. The U.S. Government intentionally ignored evidence that would convict this terrorist hate group and deliberately focused their "so-called" investigation on phony "Middle Eastern" "Al Qaeda" terrorists that do not exist. Bush Jr. planned a "phony" war against Iraq to steal its' oil, and divert the Nation's attention from the horrible "depression-like" economy that exists today.

Most of the major corporations in the world that have accidentally discovered “accounting irregularities” that “mistakenly” caused C.E.O.’s to make millions of dollars while workers and shareholders lost millions of dollars, all had the C.I.A.’s SS New World Order Nazis as consultants. Companies such as Ford, GM, Chrysler, Enron, World Com, Tyco, all S.A.I.C companies like NASA, Telcordia Technologies, Lucent Technology, every airline company, W.R. Grace, Bayer, Merck, American Home Products and most other major pharmaceutical companies. These New World Order Nazi employees deliberately sabotage the products they are working on to create problems and chaos in America. Is it any wonder that the space shuttle Columbia disintegrated upon re-entry?

Ford, Nasa and all the S.A.I.C. companies have histories of critical failures in their products that resulted in American’s being killed or injured. The C.I.A.’s New World Order SS Nazis have been conspiring with the CEO’s of the largest companies in the world to create the horrible “depression-like” economy we have today. Is it any wonder? This “horrible” economy of ours did not just “happen,” it was carefully planned. It’s a 58 year old Nazi–idealistic, New World Order, Conservative Republican plan to create a Fourth Reich or New World Order in America. The C.I.A.’s SS New World Order Nazis allegedly conspired to “peddle” its’ New World Order Philosophy “Bull Crap” to the C.E.O.’s of major corporations by disguising it as a “New European Quality Standard” to increase worker productivity, called ISO 9000, ISO 9001, ISO 9002 & ISO 2000.

This “illegal” New World Order “Master Plan” was sold to CEO’s of major corporations for millions of dollars. This illegal “Nazi-Master Plan” systematically made C.E.O.’s multi-millionaires by teaching them how to loot and bankrupt their own corporations and their employees while staying out of jail. ISO 9000 standards provide CEOs with the “Master List” of New World Order Republican Nazi-sympathizers who are looking for a job... your job! The New World Order Nazi Republicans have looted America companies, and they have looted the American Government, leaving a 550 billion Dollar deficit and it’s getting worse! If you have a Jewish, African-American or Native American sounding last name, you were probably the first ones to be fired during the mass layoffs of 2000-2003.

You were unjustly fired so a less paid, less skilled, New World Order Republican, Nazi-sympathizer could have your job. If you are Jewish, African-American, or Native American you probably have not been able to obtain a good, decent “white-collar” job since you were separated from your job during the mass layoffs of 2000-2003. Did you ever wonder why no one ever responded to the hundreds of resumes you submitted to technical, computer or telecom, companies during the past three years? Unless your last name matches one of the last names on the Republican New World Order’s ISO 9002 “Master List” of Nazi-sympathizers’ you will not be hired! Here’s a tip for all of you non gentiles, “non-WASP’s”, if you want to find a job in America, do not apply to any company that is ISO 9000 compliant. You will not be hired! Ask each company before you waste your valuable time, filling out an application if they are ISO 9000 compliant. If they are, laugh at them and walk away.

The ISO 9000 "New World Order" Nazi-sympathetic C.E.O.'s, many of whom have Smith, Wilson, Patel, or Gupda for a last name have also conspired to devalue the worth of American white-collar professional computer workers. They fired them, most without warning, without any separation allowance. Most had pensions that were now cancelled. These unfortunate American workers were replaced with foreign workers with HB-1 & HL Visas from Pakistan, India, Iraq, Iran, Afghanistan, Saudi Arabia, Russia, China, Vietnam, Korea and other "Communist" third world countries. Most of the foreign computer workers do not speak English, are less skilled, "possible terrorists" and are paid much less than the poor Americans who used to have those same jobs.

The Republican's New World Order SS Nazis' "ordered" the ISO 9000 compliant C.E.O.'s to initiate mass layoffs beginning in the year 2000 and they are not finished laying off yet. The Bush Administration rewards companies that "outsource" American jobs by giving them huge tax breaks. After the "mass layoffs," the C.E.O.s made millions of dollars due to their "smaller payroll expenses," while laid-off workers are unable to feed their families or find "decent" jobs that pay similar amounts of money as their old jobs. Unemployment benefits are a joke! They pay former skilled workers poverty wages that are not enough to support a family on. The New World Order

Republicans "stalled" a Bill to extend unemployment benefits while at the same time passing a Bill to increase their own salaries and give tax breaks to their rich corporate friends. If you check any state's newspaper classified ads there are very few jobs for "white collar" professionals, only low paying service industry jobs.

These same ISO 9000 New World Order following companies have conspired with each other to pay highly skilled computer workers and other white collar professionals much less money than they are worth so that the C.E.O.s can make more money. It is a Nazi-New World Order Republican plan to bankrupt America and eliminate the "middle class" society in America. When the middle class has been eliminated, there will only be the "poor" and the "rich" classes of society. The New World Order's rich "WASP" "ruling" class, desperately want more people to "serve" them. The "poor" are much easier to rule and control than the "middle-class." Today's Republican Party is not "your father's" Republican Party.

It has been corrupted by New World Order Nazi-idealistic," Jew & Black hating" infiltrators posing as religious conservatives who want to take away your freedoms. Companies that "adhere" to the ISO 9000 "New European Quality Standard" have conspired with the C.I.A.'s SS New World Order Nazis to create the horrible "depression-like" economy we have today. [54] Is it any wonder? Because these SS Nazi C.I. A. New World Order agents bribed the right government officials including every U.S. president except JFK, for so many years, with billions of stolen Jewish Holocaust money, and stolen Tesla technology they are now listed as "officially" dead according to the U.S. Government.

[54] ORION "Your Man on the Inside."

Speaking about JFK, Skorzeny claims that the C.I.A. tried to force Kennedy to sign a pact with the New World Order C.I.A. Nazis, when he refused the first time, they sabotaged "his" Bay of Pigs Invasion of Cuba. When he refused to sign the pact the second time, they assassinated him. Skorzeny claims that he was the "military-man" on the "grassy knoll," next to him was George H. Scherff Jr., aka. George H.W. Bush dressed as a cop "badge-man," Josef Mengele was in the sewer "where he belongs" and Reinhardt Gehlen was were Oswald was supposed to be, in the Book Depository building. Mengele's bullet from the sewer was one of the ones that killed Kennedy. Oswald was a "patsy." The rest is history. The New World Order Nazis created the Warren Commission. They "dreamed-up" a lone gunman theory & passed that story off to the world and everyone accepted it. JFK's brother Robert refused to sign the pact so he too was killed!

The C.I.A. had been "bugging" JFK Jr.'s apartment too. They allegedly overheard that JFK Jr. was going to be on Al Gore's ticket as the Vice-President in 2000, which would have created a huge landslide win over Bush & Cheney. However, he too was killed because he would not sign a pact with The New World Order Republican Nazis. The C.I.A. uses stolen Tesla technology on its' jets' that can shoot down any aircraft with a high powered laser beam from 200 miles away, leaving no trace. The C.I.A. is very good at causing car accidents, giving heart-attacks and drug overdoses to those who stand in their way of creating a Fourth Reich or New World Order in America.

The C.I.A.'s New World Order Nazis "allegedly" shot down JFK Jr.'s plane. Thus, ensuring a victory for Bush Jr. The only "curse" the Kennedy Family has is that they hated Nazis and refused to sign a pact with them. That's why the male Kennedy's are dead. Ted Kennedy fearing for his own life, "allegedly" signed the pact with the New World Order Nazis. He would not be killed if he agreed to never run for President and to never speak of the illegal pact he signed.

While we are on the topic of conspiracies, I asked Skorzeny if we ever landed on the moon. He laughed and said that the U.S. never publicly landed a man on the moon. The U.S. only orbited the earth. He also claims that Tesla left a "surprise" for them on the moon that has prevented all attempts at a moon landing. The U.S. and Russia have not been able to figure out this "surprise" yet. Skorzeny claims that Tesla left a "fleet" of 100's of anti-gravity flying disks hovering just above the moon's surface with a "perpetual" motion type of force field around them that destroys all craft that come in contact with it. These flying disks are the "new & improved" models. They are better than the ones that Skorzeny & Gehlen stole the plans for. "Somehow", Dr. Tesla knew that the Nazis would come to kill him so he always kept his "best" invention plans secretly hidden away inside his head!

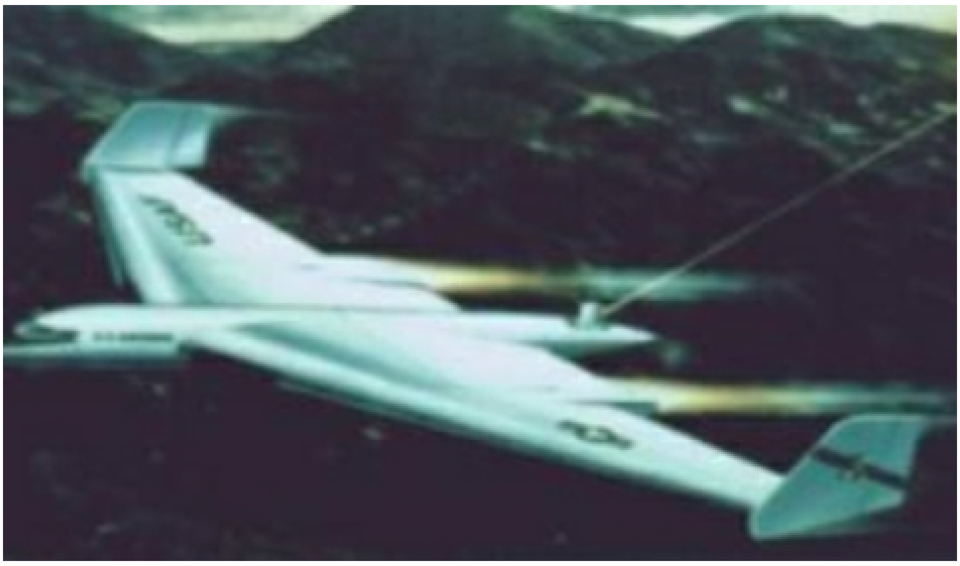
Skorzeny claims that during the1950's – present time, the C.I.A. forced famous musicians to pay "protection money", and to make the C.I.A. beneficiaries in case they died. If a musician refused to pay, the C.I.A. shot down his airplane with a laser, thus leaving no trace or the C.I.A. would spike his drugs with poison, to kill him. If the musician paid the protection money, he would be "shielded" from police "drug" raids and his competition would be "knocked-off." Is M.C.A. really the C.I.A.…Yes?



U.S.A.F.'s Flying Laser "Death Ray" Craft

How Bill Gates Became The Richest Man in the World…

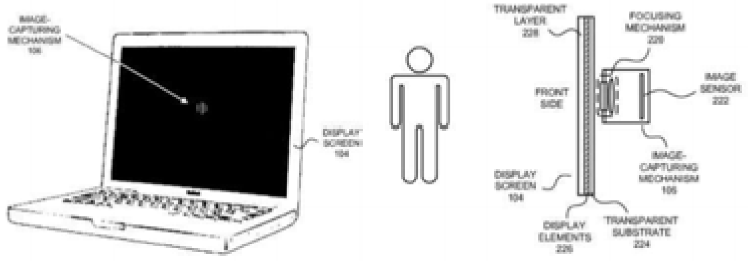
Otto Skorzeny claims that during the late 1980's the C.I.A. met with Bill Gates from Microsoft. Together they conspired to create a consumer privacy invasion "device" that would "keep track" of everyone who used it. The C.I.A. allegedly gave Bill Gates one billion dollars to build and perfect such a device. The C.I.A. had already perfected one type of this privacy-invading device.

They allegedly located a tiny digital camera behind every television screen that is "cable ready."

While you are innocently watching your programs, randomly timed digital photos of you are being taken without your permission and sent through your coaxial cable directly to the C.I.A.'s New World Order Nazis. These "hidden" cameras also have microphones that illegally transmit your private conversations to the C.I.A. The C.I.A. then illegally sells "your" information to television networks who use this information to keep track of viewers for ratings purposes. The tiny cameras are usually hidden behind the infrared remote control sensor window in the front of the TV. or in the top right corner of the screen.

Bill Gates allegedly used the C.I.A.'s "camera-in the-tv" idea to place into "his" privacy-invading device. Gates decided to place a similar, tiny, digital camera with microphone into every computer monitor that is sold in the world. He devised a way to have a blank pixel on your computer monitors' screen, similar to a two-way mirror. Behind this blank pixel is the tiny digital camera with a microphone. This tiny hidden digital camera privacy invasion device is the same type of device that is used on today's cell phones to transmit your image through the air to the person you are talking to on the other cell phone. Gates then allegedly conspired with the C.I.A. to create the largest Internet Service Provider or ISP in the world, American On Line or A.O.L. Free A.O.L. disks are illegally given away at all U.S. Post Offices. Are you surprised? This ISP web browser has a small square window in the upper right corner of your screen. In this little square window, there is a triangle shaped logo that frequently spins around. When the logo is spinning, it is allegedly taking digital photos of you and transmitting them with sound directly to the C.I.A.

Did you ever notice how slow the internet is at times? It slows down periodically because it is taking photos of you without your permission to upload with sound, directly to the C.I.A. thus creating the dreaded slowdown. These "still" digital photos are in BMP format. They are large video files that take a long time to upload. The C.I.A. can control how many photos of you are taken. The faster the triangle shaped logo is spinning, the more photos of you are being taken, like a movie. When the triangle logo spins around it looks like a camera shutter opening and closing, because it is. Every web browser on the market today uses this secret, illegal, privacy invasion camera that is hidden behind the same spot on every computer monitor built after 1990. What can you do to protect your internet privacy? # 1 do not attempt to take apart your monitor to try to remove this camera, because there is a large capacitor behind the tiny camera.
This capacitor carries a very high voltage current that is deadly if touched. That's why we have always been told to throw away our monitors if they are not working properly, instead of trying to fix them.



Apple Computer obtained a U.S. Patent on a hidden camera device that secretly spies on its users'. This privacy invasion device is located inside of every computer monitor and cable ready
TV. sold in the world. the patent was de-classified in 2004. big brother is here! #2 To protect your internet privacy, do what I do, turn your computer on, go to your web browser, locate the small square window in the upper right corner of the monitor and tape a small piece of paper over the window. If you want to voice your opinion to the C.I.A., write a tiny message backwards on the piece of paper so when the C.I.A. illegally tries to see you using your computer all they see is a message that says "The C.I.A. Sucks!" or write any message that you want.

Skorzeny also alleges that in your "cookies" folder on your computer's hard drive contains a file called the "Index". Did you ever wonder why you can never delete this file, when you delete the rest of your "cookies?" The "Index" file is allegedly used to store a program that creates a "backdoor" for the C.I.A.'s New World Order Nazis to illegally access your computer's hard drive without your permission.

They read and or steal all of your files, while you surf the internet. Your personal information is allegedly stolen by the C.I.A. and sold to telemarketing companies and other “crooks” around the world. Every computer that uses Microsoft Windows ’98 or newer, allegedly uses this illegal technology to spy on its’ users’. The F.B.I. & the C.I.A. Nazis use a “black box” privacy-invading device called the “Carnivore”. The illegal “Carnivore” black box eavesdrops on every email that is sent by every computer in the world. Not just a few suspects who are under investigation! The F.B.I. and the C.I.A.’s Nazis are above the Law. They illegally refuse to answer to Freedom of Information Act Requests about how their “carnivore” really works. In a “free society” this type of Government abuse must not be tolerated! The C.I.A. & F.B.I. are full of Nazis & should be reorganized! If you ever wondered how Bill Gates really became the richest man in the world, now you know the truth!

The C.I.A. Sells Stolen Tesla Technology...

Otto Skorzeny claims that the C.I.A. used stolen Tesla Technology to “brainwash” people in almost every country around the world, including America. The C.I.A. was paid billions of dollars by Kuwait, Iraq, Iran, Syria, Libya, China, India, Pakistan, North Korea et al..repressive Third World Countries to secretly construct “towers of Babylon” or fake cell phone towers that house stolen Tesla Technology. The stolen Tesla Technology is used to transmit high frequency electronic radio waves. When tuned to the proper frequency, subliminal messages of obedience, despair, hatred for Jews, & hatred for America are transmitted to the nearby worshippers. Thus creating thousands of brainwashed Jew and America haters around the world. Saddam Hussein has hundreds of the “towers of worship” located all around Baghdad, Iraq & Kuwait.

Skorzeny also claims that the C.I.A. sold this stolen Tesla technology to the Nazi-fundamentalist, non-tax paying, organized religious cult of Scientologists in America and to thousands of Catholic Churches around the world including America. The Scientologists have large “towers of worship” or “towers of Babylon” at their headquarters to brainwash the “idiots” who belong to their “pseudo-religion.” These Scientology “idiots” are brainwashed into giving up their worldly possessions’ to the leaders of the “cult.” The Scientologists own Hollywood and the tabloid, rag newspapers. They are in total control of hundreds of actors and actresses. They dictate when an actor is going to get married or divorced and press releases are sold to the tabloids. The C.I.A. uses the “pseudo-church” of Scientology Idiots’ as a “hiring-pool” for assassins like, Sir-Han, Sir-Han, David Chapman, John Hinckley Jr., et al... Skin-bleaching, plastic surgery addict & “alleged” pedophile Michael Jackson, John Travolta, Kelly Preston, Lisa Marie Presley, Tom Cruise, Ben Affleck, J-Lo, Isaac Hays and thousands more have “allegedly" been brainwashed by the “pseudo-religious” Cult of Scientologists. The “towers of Babylon” look like Tesla’s Towers’ for transmitting energy, except they have “pointy” tops, fancy, ornate decorations or “other” add-ons that help disguise their “real” purpose.

Max Fleischer's "Rotoscope ☐ "

Front row, left to right: Possibly Sidney Wallick, Edith Vernick, George Cannata, Seymour Kneitel, Max Fleischer, Charles Shettler, Sid Marcus. Al Eugster is behind Vernick and Cannata, with his hat and cigar. Standing behind Cannata and Kneitel is Abner Kneitel. Standing behind Cannata and Abner Kneitel is George Rufle. In the background at left, wearing a white hat, is Rudy Zamora. In the distance behind Seymour Kneitel is Joe Fleischer, with suspenders. To the right of Joe Fleischer, with his hand on the window and wearing hat, is William Henning. Born in 1883 in Vienna, Fleischer emigrated with his Jewish family to New York City at an early age, studying art at Cooper Union and the Art Students League.

He worked as a commercial artist and cartoonist, but an interest in mechanics led him to animation. Specifically, he was driven to find a method to produce animation more efficiently and economically, which resulted in the invention – with his brothers Dave and Joe – of the rotoscope, a device used to trace movement from live-action film. The process was demonstrated in his first film, Experiment No. 1 (1915), in which Dave posed as the clown who became known as KoKo. The Fleischer Studio turned out some of the most inventive films of the period and Fleischer made the first sound cartoons of contemporary comic heroes like Popeye. At the end of the 1920s, the studio's top artist Grim Natwick came up with a new female character: a seductive, nameless side-character who was modeled after Helen Kane, a waning Hollywood star at the time, known for her high-pitched "Boop-Oop-a-Doop". This character, who was initially the nameless girlfriend of 'Bimbo the Dog', would develop into the popular and world famous character, Betty Boop.[57]

Max Fleischer's Lost 1930's Tesla vs. The Nazis cartoon

In the 1930's Max Fleischer created an anti-Nazi propaganda cartoon based on a famous scientist of the time, Dr. Nikola Tesla....In this rare, C.I.A. "banned" cartoon, Nikola Tesla battles aging SS Nazis who are sending deadly substances through the mail and who are wreaking terror on U.S. citizens while trying to create a Fourth Reich or New World Order. Tesla defeats the Nazis in the end. According to Skorzeny, Hitler was fascinated and obsessed with this particular Max Fleischer cartoon. He claimed that Hitler made a pact with all of his SS Nazi officers to do their best to create a Fourth Reich as per the Nazis in the Tesla vs. The Nazis cartoon. This cartoon video is the C.I.A. SS Nazi New World Order Republican "master plan" for all domestic terror attacks past, present and future.[58]

Former White House Spokesman - Ari Fleischer's "Alleged" Connection to The New World Order

Ari Fleischer's Background; Former, spokesperson, government official. Born Lawrence Ari Fleischer in Pound Ridge, New York. Fleischer became the official spokesperson for President-elect George W. Bush in December of 2000. As White House press secretary, Fleischer is in charge of handling media queries and disseminating information about the administration, its policies, and its goals to reporters. Began Life as Democrat - Fleischer, who turned forty years old the year that Bush was inaugurated, grew up in Pound Ridge, a suburban enclave near New York City. His father was an executive recruiter, while his mother worked as a computer programmer at IBM. He attended Fox Lane High School, where twice he was elected president of his class. Both Fleischer parents were committed Democrats, and admitted later that their youngest son's Republican sympathies, which emerged during his years at Middlebury College, surprised them. Fleischer became a trusted up-and-comer in Republican Party circles. He served as deputy communications director for incumbent President George Bush in his failed 1992 re-election campaign. During the Clinton years, Fleischer ran his own lobbying firm for aircraft makers and cattle ranchers, and returned to the back halls of Congress when he took a job with a Republican from Texas, Bill Archer, who chaired the House Ways and Means Committee. He quit that job when he was hired by American Red Cross president Elizabeth Dole as communications director in her campaign to become the Republican Party nominee for the White House in 2000[59]

[59] The Gale Group, Inc.

Skorzeny claims that on or about 1982, a high ranking representative from the Reagan Conservative “New World Order” Nazi-Republican Party with help from The Brotherhood of Aryan Nations organized crime hate group, “reached out” to the grandson of Max Fleischer, the sole heir to his cartoon fortune, Ari Fleischer. They made Ari a “deal he couldn’t refuse.” Allegedly, Ari has sole possession of the licensing rights to his grandfather’s Tesla vs.The Nazis cartoon. He was “allegedly” bribed with five million dollars cash and a promise of life-long future employment with the Conservative “New World Order” Republican Reagan / Bush Family Regime, if he would make that particular cartoon video “disappear.” Ari “allegedly” made a “deal with the devil” and accepted the neo-Nazi, Republican’s stolen holocaust money as a bribe. Ari “dissed” his entire family and Jewish roots by becoming a “staunch” Conservative New World Order Republican “Yes Man”. The plot to help the neo-Nazi Conservative Republicans create a New World Order in America was moving right along with the help from their newly acquired “Token Jew “spokesman”, Ari Fleischer.

According to Skorzeny, the C.I.A.’s former SS Nazis with help from The Brotherhood of Aryan Nations organized crime hate group have been planning terrorist attacks on American citizens for more than 60 years, while the U.S. Government always “looked the other way,” disregarded evidence and pursued “fake” suspects. During the last 23 years, The Brother- hood of Aryan Nations organized crime hate group with help from former SS Nazi C.I.A. employees and “allegedly” Ari Fleischer, systemically bought or stole every existing copy of Max Fleischer’s Tesla vs. The Nazis cartoon in the United States. The C.I.A. officially banned this cartoon video like most other Tesla related subjects. Why? Because they want Tesla erased from the history books so they can continue with their plans to illegally create a New World Order in America. If a politician has a problem to take care of like a “pregnant intern” i.e.; Chandra Levy or other, he contacts Ari Fleischer. Ari is “allegedly” the official “White House Problem Solver.” He is “allegedly” the direct link to The Brotherhood of Aryan Nations organized crime hate group that is directly sponsored by the C.I.A. “Why did you do it Ari? For the stolen holocaust money and “temporary” fame, is that why?” As a Jew, you should know better than to ever trust a Nazi, even if he gives you 5 million dollars cash. You’ll be sorry, Ari! I, ORION predict that Ari will kill himself or be killed in a car or plane crash shortly after this book has been published! “Dead men tell no tales…” The Max Fleischer cartoon; Tesla vs. The Nazis is the “Master Plan” for all future Brotherhood of Aryan Nations organized crime, neo-Nazi , New World Order C.I.A. sponsored terrorist attacks.[60] If this video can be located by government agencies who are not neo-Nazi sympathizers, maybe the Democrats? Future domestic terror attacks can be stopped.

On December 12, 2000, P.B.S. aired a Tesla Documentary called Tesla: Master of Lightning. This was a very good documentary of the life of Nikola Tesla. During the video, a broadcast of Max Fleischer’s Tesla vs.The Nazis cartoon was shown for about 60 seconds.

[60] Otto Skorzeny

The next day, I went to Barnes & Noble, to buy a copy of the video. When I watched the video at home, the Max Fleischer Tesla vs. The Nazis cartoon had been censored and removed. It was replaced by a different Max Fleischer cartoon that casts Nikola Tesla as a "mad scientist" villain who is trying to take over the world with his "Euthanasia Ray" not "Death Ray." It is up to Superman □ to save the day. Once again, the lying C.I.A. New World Order Nazis have "screwed" the American public by censoring and removing the Tesla vs. The Nazis cartoon. The American public has been forbidden by the C.I.A.'s New World Order censor Nazis' to view any video or written material that portrays Nikola Tesla as the Great American, Genius Nazi hater that he was. The American people are only allowed to see Tesla portrayed as a "mad scientist" villain who is trying to take over the world. [61] I encourage all of you to contact the producers of this Tesla documentary and government officials to ask them where you find a copy of Max Fleischer's Tesla vs. The Nazis cartoon video? This video is the alleged "Master Plan" for the C.I.A. sponsored neo-Nazi future attacks in America. With your help, future attacks can be prevented.

Secret Tunnel Entrance- "Going-to-the-Sun Road"

Glacier National Park, Montana

High atop a mountain "somewhere" along Going to the Sun Road at more than 6,600' lies the C.I.A.'s New World Order secret tunnel entrance located inside of the mountain. The tunnel is more than 500 yards long and was considered to be an engineering marvel for its' time. The tunnel allegedly goes down more than two miles to a giant hollowed out portion below the mountain. This huge underground city/base connects Montana to Canada just North of the border, at the International Peace Park. This underground base is where the C.I.A. keeps its' stolen Jewish Holocaust Trillions and tests its' most secret New World Order "black projects" including Tesla's flying disk, optically invisible aircraft and other stolen Tesla technologies'.

Secret Tunnel Entrance at Bend in Road...

Glacier National Park was the first and only National Park at the time to have railroad access to it. This enabled the C.I.A.'s SS New World Order Nazis' to transport the "rumored" Nazi-gold train of stolen holocaust loot from Montauk, NY to the secret base located inside the mountain.

Above the secret tunnel entrance there is a strange looking "out cropping" of rocks on top of the mountain that at certain times of the day looks like a "grizzly" bear, hence the name "Grizzly Peak." The C.I.A. uses this secret tunnel to illegally smuggle drugs, guns, SS Nazi war criminals and dignitaries into Canada without stopping at any border crossings.[62] Because Germany never "officially" surrendered, Canada has been hiding & supporting C.I.A. SS New World Order Nazis just like America has been. Canada also made a secret pact with Hitler's Nazi-Germany as did England, France & Italy.

Here's a photo of what "Grizzly Peak" looks like. This photo was taken at the Logan Pass Visitor's Center located at the top of Going to the Sun Road in Glacier National Park, Montana, on or about August 30, 1997. The secret tunnel entrance to the C.I.A.'s New World Order base is hidden behind a remote controlled, movable wall of rock located in the left side of the mountain on Going to the Sun Road just before "Grizzly Peak" and before "The Weeping Wall."

The tunnel entrance was cut out of the rocks with a precision laser. You will not be able to locate it nor see it with just your eyes. I suggest that you take digital photos or use digital binoculars to view and enlarge the different sections of the mountain wall until you can see the entrance. When the base is active during the summer months, there are armed camouflaged guards hiding on the mountain- side, just before the secret tunnel entrance. The New World Order keeps its' stolen Jewish Holocaust trillions of dollars and its' stolen Tesla Technology secretly hidden inside the hollowed out mountain, pictured here.

This Is The Only Photo In Existence Of A "Real" Donuts-On-A-Rope Vapor Contrail. The Photo Was Taken At Logan Pass At Glacier National Park, Montana. On Or About 8/27/97.

The Aurora Spy Plane is the successor to the SR-71 Blackbird and the A-12, which is a smaller version of the Blackbird. The U.S. Air Force officially denies that the Aurora Spy Plane exists. According to Skorzeny, the Aurora Spy Plane has the most advanced stealth technology in the world along with the B-2 Stealth Bomber, B-1 Bomber, F-117A Stealth Fighter & Tesla's stolen anti-gravity/optically invisible flying disks.

Skorzeny claims that the Aurora, SR-71, B-1 Bomber, B-2 Bomber, & F-117A can make themselves optically invisible just by pushing a button. There are no official photos of the Aurora Spy Plane, only artists' renderings of what it might look like.

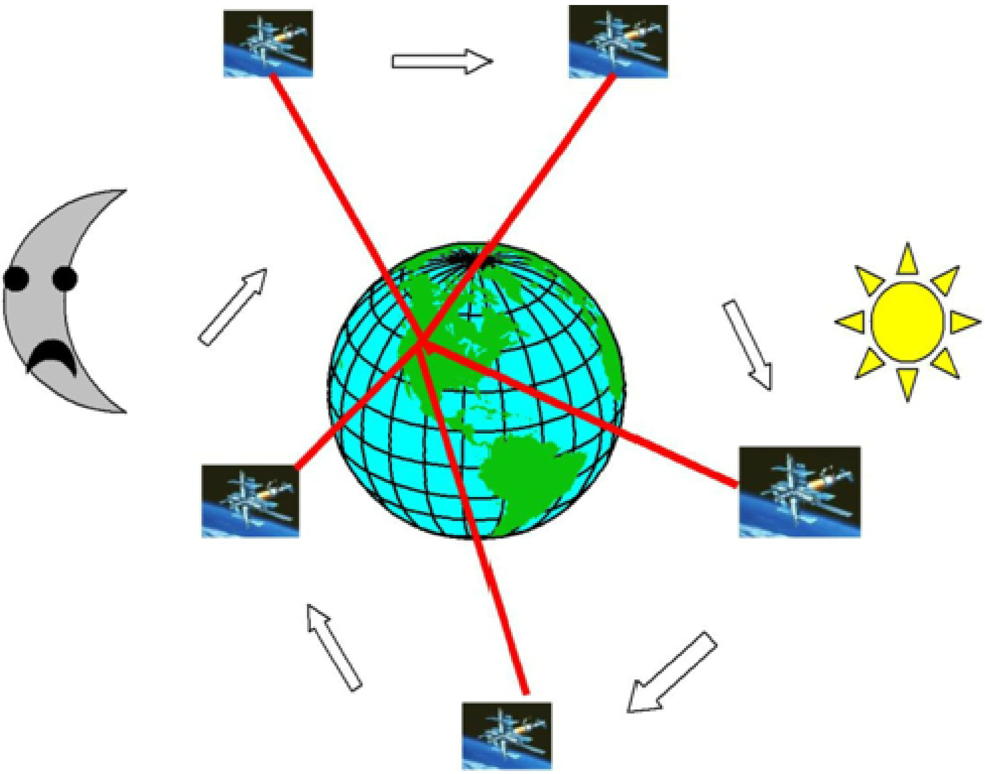
According to Skorzeny, the C.I.A. New World Order Nazis use stolen Tesla Technology to create artificial "anti-gravity fields" around Glacier National Park, the Blackfoot Indian reservation located next door and many other locations throughout the world. There are thousands of satellites orbiting the earth that project high intensity positively charged laser beams to certain areas on the earth. These positively charged laser beams enable the New world order Nazis to use their stolen Tesla Technology to "levitate" aircraft and flying disks. The by-product of these space based laser beams is Radon. Radon is "allegedly" an invisible gas that causes cancer and leukemia in humans and animals. If you ask the U.S. Government what Radon is, you will not get a straight answer! The Native Americans on the Blackfoot Reservation have suffered from extremely high rates of cancer and leukemia since the 1950's.

The U.S. Government says that nothing is wrong and there is no reason to be concerned. Skorzeny claims that the SR-71 Blackbird, B-2 Stealth Bomber planes and anti-gravity flying disks are constantly "hovering" just below 200 feet in the skies above Glacier National Park and the Blackfoot Indian Reservation. Did you ever wonder why commercial flights are forbidden to fly below 200' in Glacier National Park and why no one is allowed to bring firearms into the park to protect themselves, even though there are killer grizzly bears there? Now you know why.

Skorzeny claims that there are many more secret C.I.A. New World Order Nazi bases at other National Parks around the country, including the Grand Canyon. These planes are "optically invisible" and make no sound at all. The SR-71 et al.. are periodically brought in to the secret underground hangers located in the hollowed out mountain below Grizzly Peak on Going to the Sun Road. These "levitating" airplanes are slowly lowered "into" the waters of Lake McDonald in Glacier National Park. The planes are capable of traveling underwater like submarines for short distances. Once the planes are submerged in Lake Mc Donald, they travel to the underground/ underwater hangers inside the hollowed-out mountain above. Once inside the underground hangers the planes are serviced.

There is a giant size elevator inside the mountain that brings the planes up to a full size hidden runway inside the mountain. During the night, when Going to the Sun Road is closed, a large, camouflaged section of the mountain is briefly opened for aircraft to fly out from. Once the plane has left the mountain base, the secret runway mountain exit is closed. The U.S. Government claims that SR-71 Blackbirds in hangers are wet because they expand and shrink while flying, thus causing condensation to build up. That explanation is total Bull Crap. The SR-71's are wet because they have been lowered through the waters of Lake McDonald or other lakes around the U.S., to the secret underwater / underground base located inside of the hollowed-out mountain. Also, the Blackbird et al..stealth planes spray mists of water on themselves while flying to help the electronic devices in its outer surfaces create the illusion of optical invisibility. Water is also used by these planes to create white colored, artificial water vapor clouds around the plane to help disguise it. They are like flying "ozone-generators."



There are thousands of satellites orbiting the earth that project high intensity positively charged laser beams to certain areas on the earth. These positively charged laser beams enable the New World Order Nazis/C.I.A. to use their stolen Tesla Technology to “levitate” aircraft and flying disks. These space based high-powered lasers are connected to the U.S.A.F.’s H.A.A.R.P. weather manipulating, & mind control machine located in Alaska. These lasers simultaneously aim their beams to a central “spot” on earth. That “spot” will then experience severe droughts, hurricanes, tornados or earthquakes. Spontaneous Human Combustion or

HAARP (High frequency Active Auroral Research Program) is a major Arctic facility for upper atmospheric and solar-terrestrial research. HAARP was built on a Dept. of Defense -owned site near Gakona, Alaska. Principal instruments include a high power, high-frequency (HF) phased array radio transmitter (known as the Ionospheric Research Instrument, or IRI), used to stimulate small, well-defined volumes of ionosphere, and an ultra-high frequency (UHF) incoherent scatter radar (ISR), used to measure electron densities, electron and ion temperatures, and Doppler velocities in the stimulated region and in the natural ionosphere. To further the scientific capabilities and usefulness of the IRI and ISR, HAARP is supporting the design and installation of the latest in modern geophysical research instruments, including an HF ionosonde, ELF and VLF receivers, magnetometers, riometers, a LIDAR (Light Detection And Ranging) and optical and infrared spectrometers and cameras which will be used to observe the complex natural variations of Alaska's ionosphere as well as to detect artificial effects produced by the IRI.[63] Tesla had several patents on H.A.A.R.P. Technology from 1901. In 1983, Nazi-sympathetic, New World Order Reagan appointed U.S. Patent Examiners were bribed. They illegally overlooked & disregarded Tesla's prior patents' & issued a "new" patent to the Eastman Corp. for the exact same H.A.A.R.P. Technology that Tesla had already patented years before! The "Bush Family" New World Order is in control of America & must be stopped from destroying it.

The photo below is the Aurora Spy Plane that is flying “optically invisible” located at the far left end of the donuts-on-a-rope-contrail. I changed the image by removing the blue & red tones, leaving a green infrared or thermal image of the delta-shaped craft. The Aurora is powered by a pulse detonation wave engine and four to six jet engines. When the pulse detonation wave engine is turned on, at about Mach 1.5 it acts like a giant supercharger that propels the craft to speeds of over Mach 6+ enabling the craft to leave the earth’s atmosphere to deliver nuclear bombs or other weapons of mass destruction to any point on the earth in only a few hours.

The C.I.A. uses the Aurora Spy Plane and other optically invisible aircraft to illegally spray toxic chemicals, deadly germs, the flu & other harmful viruses on its’ American Citizens’ without their consent or knowledge. When the deadly germs are sprayed from the craft, a “Chemtrail” or Chemical Vapor Trail is left in the sky behind the craft that falls to the ground below sickening or killing everything in its’ path! The C.I.A. causes annual flu epidemics around the world so its Nazi owned pharmaceutical companies can make billions of dollars of profit each year at your expense. The C.I.A. must be stopped and held accountable for its’ illegal activities! The C.I.A. is a “cult of Nazis that took over America from within.

The photo below is the only photo of the Aurora Spy Plane in existence. When you first look at the photo the Aurora is not visible to the naked eye. However, if you change the color in the photo to all green to show its’ thermal image, you can see distinct lights that form a delta shape with an orange-red glowing exhaust that branches in two, behind the craft.

Nikola Tesla invented anti-gravity, optically invisible, free energy flying disks and other “strange” looking aircraft. In 1943, Hitler’s Nazis’ George H.W. Bush, Otto Skorzeny and Reinhardt Gehlen murdered Tesla and stole his plans for these wonderful inventions. Hitler with help from Prescott & George H.W. Bush made a secret illegal pact to bring the entire Nazi Third Reich to America. The Nazis and stolen Tesla Technology are kept in secret underground bases around the United States and Canada, France, South America, England, and Italy. This top-secret technology is tested periodically in Glacier National Park, Montana. At most other times of the year, there is at least 20-40 feet of snow covering the secret entrance to the hidden base located inside the mountain on Going to the sun road. The C.I.A.’s stolen Tesla aircraft are capable of appearing optically invisible. Some of the aircrafts have flat high definition plasma television screens surrounding the entire craft. They are able to project images on the outside of their craft to match its surroundings’, like a chameleon does. They are like flying “ozone generators”. They have the ability to create white, artificial water vapor clouds around the craft to help disguise and hide it.

Conclusion

The C.I.A. and all other branches of the American Government have been lying to the American Public and to the rest of the world since 1945 about who really won WWII. The U.S. Government has also lied about the whereabouts and identities of murderous, evil SS Nazi assholes that are still alive. Because Germany never surrendered to America in 1945, the C.I.A. is really the name of Hitler's Third Reich of Nazis' in America. Basically, the C.I.A. is "full of crap"! It is nothing more than a cult of Nazis that took over America in 1945 & have been in power ever since, without the American Public suspecting a thing! Before the end of WWII, Hitler and Prescott Bush allegedly used their wealth and influence to bring SS Nazi Gestapo agents to the United States to act as a "go-between" to negotiate a secret pact to fake Germany's surrender. These SS Nazi Gestapo agents with help from high-ranking U.S. Government officials created a new branch of "American" government called the O.S.S.

The O.S.S. really stood for the "Other SS Gestapo" or "Otto Skorzeny's Soldiers'" It did not stand for "Operation of Strategic Services. It was headed by Frank Wisner, George Herbert Walker Bush, Otto Skorzeny and "Wild" Bill Donovan. Donovan had been "coerced" by the Nazis to go along with their plan. Bush Sr.'s purpose for creating the O.S.S. was to create a "secret" fake surrender treaty that would bring all of the Third Reich's Nazis to America after WW II to "allegedly" help fight the Russians. Not just the rocket scientists. On January 6, 1943 SS Nazi's, Otto Skorzeny & Reinhardt Gehlen murdered Dr. Nikola Tesla and stole his greatest inventions. With Prescott Bush & Hitler's help thousands of Nazis were illegally brought to the United States of America. The U.S. Government was bribed with trillions of dollars of stolen Jewish Holocaust money and with stolen Tesla Technology, like anti-gravity flying disks, invisibility technology, a "Death Ray", earthquake & weather modification machines. Why else would the U.S. Government illegally smuggle the Nazis who murdered Tesla into the U.S. and continue to protect them? The entire SS Nazi-Gestapo merged with the United States' O.S.S. to form the C.I.A. The C.I.A.'s only purpose for being created was to protect its' beloved Nazis', to hide Tesla Technology from American Citizens', and to help its Nazis' create a Fourth Reich in America. Ever since, the end of WWII, the C.I.A.'s New World Order Nazis' have been working hard to create a New World Order in America. Can you name one "good" thing the C.I. A. has ever done for America? No.

If we can eradicate the C.I.A.'s New World Order SS Nazi agents from our U.S. Government that have been undermining our American way of life, maybe we can help prevent The Fourth Reich - New World Order from being created. It has already begun. It's aging SS Nazis that sent the deadly anthrax through the mail in 2001. It's the same New World Order SS Nazi C.I.A. employees that the C.I.A. claims are dead. The U.S. Government knows that the "domestic" New World Order neo-Nazi Brotherhood of Aryan Nations "organized crime" hate group sent the anthrax through the mail but they refuse to do anything about it. The C.I.A.'s New World Order SS Nazis' planned the anthrax attacks with help from the "domestically" based Brotherhood of Aryan Nation's "organized crime" hate group. The U.S. Government intentionally ignored evidence that would convict this terrorist hate group and deliberately focused their "alleged" investigation on phony "Middle Eastern" "Al Qaeda" terrorists that did not exist. The U.S. Government planned a "phony" war against Iraq to steal its' oil, and divert the Nation's attention from the horrible "depression-like" economy that exists today. At the same time the Republican New World Order Bush regime was busy passing anti-freedom, Nazi -idealistic, Anti-American laws like The Patriot Act , The Homeland Security Act and many others.[65]

According to Skorzeny the head of the former ODESSA, the high ranking SS Nazis bribed the O.S.S. then the C.I.A. and most other U.S. Government Agencies with billions of dollars stolen from the Jews during the Holocaust and with stolen Tesla Technology. The most infamous SS Nazis like Hitler, Mengele, Bormann, Bush, Skorzeny, Gehlen and August Hirt were immediately hired directly by the C.I.A. and have been protected by the C.I.A. ever since! These illegal SS Nazi C.I.A. employees' used their stolen loot to fake their deaths, establish new American identities, and live rich happy lives as millionaires who do not have to pay taxes nor parking tickets. They have diplomatic immunity. The "C.I.A.'s New World Order SS Nazis" continue to funnel their stolen loot into pro-life, anti-gun, Nazi-idealistic, conservative, anti-freedom, Republican campaigns like Bush Jr's.

The SS Nazis also use their stolen loot to help fund neo-Nazi fundamentalist, conservative, right-wing, Christian Republican, anti-freedom groups like "Operation Rescue," "The Brotherhood of Aryan Nations hate group," the KKK and Republican president appointed Nazi-idealistic, Supreme Court Justices like Scalia, Thomas and Suter. The same anti-freedom Supreme Court Justices who unjustly and illegally refused Gore's request for a re-count. That was a sad day for American Democracy. Many of the CIA's SS New World Order Nazis are consultants for Government Affiliated Companies such as the S.A.I.C. {Science Application International Corporations}. S.A.I.C. is really "C.I.A.'S. spelled backward.[66]

Most of the major corporations in the world that accidentally discovered "accounting irregularities" that "mistakenly" caused C.E.O.s to make millions of dollars while workers and shareholders lost millions of dollars, all had the C.I.A.'s SS New World Order Nazis as consultants. Companies such as W.R. Grace Co., Enron, World Com, Tyco, all S.A.I.C companies like NASA, Telcordia Technologies, Lucent Technology, every airline company, Bayer, Merck, American Home Products and most other major pharmaceutical companies. The C.I.A.'s New World Order SS Nazis have been conspiring with the CEO's of the largest comp-anies in the world to create the horrible "depression-like" economy we have today.

Is it any wonder? This "horrible" economy of ours did not just "happen," it was carefully planned. It's a 60 year old Nazi–idealistic, New World Order, Conservative Republican plan to create a Fourth Reich or New World Order in America. The C.I.A.'s SS New World Order Nazis "peddled" its' New World Order Philosophy "Bull Shit" to the C.E.O.'s of major corporations by disguising it as a "New European Quality Standard" to increase worker productivity, called ISO 2000, ISO 9000, ISO 9001, and ISO 9002. During the 1980's it was called ISO 8000. During the 1970's it was called ISO 7000, during the 1960's it was called ISO 6000 etc...

This New World Order "Master Plan" systematically made C.E.O.'s multi-millionaires by teaching them how to loot and bankrupt their own corporations and their employees while staying out of jail. ISO 9000 standards provide CEOs with the "Master List" of New World Order Nazis who are looking for jobs... your job! If you have a Jewish, African-American or Native American sounding last name, you were probably the first ones to be fired during the mass layoffs. You were unjustly fired so a less paid, less skilled, New World Order Republican, Nazi sympathizer could have your job. If you are Jewish, African-American, or Native American you probably have not been able to obtain a good, decent "white-collar" job since you were separated from your job during the mass layoffs of 2000-2003. The ISO 9000 "New World Order" Nazi-sympathetic C.E.O.'s, most of whom have Smith, Wilson or Patel for a last name have also conspired to de-value the worth of American white-collar professional computer workers. They fired them, most without warning, with no separation allowance.

Most had earned pensions that were now cancelled. These unfortunate American workers were replaced with foreign workers from Pakistan, India, Iraq, Iran, Afghanistan, Saudi Arabia, Russia, China, Vietnam, Korea and other "Communist" third world countries. Most of the foreign computer workers do not speak English, are less skilled, "possible terrorists" and are paid much less than the poor Americans who used to have those same jobs. The Republican's New World Order SS Nazis' "ordered" the ISO 9000 compliant C.E.O.s to initiate mass layoffs beginning in the year 2000 and they are not finished laying off yet. After the "mass layoffs," the C.E.O.s made millions of dollars due to their "smaller payroll expenses," while laid-off workers are unable to feed their families or find "decent" jobs that pay similar amounts of money as their old jobs.

Unemployment benefits are a joke! They pay former skilled workers poverty wages that are not enough to support a family on. The New World Order Republicans "stalled" a Bill to extend unemployment benefits while at the same time passing a Bill to increase their own salaries and give tax breaks to their rich corporate friends. If you check any state's newspaper classified ads there are very few jobs for "white collar" professionals, only low paying service industry jobs.

These same ISO 9000 New World Order following companies have conspired with each other to pay highly skilled computer workers and other white collar professionals much less money than they made before so that their C.E.O.s can make more money.

It is a Nazi-New World Order Republican plan to eliminate the "middle class" society in America. When the middle class has been eliminated, there will only be the "poor" and the "rich." The New World Order's rich "WASP" "ruling" class, desperately want more people to "serve" them. The "poor" are much easier to rule and control than the "middle-class." That is why the white-collar computer jobs have all but disappeared. Those jobs will not return unless the New World Order Nazi Republican Bush regime is defeated in the next election. If you value your "good" job, freedom and the survival of democracy in America, you must vote against the Nazi sympathetic New World Order Republican Regime in the next election.

Today's Republican Party is not "your father's" Republican Party. It has been corrupted by New World Order Nazi-idealistic, Jew & Black hating infiltrators posing as Religious Conservatives who want to take away your freedom. Companies that "adhere" to the ISO 9000 "New European Quality Standard" have conspired with the C.I.A.'s SS New World Order Nazis to create the horrible "depression-like" economy we have today. [67] Is it any wonder?

Because these SS Nazi C.I.A. New World Order agents bribed the right government officials including U.S. presidents for so many years, with billions of stolen Jewish Holocaust money, they are now listed as "officially" dead according to the U.S. Government. They are free to roam around the country conducted random acts of C.I.A. New World Order SS Nazi sponsored terrorism, like hijacking jet planes & crashing them into buildings, mailing anthrax, voter intimidation and election rigging. Just like their "good ole' days" in Nazi Germany. The C.I.A.'s SS Nazis are like phantoms. They have been planning and working very hard for 60 years to create a Fourth Reich - New World Order in America. The free world as we know it will cease to exist if a New World Order is created. It MUST be stopped at all cost! Vote against The New World Order in the next election! If we can eradicate the New World Order Nazi/C.I.A. menace from our U.S. Government that has been undermining our American way of life, maybe we can help prevent The Fourth Reich - New World Order from being created. It has already begun.
Can you name one "good" thing the C.I.A. has ever done for America?

Patriotically Yours,

Greg Hallett's most infamous acts include interviewing the KGB in Moscow a month after the Berlin Wall came down while being noted as a young Stalin lookalike. In 2002 he waltzed past 100 Secret Service agents at the Auckland Hilton and into President Bill Clinton's speech. Two months later he gave a speech in the Cook Islands outing Prime Minister Helen Clark as a KGB agent. This resulted in a poisoning and a bundle of police charges which he overturned in the High Court.

> "I turned up in shorts and a teeshirt with no notes and won the case in five minutes. As it turned out, the police officer was a twice-convicted criminal . . . so things are not as they seem."

Mr Hallett challenges known history by solving historical crimes in infinite detail. His most famous book Hitler Was A British Agent has in-depth historians agreeing with him.

INTRODUCTION

After the first edition of this book, historian Henry Makow PhD wrote:
"I understand you place Stalin in England from 1907–11 getting training. Robert Service has him attend a conference in 1907 for a few days and then return to Russia. He has him arrested, deported to Siberia and escaping from there during this period. Do you still assert he spent years in England? Is there any corroboration?

"I find your general paradigm credible but we need to support the factual assertions.

"Best wishes,

"Henry."

The Spymaster replied:
"The British had this business of calling houses 'Siberia'. They called houses Russian names, German names and French names. These were all in London for everybody to see. It was not uncommon for houses to have three or four barrel names, like 'The White House' in English, French and German.

"It was a big fad of Edwardian England to call houses after things.

"At this time there was a prominent house in Wimbledon called 'Lorelei'. It was assumed at the time that it was broken up into flats and apartments for prominenti, but it was a house of ill repute that covered for the SIS.

"The area Siberia contained Gulags as well as towns where the police guards lived cheek by jowl with the revolutionaries.

"There were other sorts of surveillance where one officer was meant to have conversations with several revolutionaries within a day and monitor who they were talking to. Often they would sublet this job to other political prisoners who were supposedly on their side . . . and the whole thing got contaminated.

"Stalin had a habit of intimidating officials and police. He would talk about them in a deprecatory manner and say, 'If only the superiors knew what this little piece of trash was up to. Do you think they would take an interest?'

"Stalin would also talk about dealing with prominenti in other countries in detail. He would make comments like 'I wonder if I should write to my English friends about you?'

"Stalin could send mail out of Siberia, whereas many other prisoners couldn't. Nobody knew whether what he sent out was censored or not.

"There was also Stalin's time in Tavistock, which is rarely if ever recorded.

"We were just lucky to locate Robert Muldoon's London Tavistock training (1945–47), after which he became the Prime Minister of New Zealand (1975–84) for nine years and left the country bankrupt."

Greg Hallett replied:

"Such Tavistock people are given every advantage and it would be another book all together, establishing exactly where Stalin was, as opposed to where he was recorded. All we really know is that Stalin was being trained to be the head of a criminal state and that training did not occur in one location.

"Stalin had to prove that he could run a crime state by being a ruthless criminal and he did this training with British, Freemasonry and Jewish support, and backing. This occurred in England, France and Switzerland, as well as other places across Europe.

"Stalin was a Martinist Freemason and he was given every psychological training, including an initiation from Gurdjieff.

"In Tavistock, Stalin learnt to survive on half an hour's sleep every night. The Tavistock training was then around 9½ months – the time of a human gestation.

"The German Admiral Doenitz was trained by the British in this way and was committed to a Manchester mental hospital for 9½ months at the end of WWI. Now the Tavistock training is a lot quicker, and from what I have experienced, it can be done in ten hours, plus the ongoing follow ups, contacts and testing situations."

The British agent Doenitz was repeatedly promoted until he became Commander-in-Chief of the Navy, and then replaced Hitler and Goebbels as President, Head of State, Head of Government and Chancellor of Germany – another double agent British mental patient!

The double agent activity was everywhere. The purpose was not to train one for a particular country, but for a certain war. The more training, the bigger the war, the more devastating, and the longer it lasted.

Espavo Sozo - treasurer@platinumparty.org - 7 March 2013

When the German Navy changed from the Enigma code to M4, Doenitz contacted his submarines up to 70 times per day. This helped compromise the codes and the British were able to locate and attack German submarines and U-boats, most of them completely unprepared and unprotected.

Stalin was trained for the Bolshevik Revolution and the Jewish takeover of Russia. He was also trained to lead Russia into WWII and the Cold War.

Stalin's training in Britain included the Tavistock Freud Hilton, robberies, a siege, and a general bonding exercise with his second cousin, Home Secretary – Winston Churchill.

To the Illuminati, there are no enemies in war, only allies with similar training. To the Illuminati, the idea is not to win the war, but to sell the war to as many people for as long as possible. This includes selling the war for generations afterwards – hence all the books and none of the conclusions.

The philosophy of the Bolshevik Revolution was guided by the German-Jewish philosopher Karl Marx, who had spent his time living and training in London.

Notable revolutionaries who trained in London included Stalin (1903, 1907, 1910–11); Lenin (April 1902–May 1903, August 1903, April–May 1905, 12–25 May 1907, May 1908, November 1911); and Trotsky (1905, 12–25 May 1907).

It would appear that Britain was doing everything it could to train foreign revolutionaries and then went about supporting those revolutions. It would be hard for Britain to deny that it had its hand in virtually every revolution of the 20th century, and was thus the centre of Illuminati processing.

Dear Your Majesty The Queen,

It’s worse than we thought.

Official British history is bunkum. The Reverends, Bishops and Boy Scout leaders sent out to the colonies turned out to be army colonels who colonised through paedophilia, torture and arms.

The war heroes you most honoured turned out to be homosexual child-sex abusing necrophiliacs. Your supposed enemies turned out to be your agents who removed your cousins in opposing monarchies. Your prime ministers turned out to be your nephews and your bankers turned out to be your parents.

Espavo Sozo - treasurer@platinumparty.org -7 March 2013

Your genealogy is illegitimate and the only consistent breeding line has been the secret society spy bankers who used you to declare war whenever they were prepared. Never has a double agent family, like your own, been so completely involved in treachery, and such expansive treachery.

From the close scrutiny of history, which is your history, I have come to the conclusion that the Saxe-Coburg-Gothas, Windsors and Mountbattens are illegitimate treasonous double agent families who should be exiled from anything commoners call integrity.

You are the descendant of a long line of anarchists and in the correct light of history you have pirate status.

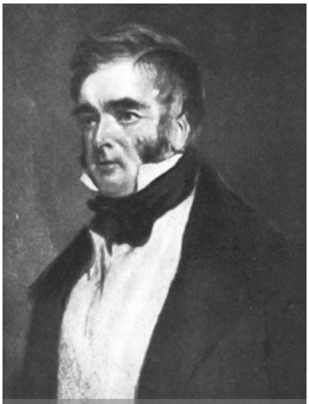
Yours sincerely,

Greg Hallett

Breeding Concubines

King Edward VII sires Winston Churchill

Due to a series of deaths and failed marriages around her, Victoria (18) became Queen on 20 June 1837 until she died at the age of 81 on 22 January 1901. She survived four assassination attempts, one thwarted by PC William Trounce, hence the verb "trounced".



Lord Melbourne (1779–1848).

Queen Victoria's first relationship was with Lord Melbourne, an avuncular mentor 40 years her senior, whom she made Prime Minister (1834–41), but then she was always asking people to be Prime Minister, sometimes pestering them repeatedly.

When her first cousin, Francis Charles Augustus Albert Emanuel of the Saxe-Coburg-Gotha branch of the House of Wettin, became royal consort, Lord Melbourne stepped back. First cousins and both born near Coburg, Germany, Queen Victoria (24 May 1819–22 January 1901) and Albert (26 August 1819–14 December 1861) married (10 February 1840), conceived their first child 5 days later and Princess Victoria was born on 21 November 1840.[1] Over the next 17 years (1840–57) they had nine children who bore 44 grandchildren. It was a completely new royal dynasty, one in which Victoria was sick of being pregnant.

Their second child, the eldest son, Prince 'Bertie' Edward (1841–1910) married (1863) Princess Alexandra (1844–1925), the eldest daughter of King Christian IX of Denmark. They had five legitimate children between 1864 and 1869.

[1] Conception dates are broad. After coitus the sperm takes 2–3 days to mate with the egg. Gestation lasts 37–42 weeks (259–294 days), making the 'sex date' 261–297 days prior to birth. The average of this is 279 days. All the conception dates here are taken back to the median 'sex date' of 279 days prior with a ± range of 18 days. (Argue all you want.) To work out the 'sex date', add 86 days and take off a year then accept a range of ± 18 days. The father of the children is loosely stated here as Prince Albert and the 'sex date' was 18 January–23 February 1840, giving leeway for Victoria to have had a 'sex date' up to 23 days before marriage to her cousin Prince consort Albert.

Duke of Clarence.

Fat Mary & Mary of Teck.

'Bertie' – iconic swinger.

Their first son, Prince Albert 'Eddy' Edward Wettin, the Duke of Clarence (their surname didn't become 'Windsor' until 1917) was retarded and his tutors said "he barely knew the meaning of the word 'read'". He was a homosexual, suspected of the Jack the Ripper murders, and died aged 28 (1864–92), to the relief of the nation.

The second-oldest son, George (1865–1936) took his retarded brother's girlfriend and made her his fiancée. She was Princess Mary of Teck, daughter of 'Fat Mary' and became Queen consort Mary to King George V (1910–36).

Their father Prince Albert 'Bertie' Edward (9 November 1841–6 May 1910) became King Edward VII (1901–1910). He had been estranged from his mother Queen Victoria from the day Victoria's husband died in 1861. They never made amends.

Espavo Sozo - treasurer@platinumparty.org

Soon after Bertie finished his legitimate breeding (1865–69) he had a plethora of mistresses who were present at his coronation (sitting in the box behind him) and served him to his death in 1910. In horse-racing parlance this was known as "the King's loose box".

When Prince Albert 'Bertie' Edward was having his affairs (1870–1910), Princess Alexandra spent her time doing charity work in what became a marriage of convenience where there was always a third party, if not a fourth and fifth. Bertie was a dedicated overlapper and open wife-cheater, even in his own household, and at public events. This was especially so with his last mistress Mrs Keppel (1898–1910). Prince 'Bertie' Edward was the iconic swinger of his times and the Edwardian period is named after him.

Prince 'Bertie' Edward (1841–1910) was married at 22 and so were many of his mistresses. Some even saw it as their duty to the Crown to serve him sexually. His principal mistresses were Lillie Langtry (1853–1929), Daisy Warwick (1861–1938) and Alice Keppel (1869–1947) but he had many more in between.

Prince (Bertie) Edward got a woman pregnant in 1861 when he was twenty and this led to his father's death and delayed his wedding. That his wife, Princess Alexandra, (1844–1925) openly tolerated his affairs astounds historians even today.

Edward's affairs did place a huge strain on the Princess of Wales.

In order, his mistresses were Mary 'Patsy' Fitzpatrick from her teenage years (aged 14–18, 1870–June 1874); mother of Winston Churchill, Lady Randolph 'Jennie' Jerome Churchill (aged 19–22, 23 Aug. 1873–76); Francis Evelyn 'Daisy' Greville née Maynard/Countess of Warwick (14+, 1875–6 & 1890s–98[2]); the first pin-up star and later actress Lillie Langtry (1876–81); actress Sarah Bernhardt (1879–1890s); Mary 'Patsy' Fitzpatrick's daughter Mary Theresa Olivia 'Daisy' Cornwallis-West (aged 15–18, June 1889–

Sonia Keppel was the half-sister of King George V and the great-aunt of the current QEII.

Mary 'Patsy' Fitzpatrick

'Patsy'.

Mary 'Patsy' Fitzpatrick is listed as a mistress of Prince 'Bertie' Edward from her teenage years and one of his first mistresses. She is always referred to as 'the teenage mistress Mary Patsy Fitzpatrick' and never Mary 'Patsy' Cornwallis-West. Because the date of her birth is a State Secret (under more than the 100-year rule), confusion remains as to whether she was the teenager or she was Prince 'Bertie' Edward's lover when he was a teenager.

In support of this, her birth dates are variously given as 1835, 1856 and 1858. Mary 'Patsy' Fitzpatrick's age is given as that of her husband's MP Colonel Frederick William Cornwallis-West (20 March 1835–14 July 1917) so that she would appear to be 22 when Prince 'Bertie' Edward was 16 and the 'teenager'.

A husband's birth and death dates are applied to a young wife to cover up that she, was at some point, underaged. This is not uncommon historical practice. Marriages were often part of a trade agreement, or in the case of Scotland, a daughter was kidnapped, the parents were killed, the girl grew up as a sister, and when she came of age, she married the father.

Mary Patsy's father, Reverend Frederick Fitzpatrick (b.b.[3] 1823–95) married the 19-year-old Olivia Taylour (8 Feb. 1824–4 Sept. 1916) on 10 August 1853. The good Reverend Fred Fitzpatrick (>53) also had another daughter, Edwina Virginia Joanna Fitzpatrick (b.b. 1876–4 Oct. 1919) to a second wife, who is rarely available in any genealogy researched.

Mary 'Patsy' Fitzpatrick (b.b. 3 Oct. 1856– 21 July 1920) is listed as a teenage mistress of Prince 'Bertie' Edward. Since Mary 'Patsy' Fitzpatrick married on 3 October 1872, for this to have been legal, she would have been at least 16 and born in 1856, prior to 3 October. At just 16, she married a man 21 years older.

Mary 'Patsy' Fitzpatrick's illegal teenage years (13–16) were 3 October 1869–2 October 1872 and her legal teenage years (16–19) were 3 October 1872–2 October 1875. Her affair with Prince 'Bertie' Edward was from post-October 1870–June 1874, when she was 14–17 years old.

Patsy's husband, MP Colonel Frederick William Cornwallis-West (20 March 1835–4 July 1917) was a descendant of Henry VIII. His father was Colonel Frederick Richard Cornwallis-West of Ruthin Castle, Denbighshire, Wales.

> Often these marriages to a notable were arranged to cover up the past indiscretions of a royal, and equally, to provide a young concubine for the royal. They are usually beautiful young women married to older established men and often from the gene pool 'Fitz', with a history of illegitimate children to royalty and the children of reverends. Anthony Blunt's house father, the Anglican priest Stanley Blunt, is a case in point. These children are often very promiscuous and in Mary 'Patsy' Fitzpatrick's case, historians noted her as a serial flirt. For Mary 'Patsy' Fitzpatrick, flirting was a survival skill.

The husbands tend to be the children of colonels, MPs, the Queen's servants, or a mixture of the above. Reverends specialise in denial and the denial of sexual indiscretions. Colonels also know how to keep their mouths shut and their work keeps them out of the public eye. Reverends can always refer to God and colonels can always refer to their secretary.

Colonel Frederick William Cornwallis-West was made an MP with a whole lot more security as well as his father's castle in Wales. He already had a 6-year-old daughter, Constance Edwina 'Shelagh' Cornwallis-West (b.b. 1866–21 January 1970). 'Shelagh' was only 11 years younger than her stepmother Mary 'Patsy' Fitzpatrick (16). The day and month of Shelagh's birthday is also not available.

In a marriage of royal convenience MP Colonel William Cornwallis-West (37) and Mary 'Patsy' Fitzpatrick (16) married (3 October 1872) and had a daughter, Mary Theresa Olivia 'Daisy' Cornwallis-West (b. 28 June 1873) followed by a son, George Frederick Myddleton Cornwallis-West (b. 14 November 1874).

Shelagh.

'Daisy'.

George.

---

[3] b.b. – "born before".

Their first child 'Daisy' Cornwallis-West followed in her mother's footsteps and also became a courtesan to Prince 'Bertie' Edward.

What the public didn't know is that Prince 'Bertie' Edward (28) was having sex with Mary 'Patsy' Fitzpatrick from when she was 14. 'Patsy' was 15 when they conceived a daughter on 22 September 1872 (±18 days, 4 Sept.–10 Oct. 1872). 'Patsy' then hurriedly married Colonel William Cornwallis-West and they (Prince Edward and Patsy) had a daughter named 'Daisy' 243 days later. The average gestation is 5 weeks longer.

For this reason, most genealogies don't even mention 'Daisy' as Patsy's daughter and she is hidden by 'official historians' – those who believe in the right for others not to know and the right for royals to practise child-sex abuse, incest and paedophilia – the sport of kings.

The daughter, Mary 'Daisy' Cornwallis-West, also became a courtesan to Prince 'Bertie' Edward and they formed a sexual relationship when Mary 'Daisy' Cornwallis-West was 15–18 years old.

> Prince 'Bertie' Edward (32) was having sex with his daughter.
> This was incest, and it was royal incest.
> Prince 'Bertie' Edward/King Edward VII qualifies for both child sex abuse and incest. He didn't care. He had nothing to do with running the monarchy and did his best, quite subconsciously, to overthrow the monarchy at every step. His first legitimate child, born retarded, is a case in point. He could well have been the product of an extremely drunk conception from a prince who really didn't give a damn.

Sozo - treasurer@platinumparty.org

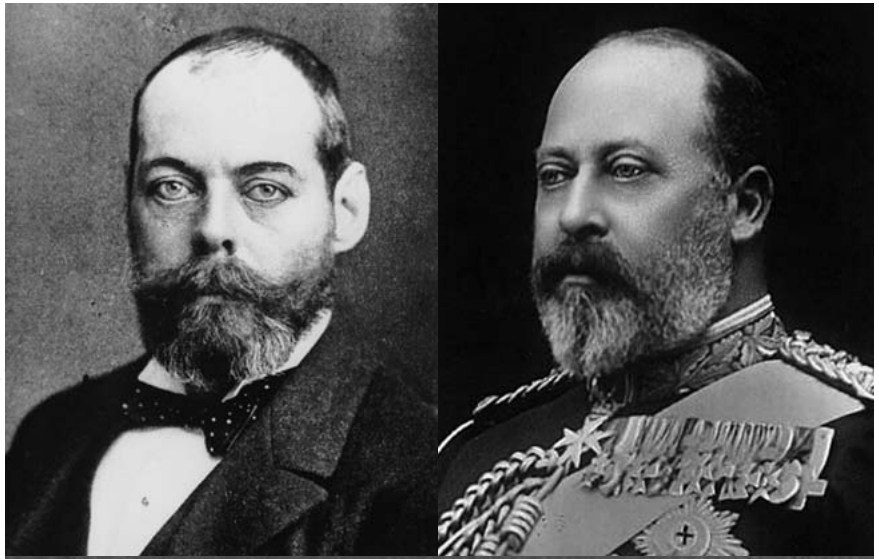
Out of all the historical research done, the birth date and images of Mary 'Patsy' née Fitzpatrick Cornwallis-West were the hardest to find. There are no photos of Mary 'Patsy' née Fitzpatrick Cornwallis-West. There is an undated painting of her in her early 20s and a Vanity Fair caricature labelled "'Women of the Day', Mrs George Cornwallis-West, (Churchill's mother), 11 November 1912, Supplement No. 2292".

The image gives just enough information to see that her (b. 1856) face and features (56) combined with Prince 'Bertie' Edward (b. 1841) could achieve Mary 'Daisy' (b. 1873) and her brother, George Frederick Myddleton Cornwallis-West (b. 1874).

Mary 'Patsy' née Fitzpatrick Cornwallis-West conceived a daughter on 22 September 1872 (up to 29 days before marriage) and gave birth on 28 June 1873. She had no pregnancy for 7½ months and then conceived a son on 8 February 1874, giving birth on 14 November 1874. The two children were born 16½ months apart.

Mary 'Patsy' Cornwallis-West got pregnant for the first time on 22 September 1872, married on 3 October 1872, was obviously pregnant from Christmas 1872–28 June 1873 and from 1 May–14 November 1874 when George Frederick Myddleton Cornwallis-West was born.

Mary 'Patsy' Fitzpatrick (17) was increasingly replaced by the sexual extrovert, tigress and penis conqueror, Lady 'Jennie' Jerome/Jacobson Churchill (19) from August 1873.



Lord Randolph Churchill (left) and Edward, Prince of Wales looking like brothers. These were Winston Churchill's house father and his biological father. This would make their shared biological father (and/or grandfather) Nathan Mayer Rothschild.

Lady Randolph 'Jennie' Jerome Churchill (19, 9 Jan. 1854–29 June 1921) was Prince 'Bertie' Edward's second lover (23 August 1873–76) overlapping with, and after, Mary 'Patsy' née Fitzpatrick Cornwallis-West.

Jennie and Patsy's two sons were born within 16 days of each other. George Frederick Myddleton Cornwallis-West was conceived on 8 February 1874 and Winston Churchill was conceived on the 22nd, both by Prince Edward. They were born 14 and 30 November 1874.

Mary 'Patsy's son, George Frederick Myddleton Cornwallis-West (25, b. 1874), then married (28 July 1900) Lady Randolph 'Jennie' Jerome Churchill (46, b. 9 Jan. 1854), mother of Winston Churchill (b. 1874).

Mary 'Patsy' Cornwallis-West & Lady Randolph 'Jennie' Jerome Churchill

Prince 'Bertie' Edward (b. 1841) and Lord Randolph Churchill (b. 1849) were born seven years apart. During certain periods of their lives, they looked incredibly similar and could easily have acted as body doubles for one another.

The Jerome/Churchill wedding was a "hushed and rushed affair" with none of the splendor a society wedding of such wealth and standing would normally receive. There was no public ceremony, little mention in the press, and the Duke and Duchess of Marlborough were conspicuously absent, even though this 9th Duke of Marlborough was Winston Churchill's 'first cousin'. He, Charles Richard John Spencer-Churchill, had married the American railroad heiress Consuelo Vanderbilt and used her dowry to restore Blenheim Palace. His second marriage, to the American Gladys Marie Deacon, was so bad she kept a revolver beside her plate whenever they dined together. The Spencer-Churchills were that strange.

What should have been the wedding of the year was royally snubbed as too many people knew it was incestuous. Lady Churchill had married her son's half-brother, 20 years her junior. This is further confirmed in the approximate world of antiques. Mary 'Patsy' Cornwallis-West was, in 1912, referred to as "Churchill's mother". Antique dealers are trained gossipers and often give leads into the scandals of the day. Mrs 'Patsy' Cornwallis-West and Lady 'Jennie' Jerome Churchill were related through their sons. Prince 'Bertie' Edward/King Edward VII was the father of Mary Theresa Olivia 'Daisy' Cornwallis-West (28 June 1873 –29 June 1943), George Frederick Myddleton Cornwallis-West (14 Nov. 1874 –1 April 1951) and Winston Leonard Spencer Churchill (30 Nov. 1874–24 January 1965). But wait, it gets worse.

Espavo Sozo - treasurer@platinumparty.org - 7 March 2013

Lady 'Jennie' Jerome Churchill was so loose she had a second illegitimate child, this time to Colonel John Strange Jocelyn, an Irish noble (5th Earl of Roden, 1823–97).

'Jack' Strange Spencer Churchill.

Her second child, John 'Jack' Strange Spencer Churchill (4 February 1880–23 February 1947) was universally noted as 'not the son of Lord Randolph Churchill'. Such was the shame, he was born out of London, in Dublin. He was also educated at Harrow School in London, became a major in the Oxfordshire Yeomanry, fought in WWI and received a DSO in 1918.

Neither of Lady Churchill's children were to Lord Randolph Churchill. He was a cuckolded man, rapidly elevated into politics, brought down even quicker, and spent the rest of his life going for long walks, with Africa being the only continent big enough. But even that's not the end of it.

The illegitimate Lady 'Jennie' Jerome Churchill had married (1900) her illegitimate son's half-brother, and her third husband (1918) also appeared to be related to her second illegitimate son. Divorced in 1914, Lady 'Jennie' Jerome Churchill (64) married (1 June 1918) Montague Phippen Porch (41), who was almost three years younger than Winston (43). She died three years later (67). Both marriages were considered scandalous, but she knew tricks. Here was an illegitimate woman subconsciously dedicated to cuckolding, incest, and promoting her illegitimate children as though they were royalty.

Montague Phippen Porch.

Both mothers, Mrs 'Patsy' Cornwallis-West and Lady 'Jennie' Jerome Churchill, were the lovers of Prince 'Bertie' Edward/later King Edward VII and both of their sons looked like Prince 'Bertie' Edward. Both of their sons also looked like brothers at various points in their lives. Winston Churchill looks nothing like Lord Randolph Spencer Churchill. Lord Randolph Churchill knew this and spurned his son, having little or nothing to do with him. The newspapers, owned by Winston's father-in-law, served to protect and promote Winston at every step, but even the British press noted the astonishing lack of resemblance.

> "The people of America are awaiting the coming of Mr. Winston Churchill, who is to lecture on the Transvaal war in all the great cities over there. They know as much about the historic Churchill family as do the English themselves. They remember his beautiful mother was one of the first Americans to marry into English nobility, and they will be pleased to hear that he is proud to acknowledge himself 'half an American'. They have read his newspaper letter and his books; they expect him to have a great future, and they wonder what sort of man he is. Winston Leonard Spencer Churchill is twenty-six years old, with the mind of a far older man and the vitality and enthusiasm of a far younger one. He > is a well-built man, about the average height, with very broad shoulders and the strong frame of his mother's people. But you have to forget and look away from his face in order to see his frame, for his face is of a highly nervous, wholly intellectual type. He had all the nervous energy and fire that wore out and burned up his father's brilliant life. But he has also, as I have said, the physique of his mother's people. Of his father there is nothing apparent or repeated in his flesh except Lord Randolph's brow. But in temperament, originality, dash, eloquence, and the magic art of swaying men he is his father's promissory note, payable when he is more mature."[4]

Bertie and the Blue Monkeys

The other men who hung around in Prince 'Bertie' Edward's sexual mist were, in order of peerage, the Duke of Devonshire, the Marquis de Soveral (the Blue Monkey), Viscount Chaplin, Lord Charles Beresford, more than one (Baron de) Rothschild and Sir Ernest Cassel.[5]

The Baron de Rothschilds included the patriarch, Baron Mayer Amschel de Rothschild, Baron Lionel de Rothschild, Baron Alphonse de Rothschild, Baron Ferdinand de Rothschild, Alfred de Rothschild, Arthur de Rothschild and Leopold de Rothschild. Photographs of these people are rare, but their images can be found in the Vanity Fair caricatures (1869–1914). The first two were half-brothers to Prince 'Bertie' Edward, and Baron Lionel de Rothschild was also the father of his sisters Princess Helena and Princess Beatrice.

Spymaster: "Queen Victoria married Albert Saxe-Coburg of Gotha, a well-known stellar representative of the German aristocracy. He was so pro-German the English nobles literally wrote him off. They didn't trust him one iota. He was exceptionally talented and capable, and reinvented the Quartermaster System for the British Army.

[5] Sir Ernest Cassel was part of the Cavendish family, one of the wealthiest in England. The 7th Duke of Devonshire, William Cavendish, was Chancellor of Cambridge University from 1861–91. His son, Spencer Compton Cavendish, the Marquess of Hartington was an MP and led the Liberal Party. Queen Victoria asked him three times to be Prime Minister. In 1891 he succeeded his father as the 8th Duke of Devonshire. His brother Lord Frederick Cavendish was also an MP as well as the Chief Secretary for Ireland (assassinated in 1882). The 9th Duke of Devonshire became the Governor-General of Canada in 1915 without Canada's Prime Minister being consulted.

"Prince Albert Saxe-Coburg-Gotha was a decent chap for a Kraut, far too devoted to the little woman of course, but not a bad stickman for all that. How he mated with Queen Victoria is beyond most. He was much too clever for the Colonel Blimps of the British Army, but he wasn't a bad shopkeeper and that was a lot better than the leading monarchs before him."

Ex-colonel in the British Army: "The only trouble with Albert was he was related to a mankey lot back in Krautland."

Their eldest son was born Prince Albert Edward and was always known to the family as 'Bertie'. When Bertie was 20, he got a girl pregnant. Prince Albert Saxe-Coburg-Gotha went to chastise his son, caught a cold, returned to Windsor Castle and died of pneumonia soon after. Queen Victoria never forgave Bertie for "killing" her beloved Albert, and from 1861 to 1901, these 40 years were known publicly as her mourning years. But that too was a cover. Queen Victoria was enjoying a healthy sex life with Prince Albert's ghillie John Brown.

Prince 'Bertie' Edward was never given a role to play in government or the monarchy and was kept in the dark and ignorant of all affairs of state. Queen Victoria and her son Bertie remained totally distant for the next forty years.

Prince 'Bertie' Edward got Queen Victoria back with the most daring sexual escapades, pretty much designed to overthrow the monarchy. To do this he routinely and openly cheated on his wife, the Princess of Denmark, and had a continuous series of overlapping mistresses.[6]

What Bertie didn't know was that his mother Queen Victoria was made of the same stock and had nine children to three different fathers and that the Rothschild's had interbred so thoroughly with the British Royals that the Royal Family were a virtual subset of the Rothschilds.[7]

Bertie knew that his philandering was encouraged by the Rothschilds, but did not know them to be relatives. He also did not know that his house father Prince Albert was illegitimate, but the Rothschilds did. The Rothschilds knew Prince Edward's destiny, but Prince Edward did not.

Prince 'Bertie' Edward's love of sexual escapades was already apparent in their official family photo (three generations, circa Christmas 1900).

His eyes belie the boredom he has with all things family, official and droll, as opposed to pomp and ceremony and other women. There is enough space between Prince 'Bertie' Edward and his wife Princess Alexandra to fit an extra two people in, and by that time this was any of eight overlapping mistresses.

But what is most surprising about this photo is the striking similarity between Edward's grandchildren and Winston Churchill. Up to the age of 28 (1902) Winston Churchill was also the spitting image of George Frederick Myddleton Cornwallis-West, Bertie's other child.

Lillie Langtry

Without analysing its effect on others, the definition of a mistress is best borrowed from the definition of courtesan: "A courtesan is a person paid and/or supported for the giving of social companionship and intimate liaisons to one or more partners. The word is generally reserved for those who enjoyed the most social status for such services. Although the term had been applied to people from several cultures and historical periods, it is most applicable for those to whom it was first given: the women of Renaissance Europe who held a socially recognised, if not quite socially accepted, position as well-compensated companions."[8]

Prince 'Bertie' Edward's first acknowledged mistress (1876) was the married Lillie Langtry (24) from the island of Jersey. Lillie Langtry was born Emilie Charlotte Le Breton (13 October 1853–12 February 1929). She was the daughter of the Dean of Jersey and the Rector of St. Saviours who was locally known as 'The Dirty Dean'. Swinging and incest was part of the family make-up.

Like a lot of Pommie families, the Dean rooted them all, his children, boys and girls, men and women.

Emilie Charlotte Le Breton/ Lillie Langtry.

As a teenager, Emilie Charlotte Le Breton was nicknamed 'Jersey Lillie' after the Jersey flower, and thereafter she was simply known as 'Lillie'. She had great skin and was acknowledged as the most beautiful teenage girl on the island, so much so that she received proposals of marriage at 14. What is most intriguing is that her father was the ugliest man on Jersey Island.

Lillie's father, Peter William Corbet Le Breton married Emilie Le Breton and had four sons. Emilie desperately wanted a daughter. She achieved this by having sex with another man with a history of conceiving daughters, until she conceived a daughter. In this way, Lillie had a half-brother who she attempted an incestuous relationship with. Someone else imbued features and characteristics in Lillie that Peter William Corbet Le Breton did not have . . . beauty, a small waist, and a desire for London's high social life. Swinging was accepted by both parents in the Anglican Le Breton family.

Lillie Langtry.

Emilie Charlotte 'Lillie' Le Breton refused all suitors on Jersey Island because she desperately wanted to leave (escape the incestuous paedophilia) and join the high London social life, the Marlborough set if she could.

She (20) went some way to achieving this by marrying (March 1874) the recently widowed Edward Langtry (1847–97) and sailing away with the rich Irish landowner to their new address at Eaton Place, in the very fashionable Belgravia, then just outside of London (an East London suburb from 1902). Lillie soon joined the society set and met a large number of pseudo-intellectuals – Oscar Wilde, the bisexual buggar in a cover-marriage amongst them.

Her principal attraction to Edward Langtry was his 80-foot yacht, The Red Gauntlet, in which to escape Jersey in style. She became Lillie Langtry and Edward left her alone with the servants, a lot. She caught tuberculosis (so the story goes) and convinced her doctor that she needed time out in London for health reasons. That's a turn-up for the books.

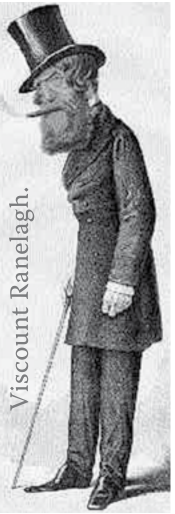
Lillie Langtry.

Within two years of marriage, Lillie Langtry escaped to the London high life (1876) with a mixture of her mother's genes and a high society London suitor with lots of daughters. Mr Mitford perhaps.

David Mitford (1878–1958), Lord Redesdale, had seven daughters famous for their beauty, but the timing was wrong. His father's was spot on, which would have made Lillie Langtry related to Winston Churchill's wife. Algernon Bertram Freeman-Mitford, 1st Baron Redesdale (1837–1916) was an English diplomat who entered the Foreign Office in 1858. Lillie was conceived and born in 1853.

Soon after arriving in London, her only younger brother (five boys) died in a riding accident. Emilie Le Breton was probably trying for a second daughter (another concubine for the Prince), but he turned out to be a boy that looked like Lillie and not like the four brothers, so he was killed by the Royal Stonemen. These royal contract killers tamper with the equine hardware and scare the horses as they jump fences. When 'the mark' is lying on the ground, they hit them on the head with a stone, one solid biff on the temple and they're dead on the ground. If her younger sibling had been a girl, the two would have been as famous as the Mitford sisters, but this was not to happen for another generation.



Viscount Ranelagh.

While she was mourning, Lillie Langtry was invited into the house of her father's friend, the equally ugly 7th Viscount of Ranelagh, Thomas Heron Jones (1812–95) who lived in Lownes Square. Vanity Fair did a most unflattering caricature of Thomas Heron Jones in 1870 portraying him as a scowling sexual deviant (right), not unlike Lillie's father.

Regardless, Lillie Langtry, in her blissful sexual Pollyanna ignorance, turned up in black (her only other dress) and two well-known artists (Frank Mills and Everett Millais) were there to sketch her for the first time. This is the equivalent of having leading fashion magazine photographers in-house to launch a debutante while grieving.

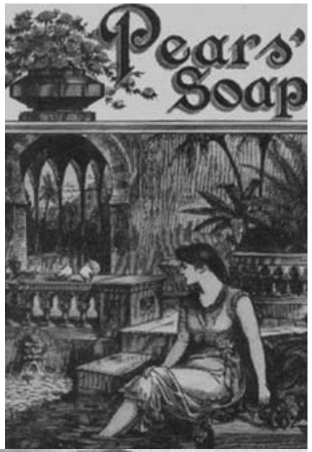
Everett Millais made a sketch that looked incredibly like a photograph and her image was nominated for the 1874 Royal Academy Exhibition 'Picture of the Year'. Other artists, including Whistler, clamoured to paint her. By 1877, Lillie's image was being sold everywhere on postcards and outsold all others. She became the first pin-up and with her near perfect complexion she sold Pears' Soap.



The 'porn' status intrigued Prince 'Bertie' Edward, who was by now well aware of 'breeding concubines' and would have known that she was the daughter of some handsome sly-rooting noble he knew.

Prince 'Bertie' made enquiries and Sir Allen Young arranged a dinner party at Lady Sebright's where Lillie Langtry sat next to the Prince and Edward Langtry sat at the far end of the table, a social outcast, watching as his wife got hit on. Bertie was so enthralled with Lillie's nature, violet eyes and beauty that he refused to attend social functions unless she was present.

'Bertie'.

treasurer@platinumparty.org - 4 March 201

Lillie was immediately embedded into the Marlborough set and became the talk of all London. So successful was her launch (22) that she became famous for the next five decades. Victims of paedophilia and incest will do anything to get attention and she lived a full and complete life. (Untalented paedophile victims tend to find refuge in pyromania.)

Prince 'Bertie' Edward promenaded Lillie Langtry around with him in his horse and carriage. Dressmakers flocked to give her their new creations, artists vied to sketch her, and the media, mindful of the Guild system controlling their ability to earn a decent coin in England, refused to mention the affair. You either saw it or you didn't know it was happening.

Such was the attention on Lillie Langtry that she is acknowledged as making advertising socially acceptable. Her hats, clothes and hairstyles were copied across the country and Pears' Soap used her sexual image to advertise their gentleness. They ignored her faults.

Lillie Langtry had nothing in common with her father, completely different talents, nothing in the face and even less in the body, although they showed similar titled and sexually deviant contacts when it mattered. She had an incredibly thin waist (the corset helped) and an arse the size of a wheelbarrow (the corset helped).

Prince 'Bertie' Edward had no morals, none whatsoever. It was as if he was born without empathy. Word got to Princess Alexandra and in 1878 Prince 'Bertie' Edward formally introduced Lillie to his much-loathed mother, Queen Victoria. Lillie presented with three huge white ostrich feathers in her hair, the symbol of the Prince of Wales, of which Bertie was the current prince. It was a confident sign that she would be around a while. Lillie even spent time with the royal children, and the youngest, Prince Leopold (6), put a picture of 'Lillie Langtry' above his bed. Princess Alexandra had to take it down. It took a while, but Alexandra and Lillie eventually developed a relationship of mutual tolerance. Queen Victoria and Lillie did not.

Lillie Langtry.

Queen Victoria had done her research and found Lillie to be the victim of incest and paedophilia, not averse to sado-masochism, a sexually adventurous swinger and a social climber.

In the first year of their meeting (1876) the overweight, cigar-smoking, bald, low IQ, low EQ, old-looking 35-year-old Prince 'Bertie' Edward began building a getaway for the two of them. Lillie was given free reign on the design and came up with a red brick Tudor manor with multiple gables and dormers, and formally named it 'Langtry Manor', but it was always called 'The Red House'. While it was being built, they used the home of Lord Derby (now Langtry Lodge). They had quirky things in the house, which showed they were swingers, and whatever happened in the house, stayed in the house. Beneath the minstrels gallery the line read, "They say What say they? Let them say". They were quite c'est la vie about their swinging, such was their life.

A stained-glass window dated 1881 is testament to this. It commemorates the birth of Lillie's daughter, Jeanne-Marie Langtry (8 March 1881–1964), born in Paris with the help of Prince 'Bertie' Edward's physician.

Jeanne-Marie was raised as Lillie Langtry's niece and didn't find out Lillie (46) was her mother until she was 18 (1899). Neither Prince 'Bertie' Edward nor her husband Edward Langtry were the father.

Lillie Langtry was not a straight-up girl. She relished the attention of other men and often tired of the older Bertie, 12 years her senior. Being in the Marlborough swinging set, she soon got word that she was not her father's daughter ("I met your father. He doesn't look a thing like you") and moved into even more bizarre sexual behaviour. She had an affair on the side (two was not enough) with Bertie's nephew-in-law, Royal Navy officer, Prince Louis Battenburg.

Prince Louis Battenburg (24 May 1854–11 September 1921) was the father of Lord Louis 'Uncle Dickie' Mountbatten and grandfather of Prince Philip (QEII's husband). The homosexual incestuous Lord Louis Mountbatten (25 June 1900–27 August 1979) was the unfortunate mentor to the unfortunate Prince Charles (14 November 1948–). Prince Charles was unfortunate in parentage, name, looks, qualities and mentor. These patterns carried on through his life, having two younger half-brothers.

Lillie Langtry cheated on Edward Langtry, her much older husband, and she cheated on him with Prince 'Bertie' Edward, and right before his eyes. Within five years, she had cuckolded her husband, spent all his money and left him for bankrupt (1879). She was that sort of gal.

After four years as chief concubine, Lillie Langtry (26) met Louis Battenberg (25) in the spring of 1880 and they soon conceived (2 June 1880) a daughter together. As soon as Prince Louis Battenburg knew of the conception, he went on a long sea voyage on the Royal Abandon and had little or nothing to do with his daughter. It was also a wise idea to escape the wrath of Prince 'Bertie' Edward (38).[9]

Jeanne-Marie Langtry's father could have been Arthur Jesse, but Lord Louis Mountbatten (Prince Louis Battenburg's son) confirms it was his father and that Lillie Langtry was his semi-official mistress, although she was married to someone else at the time . . . a Mr Langtry perhaps, and was also Prince 'Bertie' Edward's official courtesan.

Prince 'Bertie' Edward preferred married mistresses. It broke more rules and was easier to cover if they fell pregnant or fell out. The alternative was to go through the expense of arranging a marriage of convenience, something he had learnt with his previous pregnant mistress, the 15-year-old Mary 'Patsy' Fitzpatrick.

Things were building up for Lillie. She had become world famous overnight, been the centre of social attention for five years, had an affair with the future King of England for five years, had a daughter with his nephew-in-law, discovered she was not her father's daughter and pondered the possibility that she had met her real father many times, and possibly even had sex with him.

One night in 1881, after her daughter's birth, it all became too much for Lillie and she walked down to a dinner party at The Red House and made her entrance dressed in the same clothes as Prince 'Bertie' Edward, poured ice down his back and refused to apologise. It was over. The next day she was a social outcast, and the day after that, creditors pushed for her to settle her accounts.

The bankers de Rothschild were frequent visitors to the Prince's parties and would have been the first to foreclose, having taken orders from Prince Edward, their half-brother. Lillie's estranged, socially inept husband couldn't keep up with her lavish lifestyle and she had already driven him bankrupt. He took to drinking and even the 'front' aspect of their marriage was over.

[9] Royal Abandon is a joke, but he could have made himself scarce on the HMS Undaunted. This loophole was closed when Bertie's close friend Lord Beresford captained it from 1889–93.

> It is common marriage practice for female incest victims to destroy the principal male in their life. This includes affairs with others, bankruptcy and divorce. Where divorce statistics are high, so too is incest, paedophilia, child-sex abuse and lesbianism.

On the verge of bankruptcy herself, Lillie took advice from the actress Sarah Bernhardt.

'The Divine Sarah' (22 October 1844–26 March 1923) had arrived in London in 1876. She helped Lillie get into acting (debut in 1882) and then took her place as Prince 'Bertie' Edward's next courtesan, although she had already been swinging with the Prince since 1879 and would do so into the 1890s.

Lillie Langtry toured America where she divorced (1887) her penniless husband, citing abandonment. Edward Langtry spent his time fishing and pining for his ex-wife. Amongst the crowds he would wait for her to alight from an ocean liner but never present himself. He cut a lonely figure, drunk an excessive amount of whiskey, suffered a serious fall while drunk and died in October 1897. Lillie retired from the stage the following year as a millionairess. She was that kind of gal.

Espavo Sozo - treasurer@platinumparty.org -7 March 2013

With her purse bulging and her hips even bigger, she developed an interest in horse racing (1890), where she met the Scottish millionaire George Alexander Baird (1861–93), who rode as a jockey under the name 'Mr Abington'. He was known by the punters for all the wrong reasons as, 'The Squire'. He was charged with foul riding and "warned off every course where the Grand National Hunt Rules are in force, for two years from this date, and that during that period no horse his property, nominated by him, trained by him, or in any way under his care, joint care, management, or superintendance, be allowed to run for any race at any meeting where the Grand National Hunt Rules are in force". These rules also applied to the Stewards of the Jockey Club, who extended the sentence to all meetings under their rules. George Alexander Baird was from Strichen, as in "strichen from the books".

This disqualification hit George Alexander Baird/Mr Abington/The Squire hard. He retaliated by moving to Paris and racing there until his inheritance came through six months later – £3 million worth of investments and an annual income of £100,000. Once his ban was served, he returned to England and rode 13 winners in the 1884 season.

Outside of racing, Baird was described as "'a hell-raiser and a whoremaster, riding hard, betting high, drinking heavily and treating women with much less consideration than he did his horses". From 1886, he moved into the shady world of boxing, based at the Pelican Club. He became the centre of a rough clique and gambled like there was no tomorrow. He was one of the 'fighting audience' and was even expelled from the Pelican Club. He returned to racing but was riding drunk in 1891.

It was in this state as an audience boxer/drunk jockey/lay millionaire that he became infatuated with Lillie Langtry. Lillie, being from an incestuous paedophilic religious background, was attracted to this and charged him "£5000 remorse money" each time he beat her black and blue.

On one occasion 'The Squire' caught Lillie having an affair with Robert Peel, who was buying up large for Lillie in the Paris fashion houses. 'The Squire' beat her so badly she ended up hospitalised for two weeks, nursing two black eyes, a swollen nose, and was covered in welts. 'The Squire' also smashed up the hotel room. An arrest warrant was put out, but he was already in jail for a brothel fracas immediately after the Lillie Langtry assault.

To everybody's amazement, Lillie refused to press charges, probably because she enjoyed S&M, something the children of paedophilia are prone to attract. George 'The Squire' Baird was released and paid Lillie £50,000 'remorse money' as well as a yacht, which the conniving Lillie had her eye on. Lillie named it 'Whyte Lady', but everybody else called it 'Black Eye'.[10] Lillie Langtry was George Baird's whip.

After trying to arrange a world title fight between 'Gentleman Jim' Corbett and John L. Sullivan, George Baird, then known as 'Squire Abington', hit the night spots of New Orleans, caught a chill while drunk and died aged 31 of pneumonia on 18 March 1893. He still had a million pounds, but never gave Lillie anything, and she never mentioned him again, not even in her autobiography.

[10] Stichill Millennium Project.

Lillie (44) met Hugo de Bathe (26) in 1897. He was only nine years older than her daughter. She retired from the stage (1898), and the next year told her 18-year-old 'niece': "I am not your aunt. I am your mother." The same year she married Sir Hugo Gerald de Bathe (27), 19 years her junior, and started driving around in a m-o-t-o-r- c-a-r, one of the first women to do so. She could afford it. She was also one of the few female self-made millionaires of the 19th century.

When her father-in-law died in 1907, Hugo inherited his baronetcy and she became Lady Lillie de Bathe, but it was not all roses. Her 27-year marriage was unhappy and estranged. Sir Hugo de Bathe lived in South Africa and Lady Lillie de Bathe (19 years older) lived at Monte Carlo on the Riviera, returning to where it all started in England for the funeral of King Edward VII in 1910. This time Bertie's loose box was all in black.

Lillie became a leading owner of racehorses, develop vineyards in America, made one film at 60 years old (1913) and died at the ripe old age of 75 on 12 February 1929 with only a few thousand pounds left, which was still a lot of money, but nothing compared to her rare female status as a 19th-century self-made millionairess.

Her daughter Jeanne-Marie Langtry (21) went on to marry (1902) Sir Ian Malcolm Poltalloch (34). Deeply embedded in all things Scottish, the 17th Laird of Poltalloch became a Knight Commander of the Order of St Michael and St George (1919) and wrote Highland Lore and Legend (1938). They had four children and Lillie Langtry's grandson, Lieutenant George Ian Malcolm founded the Edinburgh Tattoo.

Sarah Bernhardt

After Lillie Langtry, and without interruption, but with plenty of overlap, Prince 'Bertie' Edward had an affair with Sarah Bernhardt. She was born Henriette Rosine Bernard (22 October 1844–26 March 1923) to Jewish parents, took the name Sarah Bernhardt, was given the name 'the Divine Sarah', and once people got to know her, the more grounded nickname 'Sarah Barnum'.

Her mother had abandoned Sarah with a wetnurse to become a high-priced prostitute, a courtesan, in France. She didn't even leave a forwarding address and the wetnurse couldn't get rid of Henriette/Sarah when she wanted to get married. Sarah only caught up with her mother (briefly) after recognising her aunt getting into a carriage.

After Sarah Bernhardt's time at school, she went to live with her real mother and decided to become an actress (no kidding) and became mistress (18) to Prince Charles Joseph Eugene Henri de Ligne (38) of Belgium (16 October 1824–27 November 1871), who had been married since 30 September 1851. They had a son together named Maurice (b. 1864), after which Prince Henri de Ligne royally abandoned her. His family convinced him that he would lose all his titles if he divorced and married the daughter of a courtesan/prostitute.

Sarah arrived in England in 1876. She was incredibly driven and talented. She wrote seven books (1876–1924), including My Double Life (1908), acted in over 120 roles, including 38 parts she had created, wrote many plays, and exhibited as an artist and painter (1876–80) with a little help from her occasional sexual partner Prince 'Bertie' Edward as they overlapped with Lillie. She married in 1882, separated in 1883, had a fabulous career, had her leg amputated in 1914, and carried on with her stage work.

She toured America 1886/7, 1888/9, 1891/2/3 and 1896 and continued to be linked sexually to powerful men. Her talent and sexuality were both something to be admired and her career soared.

There is no better way to advance your acting career than having sex with a royal. It is almost standard practice. Just look at Noel Coward's 19-year affair with King George VI's youngest brother, the Duke of Kent, and with their half-brother Anthony Blunt – then compare talent and career.

Prince 'Bertie' Edward was a keen theatregoer and would stop shows in order to lavish Sarah with jewels. This 'what a character' behaviour led to his acting debut as a corpse. Bertie visited Sarah often and the two became great friends and lovers over three decades (1879–90s). She was one of the bevy of beauties seated in 'the King's loose box' during his coronation, along with another long-time mistress Lady Churchill (56). When 'the Divine Sarah' died in 1923, 30,000 mourners filed past her coffin.

Mary 'Daisy' Cornwallis-West

The teenage lover of Prince 'Bertie' Edward, Mary 'Patsy' Cornwallis-West, had a reputation as a matchmaker and her daughters married under her influence.

With 'Patsy's' help, her stepdaughter, Constance Edwina 'Shelagh' Cornwallis-West (35) married (16 Feb. 1901) Hugh Richard Arthur Grosvenor (21), the 2nd Duke of Westminster and the richest English noble, known as 'Bend Or' or the 'Golden Duke' (19 March 1879–19 July 1953). She became the Duchess of Westminster and bore him three children. They divorced in 1919.

Constance Edwina 'Shelagh' Cornwallis-West/Duchess of Westminster (54) went on to marry (14 January 1920) Captain James Fitzpatrick Lewes. Shelagh shared the same father with her sister, but what a difference a promiscuous young mother makes.

Mary 'Patsy' Cornwallis-West hooked up her full daughter Mary Theresa Olivia 'Daisy' Cornwallis-West (18, 28 June 1873–29 June 1943) with the richest German prince (30), the Prince of Pless (23 April 1861–31 January 1938) and they married (8 December 1891), with her father and former lover Prince 'Bertie' Edward attending the ceremony.

Mary 'Daisy' Cornwallis-West had been having sex with her father (Prince 'Bertie' Edward) since she was 15 until her marriage (8 Dec. 1891) and probably after that. She wrote at least four books including Better Left Unsaid (1936).

'Daisy' then became 'Daisy' Princess of Pless and lived in the castle in Pszczyna (Pless), just outside of Warsaw, Poland. Here they were formally known as Prince Jan Henryk XV Von Hochberg of Pszczyna, HSH Hans Heinrich XV and Princess Maria Teresa Von Pless.

Espavo Sozo - treasurer@platinumparty.org -7 March 2013

Princess Maria Teresa Von Pless.

Mary 'Daisy' is listed as one of Prince 'Bertie' Edward's lovers, is colloquially recorded as Mary 'Patsy's' daughter, but is omitted from most genealogies as Mary 'Patsy's' daughter, and her birth date is omitted. It was only found, when searching German/Polish records of her marriage to Prince Jan Henryk XV Von Hochberg of Pszczyna (HSH Hans Heinrich XV), by which time she had changed her name to Princess Maria Teresa Von Pless.

Mary 'Daisy' used her skills as a hostess and tried to prevent war, but failed. During WWI their castle was the headquarters of the Kaiser and during all of WWII the Prince of Pless was interned on the Isle of Man while his castle was used as the sapper school of the Wehrmacht and miraculously survived any bombing. The Prince of Pless was protected because his wife was King George VI's aunt, so he was treated very well.

Daisy and the Prince of Pless divorced (12 December 1922) and Prince Jan Henryk XV (63) then married (25 Jan. 1925) a 26-year-old woman, 37 years his junior. They divorced nine years later (5 March 1934) when he was 72 and she 35. He died four years later on 31 March 1938.

Alice Keppel

Alice Frederica née Edmonstone Keppel (14 Oct. 1869–11 Sept. 1947) was born in Dunheath Castle, Loch Lomond (Loch Ness), Scotland to a poor titled family. She became the acknowledged royal mistress to Prince 'Bertie' Edward in 1898. He inherited the crown on 22 January 1901 and as King Edward VII their relationship continued until he died on 6 May 1910. She was his final mistress (1898–1910), the most beautiful, and the only one Princess Alexandra (Bertie's wife) tolerated without snubbing.

Prince 'Bertie' Edward (57) and Alice Keppel (31) had a daughter together named Sonia Rosemary Keppel (born 24 May 1900). The affair was quite open and both mother and daughter made it onto a British postage stamp in 1995, just breaking the 100-year rule.

Alice Keppel.

A marriage is required for cover and this comes with all the hoopla of giving awards. This gives the chosen ones sufficient status to overcome all questions.

Alice Keppel's father-in-law to be was Sir William Coutts Keppel (15 April 1832–22 August 1874), the 7th Earl of Albemarle. He was the Treasurer of the Queen's Household (1857–59), after which he was made a Privy Counsellor (PC). He became the MP for Berwick (1868–74) and held the office of Volunteer Aide-de-Camp for the Queen (1881) and succeeded to the title of 7th Earl of Albemarle on 21 February 1891.[11]

The 7th Earl of Albemarle's son, Lieutenant Colonel George Keppel (14 October 1865–22 November 1947) married Alice Keppel 100 days after his father succeeded to the title Albemarle on 1 June 1891. This was a year after she had had a child with Prince 'Bertie' Edward, and three years into their relationship. Her ever-tolerant husband became the Honorable Colonel George Keppel.

"There were three people in this marriage" – the Honorable Colonel George Keppel (25), Alice Keppel (21) and Prince 'Bertie' Edward/King Edward VII (59).

Their royal illegitimate daughter, Sonia Keppel (1900–86), married (16 November 1920) Roland Calvert Cubitt (26 Jan. 1899–28 Oct. 1962). He was utterly amazed at the stories of royalty, but because he was Sandhurst educated, he was trained to keep his mouth shut. They divorced in 1947 and Roland became the 3rd Baron of Ashcombe on 27 October the same year. This tightened his mandible springs.

The Honorable Colonel George Keppel and Alice Keppel's cover marriage also produced a child, Violet Keppel (6 June 1894–1 March 1970).

[11] The 1st Earl of Albemarle, Henry Fitzjames, was the illegitimate son of King James II. He would be the nephew of Winston Churchill's ancestor, except Winston was illegitimate and claimed all sorts of ancestry just as he claimed all sorts of status. Historians and the media never challenged Winston, as his real father was the King. Then his brother was the King, then his nephews were Kings, then his nephew's daughter became the Queen . . . and that's why we don't know Churchill.

treasurer@platinumparty.org - 7 March 2013

Alice Keppel was unique amongst Bertie's many mistresses in that she was viewed as loyal to the King with no agenda – not even a hidden one. Not even their shared daughter Sonia was used as a pawn. Alice Keppel was considered a faithful concubine and has been the model of royal concubines ever since. Hence the saying, "Get yourself an Alice Keppel".[12]

Alice Keppel's husband, the Honorable Colonel George Keppel of the Royal Army, maintained he was quite proud of the fact that his wife was the concubine of the King. He viewed her affair with the King as their combined duty to the Crown. (Stuff the Danish!) Alice even had a deep husky voice like her descendant Camilla Parker-Bowles. This was something, rather strangely, that both Princes found calming.

When King Edward VII died in 1910 Alice Keppel turned all her sexual focus back to her husband until her death on 11 September 1947. They shared a relationship that laughed everything off and her husband George Keppel died ten weeks after her on 22 November 1947.

Winston Churchill's Origins

Former British Intelligence Officer: "Lady 'Jennie' Jerome Churchill was bright and witty, but was incestuous on a whole lot of levels and was primarily a wheeler and dealer in her fanny."

Her mother, Clarissa Hall Jerome (16 July 1825–2 April 1895), had married (1849) Leonard Jerome, formerly Leonard Jacobson. He was the owner and editor of the New York Times and used Gatling guns on his striking employees. He was close friends with August Belmont Snr., the Rothschilds' banking representative in America. Leonard Jerome was also plagued by scandals with opera singer Minnie Hauk, the fruit of his loins. Leonard Jerome did not believe two of his daughters were his, but Clarissa Hall Jerome spent his money anyway. Clarissa was keen for her four daughters (at least two illegitimate) to be set up in British aristocratic circles, so she took them to the very best European holiday spots for husband hunting.

[12] The Spymaster was around at my place one day and after this research I said, "Get yourself an Alice Keppel". Sure enough he did. Although I had painted the interior of the house myself, I believed every conversation was being listened to. I mentioned this to James Bond III who came around just to talk to the television, in a loud voice, correctly believing he was talking to the SIS and Army Intelligence. I tried this myself and placed an order. I was very specific, right down to the physical and psychological training. Within three months she was staring at me in a bar. Amazing, although I forgot to say "No Spies", so it was back to talking to the TV.

At 19, Jeanette 'Jennie' Jerome (9 January 1854–29 June 1921) met the titled 24-year-old diplomat Lord Randolph Churchill (1849–95) on the HMS Ariadne on 12 August 1873 as it moored off the fashionable Isle of Wight. Lord Randolph Churchill was the youngest son of the 7th Duke of Marlborough and, through various parts of his life, was the spitting image of Prince 'Bertie' Edward. (His father or gandfather may have been Nathan Mayer Rothschild.)

They played carrot and donkey and he proposed to her the next evening (13 August 1873). She accepted and they married eight months later on 15 April 1874.

Wasting no time, and acting in a repeat pattern of her mother, 'Jennie' Jerome joined the Marlborough set, the social circle of Prince 'Bertie' Edward (post 13 August 1873). 'Jennie' Jerome, betrothed to become Lady Randolph Churchill, was soon sporting the expensive jewellery Prince 'Bertie' Edward was known to bestow on his mistresses. The two remained good friends throughout his life – enough for her to influence their son's political future.

Winston Churchill was conceived on 24 February 1874 with Prince 'Bertie' Edward. 'Jennie' Jerome married Lord Randolph Churchill 52 days later on 15 April 1874 in a "hushed and rushed affair". Winston was born 7½ months after the wedding on 30 November 1874 and there was much fuss about him being born premature. "We haven't even got the baby clothes yet."[13]

Espavo Sozo - treasurer@platinumparty.org

Lord Randolph Churchill had little to do with his 'son' Winston, never believed he was his, and kept his distance accordingly. 'Jennie' Jerome had repeated her mother's breeding pattern. She had married a rich man and had children to someone else. Leonard Jerome was Winston Churchill's house grandfather and not his biological grandfather.

On his mother's side, Winston Churchill was the illegitimate son of an illegitimate daughter. On his father's side, Winston Churchill was the illegitimate son of an illegitimate son of an illegitimate son (King Edward VII, Prince consort Albert, Alexander Hanstein).

After the princely conception and cover marriage, Lord Randolph Henry Spencer-Churchill was promoted through the political arena faster than a NATO paedophile. These were cover promotions in lieu of house fathering a FitzRoyal.

[13] Winston's conception was 6 Feb.–12 March 1874. The marriage was 34–68 days later.

Unlike Winston, Randolph graduated from Oxford with an MA, and Cambridge with an Honorary Doctor of Law. He became a Privy Counsellor (PC), MP for Woodstock (1874–85), and was initiated into Freemasonry under the name Rudolph H. Spencer in Dublin in 1878 and became the Master Mason (Magister Magistrorum) very quickly. His child-in-name was to be the child of war for the Freemasons' greatest battle to date. Lord Randolph was then made Secretary of State for India (1885–6), MP for Paddington (1885–9), Chancellor of the Exchequer (1886) and Deputy Lieutenant of Oxfordshire.

True to plan, Lord Randolph Churchill died at the very young age of 45 (syphilis) when Winston was 20, before lack of resemblance could determine the gossip to be true. Those in the know thought that syphilis was an entirely appropriate disease for Lord Randolph, considering his wife's reputation as a prolific and dedicated cuckolder.

Lord Randolph Henry Spencer-Churchill, academic, died aged 45 from syphilis.

Winston Leonard Spencer-Churchill, unacademic, bordering on backward. Seen here aged 20. He died aged 90.

George Frederick Myddleton Cornwallis-West

After his marriage to Lady Churchill (28 July 1900–1914), Winston Churchill's brother, George Frederick Myddleton Cornwallis-West went on to marry (6 April 1914) another actress, Mrs Patrick Campbell (Beatrice 'Stella' Tanner). She became a single-titled author and they had no children.

Prince Charles and Camilla Parker-Bowles

Prince 'Bertie' Edward and Princess Alexandra had a son who was to become King George V. Like his father, George V had affairs, and sired Anthony Blunt with Hilda Master.

Bertie and Alexandra's grandsons were King Edward VIII and King George VI, their great-granddaughter Queen Elizabeth II, and their great-great-grandson Prince Charles. Prince 'Bertie' Edward's great-granddaughter (illegitimate) with Mrs Alice Keppel was to become Camilla Parker-Bowles.

Prince Charles married his third cousin Camilla Parker-Bowles in April 2005. They share the same great-great-grandfather, Prince 'Bertie' Edward, the iconic swinger. Camilla Parker-Bowles' chat-up line to Prince Charles was: "My mother had an affair with your grandfather. How about it?" This brought in a whole new era of repeat patterning.

Prince Charles' grandfather was King George VI (d. 1952). George VI died of a strange form of lung cancer called syphilis. Partly as a result of their family history, their ever-so-strong desire to be common, and their friends' relaxed attitude towards Charles and Camilla, their nicknames became "Fred and Gladys".

Fred Wales.

Charles and Camilla are third cousins. Charles is following in his parents' footsteps (second cousins) and his g-g-g-g-grandparents' footsteps (first cousins) – hence the birth defects, big ears, a general unemployable look, fussiness without result, and non-mainstream sexual habits (the dresser).

It's interesting to note the similarities of age. Charles married his older third cousin Camilla on 9 April 2005. He was 56 and she was 57.

Their great-great-grandfather Bertie was also 57 when he conceived Camilla's ancestor, Sonia Rosemary Keppel, around 18 August 1899 (b. 24 May 1900). They shared a mutual ancestor, and, in terms of age at conception and marriage, they were all within 502 days of each other.[14] Well, perhaps it's not that interesting and it may not mean much, but sexual patterns (genealogical patterns) tend to repeat. Look forward to the next generation? Watch your biscuit tin for what the royals want you to see.

Here's something the royals don't want you to see. Prince Charles had an illegitimate child with a young servant girl at Balmoral Castle when he was 18. The child was born in 1967 and is now 40 years old (in 2007). I doubt the two of them will ever make it to the postage stamp.

[14] Prince 'Bertie' Edward (b. 9 Nov. 1841) was 57 and 283 days. Camilla Parker-Bowles (b. 17 July 1947) was 57 and 266 days. Prince Charles (b. 14 Nov. 1948) was 56 and 146 days.

Fitz-Swingers and the Children of War

Interbreeding amongst the British Royal Family over generations has created concubines, illegitimate children, and agents of war. The British Royal Family are then shamed by these events and manipulated into any activity their owners require. Their owners are the true history keepers and these historians are also their bankers. Their name is Rothschild, and the British Royal Family is a biological, financial and moral subset of the Rothschild international bankers. It is 'shame' that rules the world and the Rothschilds that rule that shame.

The concubines were either illegitimate, subject to incest, the daughters of reverends or courtesans, S&M for hire, poor and titled in constrained marriages, under-aged girls (bribes and arranged marriages), sex addicts wheeling and dealing in their fannies, elevating their careers, or those who saw it as their duty. They were all cuckolders, wife cheaters and swingers who produced a plethora of illegitimate children in powerful positions who were all prone to being influenced by any who knew their real history.

The real historians were the Rothschilds and it was the Rothschilds who encouraged this scenario. This gave them consumate power over the British Royal Family and any others they interbred with, which was all the royal families of Europe. It is the Rothschilds who do not want the true history told, as it erodes their power. This is why the European royal families engage embedded historians and why the Rothschilds control all the publishing houses, of which there are only six, plus derivatives covering all topics right down to the Nazi-instigated New Age movement – "I'm so passive, walk on me."

"Paedophilia is the sport of kings." Edward 'Bertie' Prince of Wales (28) was having sex with the 14-year-old Mary 'Patsy' Fitzpatrick and the 15-year-old Mary 'Daisy' Cornwallis-West over two generations. Today this is called child sex abuse. Then it was called an oversight. Birth dates were confused accordingly, and marriages were arranged for cover.

The children of war are conceived from illegitmate cuckolding stock over many generations. Winston Churchill's mother 'Jennie' Jerome was illegitimate, as was his father King Edward VII (the son of Nathan Mayer Rothschild). Churchill's wife was also illegitimate. She was the daughter of her uncle Algernon Bertram Freeman-Mitford. Churchill's mother went on to marry his half-brother and then married again to someone who looked suspicously like his other half-brother.

The world is controlled by shame and world leaders often have such confused family histories. This makes them bribeable. President Bill Clinton is a case in point. His mother was a renowned slapper, a lot like Churchill's American mother, and Clinton was supposed to have six different fathers, but Clinton's real biological father was Win Rockefeller. This is as close as you can get to American royalty.

Winston ran for five political parties and became Prime Minister three times (Coalition 1940–45, Caretaker 1945, Conservative 1951–55). Bill Clinton ran for the Democratic Party, became President twice (1992–96–2001) and enacted the Republican agenda including globalisation. His bisexual wife Hillary Rodham is now running for the US presidency. Both Clintons are Republicans in the Democratic Party. As Bill Clinton said, "I love George Herbert Bush", and as the commoners note:

"It's a one-party system run by bisexuals in cover marriages."
"The Democrats are a shill for the Republicans."

Similarly, Winston Churchill could be considered a fascist fronting as a socialist who fought his cousin's son,[15] Adolf Hitler, also a fascist fronting as a socialist. Politics always achieves the opposite of what it apparently sets out to do.

Espavo Sozo - treasurer@platinumparty.org -7 March 2013

It was Winston Churchill's nephew King George VI who asked Churchill to be Prime Minister to form an all-party Coalition Government. The other two party leaders were also present at the meeting and agreed to the request. Churchill broke with tradition and did not send Neville Chamberlain a message expressing regret over his resignation.

Thus Churchill became Prime Minister of England when his nephew the King of England asked him to. There has never been an easier in. It was thereafter a British monarchy government for the duration of WWII and fascism against the commoners of England was the name of the German rulers' game. By German rulers I mean King George VI, Winston Churchill and Adolf Hitler.

Winston Churchill was a child of war and controlled three wars. His conception on 24 February 1874 has a lot in common with the conceptions of the love children Mary Theresa Olivia 'Daisy' Cornwallis-West (22 September 1872), George Frederick Myddleton Cornwallis-West (8 February 1874) and Sonia Rosemary Keppel (18 August 1899).

The relatives: King George VI, Hitler, and Winston Churchill.

Prince ‘Bertie’ Edward

Prince ‘Bertie’ Edward was a sex addict. He virtually used his position to have sex with as many people as possible and whomever he pleased. He hated the monarchy so much he tried to destroy it by having many sexual affairs with girls as young as 14, sex with his daughters, and overlapping mistresses. He was openly affectionate with mistresses inside his household, at formal parties, in front of his wife and children, and in public.

Historians boggle at how Edward, Prince of Wales got away with it, but then historians are the least-sexed profession, being virtual eunuchs with royal access, or paedophiles maintaining mutual cover. The historians were all employed by the Rothschilds as embedded historians to maintain royal secrets so that the Rothschilds could maintain control over the monarchies of Europe and therefore war. This translated into huge profits for the Rothschilds’ banks since they owned the central banking system.

- treasurer@platinumparty.org -

The British Royal Family are a subset of the Rothschild family and are utilised as part of the Rothschild business as a money-making venture to create war. In exchange, the class system is maintained and royal indiscretions are overlooked.

There had been a Freemasons' move to overthrow the monarchy since 1776. Prince 'Bertie' Edward was part of the monarchy but he was also the Grand Master Mason from 1874, which stopped any revolution and meant that the Freemasons and the British royals worked hand in hand, especially when the little hand met the big hand. Randolph Churchill joined four years later (1878), quickly rose to the top, and doubled as the father of one of Prince 'Bertie' Edward's many illegitimate children.

The Guild system helped to silence any talk of the monarchy by ensuring they owned all professional licences, and Guild members came up with PR lines to help the King deflect any accusations regarding his many mistresses. One of the more famous lines issued from Prince Edward's mouth was: "People only left the class to which they were born with consequences." Nothing has changed down the ages, and as a result we are not meant to know that the current Prince Edward's daughter Louise was conceived by her grandfather Prince Philip.

One of the British Royal Family's main functions now is to stop the rampant paedophilia amongst married-for-cover Freemasons reaching the public. This has created a mutual silence and neither the Freemasons nor the British Royal Family openly criticise each other. There is no war of words, but there would be if one group had the moral high ground.

Espavo Sozo - treasurer@platinumparty.org

> To the royals and the Freemasons the crime is not doing the crime. The crime is getting caught.

Prince 'Bertie' Edward frequently gave expensive sexually related gifts and treated his women as concubines (lightweight prostitutes). Many of them were the daughters of concubines, prostitutes, courtesans, or secretly illegitimate young women who became pregnant, officially, to rich and powerful men, or titled men in need. There was also a definite pattern of children of Anglican reverends being very promiscuous from a young age and delving into the royal cock (e.g. Anthony Blunt).

We suffer from the same history today. Close inspection shows that the royals were into child sex abuse (children 13–15), and even closer inspection shows that they were into paedophilia (children under 13), both the men and the women, and the popular ones to . . . to this day – we'll have to wait another 85 years to make this public. In the meantime, we make notes and spread them around for safety and insurance.

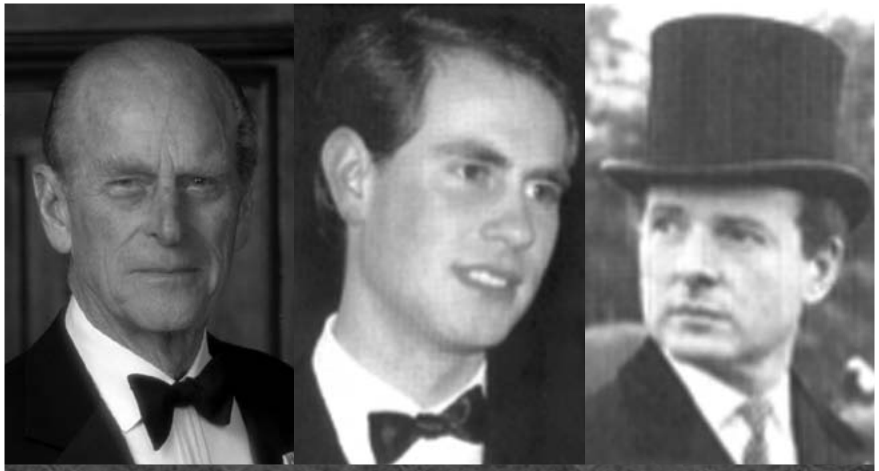
> The result of these shenanigans was a British Royal Family tree that looked like minestrone soup dangling off a cast-iron spoon.

The Current Prince Edward

Prince Edward (b. 10 March 1964) is well rumoured to be the son of Queen Elizabeth II and her long-time companion Lord Patrick Plunket, Deputy Master of the Royal Household (1954–75).

According to Lady Campbell's The Royal Marriages, the subject of Lieutenant-Colonel Baron Plunket of Newton, CVO, fathering Prince Edward is taboo. Lord Plunket was considered to be highly effeminate and sexually inactive, although he regularly took the Queen, disguised in a scarf, to the Odeon cinema on King's Road, Chelsea and then dined her across the road at Raffles Club.

Lord Patrick Terence William Span Plunket, 7th Baron Plunket of Newton was born on 8 September 1923 and died in 1975. When he died the Queen wept openly and buried him at the Royal Family's private burial ground at Frogmore, Windsor Park. The date is not given, which is suspicious, and motive points once again to Prince Philip. The other is Lady Diana.



House father Prince Philip, Prince Edward, and biological father Lord Plunket.

Prince Edward's looks, mannerisms and sexuality are completely at odds with Prince Philip who is a raging sex addict of historic proportions, so much so that his sexual escapades in South America have been under suppression for over forty years.

After a proactive homosexual career that spanned many countries, continents and even psychiatric institutions, the effeminate Prince Edward finally settled on a cover marriage to Sophie Rhys-Jones.

Rather than be styled 'Duke' on his wedding day (19 June 1999), Prince Edward was styled 'Viscount Severn' and 'Earl of Wessex'. No one has used the title 'Earl of Wessex' since Harold Godwinson, prior to his brief accession to the throne as the last crowned Anglo-Saxon King of England (5 Jan.–14 Oct. 1066), after which the Jews took over England.

Many histories state that Prince Edward is Queen Elizabeth II's son and not Prince Philip's son, and many historians consider the styling of Prince Edward as 'Earl' and not 'Duke' to be a downgrade commensurate with an illegitimate child. That Prince Edward is linked to a British king prior to the Norman invasion, the Stuart takeover and the German Hanover TWET (Tactical Exercise Without Troops),[16] sets him apart even more. To cover for this, Edward is to be styled HRH Duke of Edinburgh on Prince Philip's death, but this conflicts with his older brother Prince Charles, if he is still alive. Like his father Lord Plunket, Prince Edward, Viscount Severn, Earl of Wessex is the personal aide-de-camp to his mother (from 1 August 2004).

Prince Edward spent a gap year at Wanganui Collegiate in New Zealand serving as a house tutor and junior master for two terms from September 1982. Rod Butler was the head of Wanganui CIB/CID who looked like Reginald Perrin/Leonard Rossiter but had Army training and was an Intelligence Officer. Butler got the most unusual job from on high in Wellington regarding eleven parents' complaints of Prince Edward's homosexual behaviour towards their sons. It took Butler four months to convince parents they were wrong and in the end the Queen stepped in and paid for an extraordinarily well-equipped theatre in the Wanganui School grounds – the Prince Edward Theatre. Butler was a good policeman and proud of his work (bribing parents and mending arseholes) and he thought his career was really going places. He told the Spymaster, "My career is really going to go places" and the Spymaster replied, "Your toenails will be pointing skyward" – and sure enough, after he had covered for the sadistic homosexuality of Prince Edward, he died of cancer at the young age of 50 (around 1996 with records hard to find). Prince Edward then chased one of these boys he had rooted to a cottage on the grounds of a psychiatric hospital in England.

One of Priince Edward's victims, Mr Tanner, was up on a charge of murdering his girlfriend. The Queen intervened and offered to pay for his defense. The Queen then arranged to have Mr Tanner plead guilty. This really knocked the family back in New Zealand for a six.

Prince Edward joined the marines, but being too weak, effeminate and homosexual he was forced to leave prior to graduation. He then worked for Andrew Lloyd Webber's theatre company as a tea boy and dated actress Ruthie Henshall in exchange for two years' cover. After this, he made It's a Royal Knockout, which involved actors running around doing kids' stuff. It was so widely ridiculed, people stopped ridiculing it. He then started Ardent Television production company, which ran at a loss and he had to step down, using the Queen's Golden Jubilee year as an excuse.

On 9 January 1999, Edward became engaged to Sophie Rhys-Jones for cover. They had a small wedding ceremony on 19 June 1999 at St Georges Chapel, Windsor, as opposed to the traditional large wedding in Westminster Abbey. Rumours of his homosexuality remained and the location added weight that he was illegitimate.

Deputy Master of the Royal Household, Lord Plunket's son, the 'Bald Rabbit' Prince Edward with Plunket's daughter-in-law and Prince Philip's stone-deaf daughter. The SAS refer to Edward as "the shit-eating reticulated rabbit".

Sophie Rhys-Jones, Countess of Wessex conceived around 2 March 2003 and gave birth to a daughter, Lady Louise Alice Elizabeth Mountbatten-Windsor, on 8 November 2003. She was born one month premature and as deaf as a post. It is their only child and she is formally styled HRH Princess Louise of Wessex.

Sophie Rhys-Jones enjoys carriage riding. Edward's house father Prince Philip runs carriage riding in England. Prince Philip conceived a child with his daughter-in-law Sophie Rhys-Jones. HRH Princess Louise of Wessex's father is also her grandfather. This is shades of Nathan Mayer Rothschild with Princess Viktoria fathering Queen Victoria, then fathering her son King Edward VII.

Nathan Mayer Rothschild officially died in 1836, but in reality died in 1850. My father used to shear sheep for King George VI's doctor, and certain sayings stuck in my mind like: “Nothing lies like a Jewish cemetery”.

Spymaster: “A family that roots together stays together. This is a repeating sexual pattern.”

Prince Philip wrote Competition Carriage Driving in 1982, was president of the International Equestrian Federation (1964–86), and was involved in defining the International Rules for Carriage Driving.

Espavo Sozo - treasurer@platinumparty.org -

On 23 May 2006 the official inauguration of the new facilities at Bedgebury Forest took place with Sophie, Countess of Wessex being the Forestry Commission's guest of honour. At the event Sophie informed them that she is learning carriage riding and is being taught by Prince Philip's head groom, Mickey Flynn. Marc Berquin then proudly informed Sophie, “Prince Philip is my father”. Sophie quickly translated the French as “Prince Philip is my idol”.[17] “She's without doubt his favourite daughter-in-law and now Sophie has delighted Prince Philip by taking over his reins in the carriage driving stakes. It's a brave move for Sophie, the sport of carriage driving being one of the most dangerous and disciplined, especially considering the Countess didn't ride as a child. As her romance with Prince Edward became more serious, Sophie took up horseriding so she could bond with the Queen during her regular (daily, if possible) outings in the grounds of the royal homes. The 41-year-old royal is now enjoying private carriage driving lessons and is hoping to make her competitive debut at a low-key event, taking charge of Philip's prize Fell ponies. A source tells the Daily Mail's Richard Kay: ‘Sophie has been training in earnest with Philip's head groom Mickey Flynn in preparation for taking over the team. When she and Edward were among the Marquess of Linlithgow's house party for the Hopetoun Driving Trials, she was pestering all the experienced carriage-drivers for tips.’ Now aged 85, Prince Philip is expected to announce his retirement from the sport he loves in the near future. The European monarchies were frightened that rights were being given to ordinary citizens and the revolutionaries responded by tearing up all the old orders like toilet paper. Then they established new orders which precluded the European monarchies from any status other than presentation, thus making the surviving monarchies puppet monarchies.

Stalin's British Training

The Sidney Street Siege

History is always written by the winners of the war to reflect badly on the losers of that war. History is not generally written to expose the part the winners played in creating those wars. It is common for the winner to employ historians who will dramatise and confuse events to avoid clarity. The Houndsditch Robbery and the Sidney Street Siege have never been conveyed in a way that can be analysed. To varying degrees, this amounts to fictionalising events, a cover-up and propaganda. It also allows history to sleep, drugged.[1]

The 1910 Houndsditch robbery/killings and the 1911 Sidney Street Siege two weeks later took place on the streets of London. The slums of London and the military training schools of Britain were the training grounds for foreign dissidents – in this case, the Russian Bolshevik Revolution that took place seven years later in October 1917. The British hierarchy turned a large blind eye to what went on in London. This amounted to protective wings for revolutions elsewhere.

From 1900 to 1920, former CID chief Sir Melville Macnaghten believed that Britain was inundated with the scum of other countries. These were violent Anarchists who wanted to blow up everything. They were Russian Jewish intelligence known as the Betar, and the Betar still exist today. Macnaghten considered Sidney Street to be the most remarkable affair during his time at Scotland Yard. It was popularly known as the "Battle of Stepney".[2]

Stalin was born Losif Vissarionovich Dzhugashvili (1879–1953) in Gori, Georgia. His father left the home when Losif was 11 years old, which was as soon as he recognised Losif was not his son.

Losif/Koba/Stalin is reported to be another illegitimate Rothschild – just as Churchill and Hitler were. This made WWII a cousins' war and a Jewish cousins' war. Churchill was at least ¾ Jew, Stalin was at least ½ Jew and Hitler was at least ¼ Jew. In the latter two, the mother's Jewish blood is unknown and not counted, so they could have also had ¾ Jewish blood.

When Losif came of age he was trained as a priest but was removed aged twenty for promoting Marxism over religion. Losif married five years later in 1904 and his wife died in 1907, leaving a son whom he despised, so Stalin went to London and began making intelligence connnections. Losif/Koba/Stalin married again in 1919 and his second wife suicided leaving two more children, one a chronic alcoholic. Like Hitler, Stalin's partners' deaths/suicides were suspicious.

Between 1902 and 1913 Stalin was arrested seven times, repeatedly jailed and exiled twice to Siberia. During this time he didn't use his given name 'Losif', but used his undercover name, 'Koba'. He escaped twice from Siberian prisons, but not without political assistance. Siberia was Britain's favourite recruiting ground for Russian dissidents.

Stalin was a dissident in his own country and therefore prime fodder for any group that wanted to take over and destroy that country. One such group was the Freemasons, whose business is making war and altering the physical and psychological boundaries of nations. Their motto is ORDER OUT OF CHAOS and they will go to any lengths to achieve this, including revolution, civil war, international war, world war, and the installation of trial political methods they know will result in totalitarian dictatorship and genocide. This is the Freemason history. Stalin ended up killing some 68 million people, which saved the British Freemasons taking the blame and doing it firsthand.

The British Freemasons assisted Stalin in his training and his fundraising for the planned revolution in Russia. They also assisted Stalin in his escapes from Siberia and in bringing weapons unchallenged into England. He was eventually trained in the British military Psych-Ops war school (Tavistock) and another Kriegschule in Ireland which closed down in 1920 during the Irish Civil War and followed Stalin to Russia (Frunze) complete with British trainers.

Tavistock has been going for some 500 years since the English Navy took over the drug trade from the Spanish Navy and is a collection of psycho-military training. It was named Tavistock in 1920 when the Second Baron Rothschild gifted the land at 120 Belsize Lane, London, UK NWs SBA. Its focus is now on worldwide psychological manipulations through the media and education, both of which specialise in misinformation. That is, information that is 'affective only' – hiding the real cause and effect while providing a washed PR substitute.

Formally known as the 'Tavistock Institute for Human Relations', it is informally known as the 'Freud Hilton'. The public version of Tavistock began in 1946 when British military intelligence members 'officially created it'. However, their own records show that Tavistock was started much earlier, in 1920, by Major John Rawlings Reese on the orders of Chatham House.

Chatham House is also known as the Royal Institute of International Affairs (RIIA), which was officially created during the 1919 Versailles Peace Conference along with the American Council on Foreign Relations (CFR). In real terms, this was just their outing.

Tavistock had been developing over the previous 500 years and was the force behind dark Victorian literature, Fabian Socialism[3] and the Jack the Ripper murders of 1888, which occurred during Adolf Hitler's gestation.

The CFR, the RIIA, Chatham House and Tavistock are all controlled by the Round Table, which in turn is controlled by the British Royal Family. Winston Churchill was heavily imbibed into all of these groups.

[3] Virtually all British Secret Service directors have been advocates of Fabian Socialism and, the entire British military intelligence since Queen Victoria has been energised towards a One-World Government.

Stalin was given the location of banks and shops to burgle, especially Jewish-owned jewellery stores. He was also given prior warning on how and when to escape by more than one government. While using the name Koba, Stalin organised crime and political motivation in at least five countries including Russia, England, France, Germany and Switzerland.

Stalin showed military and psychological Tavistock training and his insider knowledge by:

1. Knowing exactly what the goal was (what was in the safes).
2. Being sure of every detail.
3. Keeping his operations secret.
4. His method of moving from location to location and between countries undetected.
5. Importing dozens of very accurate German Dreyse and Mauser pistols and ammunition with impunity.
6. Obtaining clearance windows for the burglaries.
7. Getting tip-offs as to when and how to escape.
8. Using the immigrant population as cover.
9. Being better armed than the police.
10. Using intimidation to silence any witnesses.
11. Misconducted trials.
12. Completing three assassinations for the British Government.

Stalin's method of moving around countries undetected came from his Tavistock training. In order to move from hiding-place to hiding-place, the first would go and the second would not move until he had received a coded message from the first. Police cars at the time were a joke. There were many back alleys and rooftops that made knowledgeable foot traffic faster than a car. The average speed of London traffic then and now is the same – 10 miles per hour (16km/h).

Stalin, known as Koba, played on his kudos as a Siberian prison escapee and set up robberies in at least five countries. He was encouraged to rob Jewish-owned banks and jewellery stores in England, France, Germany, Switzerland and Russia in order to fund the Russian Revolution and overthrow the Tsar – the British Royal Family's relative.

The 1917 Russian Revolution played on the undirected revolution of 1905 in which splinter groups with multiple agendas left the Tsar intact.

Espavo Sozo - treasurer@platinumparty.org -7 Ma

This suited the Freemasons, whose principal goals were exemplified in the 1917 agenda-driven Russian Revolution more than any other. The Freemasonry goals for Russia are the same for all countries, Russia being the test case. The Freemasonry goals are to:

1. Destroy all sovereignties, monarchies and cultures.
2. Destroy all national boundaries and patriotism.
3. Promote an homogenised collective that does not tolerate individual expression.
4. Enforce absolute conformity from the controlling establishment.
5. Ensure recurring wars keep people working for dignity.
6. Destroy the concept of man as soul with higher purpose. Humans are to be treated as merely evolved animals having no spiritual nature.
7. Remove the concept of God and replace the supernatural with rational scientific ways of solving human problems.
8. Dissolve all traditional family structures.
9. Ensure all children belong to the State and not to individual families.
10. Promote a One World Order (as of 1891) via 'ORDER OUT OF CHAOS'.
11. Promote a world republic based on humanism with a media ban on anything that is not humanistic (i.e. mass genocide, human failings, crop failings and crop destruction).[4]
12. Use the poor to kill the rich, and once the new authoritarian rich are in power, kill the poor, the educated and the dissident.
13. Kill all but one of the revolutionaries – the Freemason/Tavistock British agent Koba (Stalin).

Koba's robberies were called "expropriations" – a name used to justify stealing from the foreign rich to fund the manipulation of the Russian poor so that they could do the same thing as the Tsar, only worse and more so.

In 1888 there were 27,000 Jews in the Tower Bridge Hamlet of Stepney and this resulted in anti-immigration sentiment especially towards the Jews. Another immigration wave escaped from the harsh pogroms of Russia in 1903 and the Jews in London, especially in the East End, became politically motivated. This culminated in the Anarchist Club.

[4] Humanism stresses the potential value and goodness of human beings. Russia achieved the opposite, but still used the word humanism for its 'anti-theistic, pro-totalitarian rationalism'. This was one of Russia's first successful attempts at changing the meaning of a word to its actualised opposite.

A small group of Jewish Anarchists from Russia were guided by Rudolf Rocker, a blond, blue-eyed ex-Roman Catholic German who educated them on the methods of how to change society.

Others took on a more revolutionary approach and Koba became the authority figure famous amongst the down and out, the authority figure for 'expropriations' and the only organisational mind seen behind many international bank robberies. Koba had the technical expertise, the inside knowledge, the escape plans, the contacts, the experience and the ideology. He had a revolutionary purpose for the money which appealed to the poor and this kept his fellow robbers content in their poverty while focussed on their future power.

At the time of the Jack the Ripper murders (1888) it was normal to find a man dead on the street every morning. The dead men had injuries that looked like they might have been in a quarrel, fallen over drunk or run over by horse and cart. Cars were still very rare and slow.

Most of the time these weren't classified as murders and no investigation took place. The criminals knew that they could get away with murder if they could make it look like an accident. These were often muggings, where a woman would take a man back to her room and her "fancy man" would mug the victim and take his wallet, killing him if it all went wrong, with the injuries made to look accidental. If he was killed, his body was dumped onto the street and the attitude, in an area where there was no official morgue, was all too casual.

"Rattle his bones over the stones.
He's only a pauper who nobody owns."

Such murder/robberies went on, at least one a day, for ten years. Most of the victims were aliens and unregistered. If they were still able to talk, they weren't in a position to talk. The frequency of these murders should have put Jack the Ripper back in his box, but the Jack the Ripper murders were immortalised because they were an occult hit.

There were plenty of gangs in Whitechapel breaking heads and ribs – if you were lucky. The Bessarabians and the Odessians were two such gangs and they used to fight each other for territory. These immigrant Poles, Armenians and Russians terrorised the neighbourhood. When a Bessarabian stabbed an Odessian to death, the leader of the Bessarabians was convicted of murder. As a result, the Bessarabians and Odessians were broken up in 1909, but this did not stop them from re-forming in a different style. The Bessarabians used knives whereas the Anarchists used guns.

At that time, Lithuanians, Latvians, Poles and Russians all crowded together in the East End, especially in the heart of Whitechapel where the Anarchist Club on Jubilee Street became the centre for organised immigrant crime.

Stalin, known as Koba at the time, lived at 77 Jubilee Street off Whitechapel Road in 1907. It was from here that he attended the Fifth Congress of the Russian Social Democratic and Labour Party, the forerunner to the Communist Party, along with many other fugitives from the Russian secret police. It's common for historic sites that reflect badly on the establishment to be disappeared and Jubilee Street has since been replaced by a housing estate.[5]

The Anarchist Club formed the basis of three revolutionary groups at the time: the Bessarabians, the Odessians and the Leesma. The first two were closed down by the police in 1909, but the Leesma (the Flame) and the Anarchists survived unchallenged. They got away with bank robberies, burglaries, hold-ups and sieges.

Many of these immigrants were also Jews. In that area, every continental language was spoken, but with a big smattering of Yiddish. Most of these people had two or more identities and two or more IDs. As a front they were musicians, painters, or watchmakers, but the pay was worse than in their home countries. They made their extra cash from robberies, and in all these robberies they used the Anarchist Club for plotting.

There was no limit to the number or type of immigrants, nor on the number of guns brought into the country. It was not unusual for an immigrant to bring in a dozen guns, declare them, and be allowed into Britain. One Russian was held by Customs at Dover with 47 automatic pistols and even he was allowed into Britain fully laden.

The British police, on the other hand, were only armed with truncheons. This made them completely ineffective against the armed immigrant Russian gangs.

It was as if the British monarchy was supporting anarchy, first in their slums and then in the alien country. Britain had strange rules at the time, turning a large blind eye that bordered on deliberate self-sabotage. In the East End's Whitechapel and in the war schools, Britain was training immigrant revolutionaries to sabotage life in their slums. They were practising, recruiting, fundraising, terrorising, mugging, stealing and killing. London was the training ground to destroy their own foreign countries. In this way, the monarchy was supporting foreign revolutions via the alien crime wave. This saved the colonising British army from doing it. The British always had a method to their madness and the class system was a big player in this.

Many of the people in Stalin's gangs were immigrant lowlives who toyed with guns and revolutionary ideas. Koba (Stalin) was considered to be very important to the social revolutionary cause. Everybody listened with great respect to what he had to say. He was a bank robber, jail-breaker, had escaped from Siberia and was considered to be representative of a revolutionary committee in Geneva, Switzerland – essentially MI-6 and the Jewish conspiracy, Betar.

Spymaster: "There are more Jewish organisations in Switzerland than you can shake a stick at – all very well covered. The Swiss discovered this a few years ago when the entire blueprints of their Mirage Fighter were secretly swished and ended up in the headquarters of IAI (Israeli Aircraft Industries) outside Tel Aviv (Hill of Aviv). The Israelis had stolen the blueprints on their way to destruction. Sympathy towards Israel and Britain is more widespread than was expected and often better rewarded. This was supposedly the work of one man who was sent to prison for a short period. Successfully rehabilitated, he has since been the recipient of many books on Israel donated by grateful Israeli admirers. In the official version: 'He had received no financial consideration at all.' If you believe this you're probably prepared to believe cuckoo clocks are the basis of Switzerland's wealth."

Tsar Nicholas II.

Koba had plans to assassinate the Tsar and these were discussed in minute detail in the Anarchist Club. Nihilists from Russia, socialists from Germany and communists from France would meet at the Anarchist Club in the very rough and violent East End of London. These idealists included the Houndsditch/Sidney Street gang and they were armed to the teeth with Mauser and Dreyse pistols.

treasurer@platinumparty.org -7 March 2013

The immigrant gangs had more guns, better guns and could get to them quicker than the London police or Scots Guard. The police had human numbers but the Russians had guns, local cover from other immigrants (many of whom were threatened by both sides) and inside knowledge from Churchill's Home Office via Special Branch to Koba. This was the same in France, Germany and Switzerland. Koba was being gifted the money to overthrow the Tsar. Communism was in motion with British Freemasonry support and ORDER OUT OF CHAOS was being set in motion for Russia.

Nikolai Tomacoff (21) was a Russian who had left St Petersburg, Russia in August 1910, four months prior to the Houndsditch robbery. He played and taught the balalaika (right) and was part of the Slavonics, a band of six that sang and played traditional Russian music. He got less than two shillings for a night's work and was better paid in St Petersburg. All he wanted to do was to make some money and meet young English girls.

Nikolai Tomacoff arrived with his friend Ivan Lebeder from Lithuania and they shared one room in a small dank lodging in Whitechapel with eleven others. It was in a badly lit area with narrow twisting alleys with filth laying about the streets. Ivan Lebeder belonged to the revolutionary group the Leesma (the Flame) and Ivan was a bank robber. Nikolai did not consider himself a revolutionary and did not particularly like the Russian Jews in the East End.

Nikolai Tomacoff used to drink at the Anarchist Club and at the Three Nuns in Aldgate. Shortly before these events took place, an Englishman in a bowler hat approached him at the Three Nuns and they agreed to meet again in a pub in Tottenham Court Road outside the East End.

The man in the bowler hat introduced himself as Mr Quinn and said he had seen Nikolai playing the balalaika at the Anarchist Club and knew of his friendship with Ivan Lebeder and with others of the same revolutionary group. This Mr Quinn offered Nikolai one gold sovereign to hear everything they were doing and planning. Thereafter they met each week. Nikolai Tomacoff was paid five shillings for information, ten shillings for good information, and the bus fare from Whitechapel for no information. Sometimes they had a shilling Yorkshire pudding dinner together. Mr Quinn read Russian, but spoke little of it. Nikolai spoke a little English but did not write it, so they communicated in French. Mr Quinn successfully inducted Nikolai Tomacoff into spy work via their shared third language.

Patrick Quinn was an Irishman with twinkling eyes and a neat little goatee. He had been with Special Branch for over 25 years (from 1885) and was now the Superintendent. The Special Branch was originally founded as the Special Irish Branch after the Phoenix Park murders. Special Branch was more concerned with spies, especially German spies, who were very active in Britain prior to WWI. As Head of Special Branch, Quinn knew of a plan for a robbery before it occurred, but, as he said, he didn't have enough details to pass the information on.

Spymaster: "This is debateable."

Fritz Svaars (25) was a native of Libau, Russia. He had been tortured by the Okhrana, the Tsarist secret police in Riga. He was a locksmith by trade, a bank robber by profession and a revolutionary by nature.

- treasurer@platinumparty.org -7 March 2013

Errico Malatesta.

On 15 December 1910 Fritz Svaars went into an electrical store owned by the famous Italian Anarchist Errico Malatesta (a mechanic) who had been living in England for some years. Fritz bought an oxygen cylinder and tubing off him, telling him it was for a magical show. Fritz did not give his real name and sent a boy around to pick it up as per Koba's instructions. Like most of the others, Fritz followed Koba's (Stalin) instructions to the letter.

On the morning of 16 December 1910 Special Branch informant Nikolai Tomacoff gave mandolin lessons to Fritz Svaars at the Anarchist Club. Fritz was full of stories of shop burglaries, being ambushed and shooting his way out, killing a policeman and a shop-owner during his getaway. He was fierce when necessary, but didn't look it. He was 1.75 m tall (5'9") with an average build, slim by current standards. He had grey eyes, pimples and prominent cheekbones, with square shoulders tilted slightly forward. He was excitable and considered somewhat of a lightweight, but also a wild character who would rather die than be caught.

Fritz Svaars was also gentle and sentimental and had a fondness for dressing up and acting. Occasionally he practised the mandolin with his tutor Nikolai Tomacoff at the Anarchist Club in preparation for the upcoming Christmas play. At other times they practised at 59 Grove Street where he lived with his depressing Russian-Jewish girlfriend Luba Milstein. She was a heavy, dull-looking girl, criticised by all.

Fritz had a moustache turned up at the ends, and like all revolutionaries, fancied his chances. In this way, he also lacked caution. He was a boaster and had been saying to Nikolai Tomacoff for a week or more that he and his friends would be rich in a few days. He told Nikolai that the oxygen cylinder was for a burglary. "Something big is happening, my friend. Important people are here, people like Koba. We are going to be rich."[6] [6] All unattributed quotes in this section are from from Julian Symons, The Siege of Sidney Street, London, 1978.

---

Mandolin teacher and Special Branch spy Nikolai Tomacoff: "You mean the cause is going to be rich."

Fritz Svaars: "It is the same thing." Fritz then took a Browning automatic from his pocket and showed Nikolai. Nikolai asked Fritz if it was for a bank robbery and Fritz said, "Not a bank". Fritz was mercurial, and after brandishing his gun he invited Nikolai to join them at their meeting that afternoon at his place, 59 Grove Street, Commercial Road, in London's East End.

Grove Street had three rooms, one on the ground floor and two on the first. There were thirteen very steep stairs leading to the upper floor with no banisters or handrail. As with idealists, everything was dark, dirty and a mess.

There were seven people in the little upstairs room and Nikolai had met six of them before at the Anarchist Club. The group was lacking funds and this was the main reason they let Nikolai in. They had already made the mistake of bringing people into the group who were considered stupid.

Peter the Painter (29) was Fritz's roommate. He got his name from occasionally working as a house painter, but his real name was Peter Piatkow. He was 1.78 m tall (5'10") with hard, narrow, sharp, disconcerting eyes which made him look arrogant. He had a fancy black moustache which he waxed and curled up at the edges into fierce points. His hair was closely cropped and he was always smartly dressed with a bevy of girlfriends. Like his roommate Fritz Svaars, he was a boaster.

George Gardstein (24) was their leader in London. He had a natural air of command and it was easy enough to imagine him as an aristocrat. He was a Lett, of the Lettish revolutionary group in his own country. He had six aliases and carried two passports under the names of Morin and Mourrewitz. He was also known as Poolka Milowitz and by several other names. George Gardstein was also an alias and none of them knew his real name.

George was shortish, slim, with dark hair, pale-faced with strong checkbones, and was always neatly dressed in dark clothes. He had delicate hands and feet and was elegant, almost feminine, in his movements. By the age of 24 he was an old hand at bank robbery and was wanted by the German police. He spoke and wrote Russian and French and spoke and understood a little English. He was Koba's right-hand man in London and Koba (Stalin) had big plans for him.

It was love at first sight for George's mistress, Nina Vassilleva (23). Her father had been a chef at the St Petersburg Palace and lost his job after the fractionalised 1905 revolution due to his Jewishness. This occurred when Nina was at the politically formative age of 18. After the revolution, her father encouraged Nina to leave Russia. She had worked as a servant for a family in Dalston, in north-east London (1906–09) but all she really wanted to do was to make revolutionary propaganda in London. In the process, she accepted George as her revolutionary leader.

She was an intelligent, determined woman with a touch of class and education. She was 1.65 metres tall (5'6") had fair hair, blue eyes, a drawn face and a slim build, but was quite full-breasted, which helps in revolutions. She was a good-looking but intense Russian Jew who spoke Russian, Yiddish, French and a little English with a strong accent. She was a classy but slightly hard piece and life had aged her somewhat. She rolled cigarettes for a living and was also known as Lina and had a passport in the name of Minna Gristis. Nina Vassilleva/Lina/Minna Gristis was a frequent visitor to the Anarchist Club.

William Sokoloff, known by all as Joseph, was a member of the Leesma revolutionary group. He was a tall man with a limp and dragged his right foot behind him. He was a watchmaker by profession and a thief by occupation. He took jobs with jewellers and then stole their stock, making the theft look like an outside burglary. He was jealous of George Gardstein, their leader in London.

Fritz's cousin, narrowed-eyed Jacob Peters was there too. Jacob Peters (Jan Peters or Yakov Peters but known as Peters) had had his fingernails torn out by the Tsarist police, the Okhrana. He used to say that his cousin Fritz Svaars was the true revolutionary and Fritz used to say that his cousin Jacob Peters was the true revolutionary.

After the Russian Revolution in 1917, Jacob Peters became the Deputy Chairman of the Cheka, which investigated counter-revolutionary activities. Many were executed under him at their Moscow headquarters in Lubyanka prison. By 1922 the Cheka reputation was so bad they had to do some PR work and change their name. As an intimidating totalitarian organisation, they changed their name to something much worse – the OGPU, the 'Extraordinary Commission for Combating Counter-Revolution, Sabotage and Speculations'. Jacob Peters became a mass executioner.

Espavo Sarzo - treasurer@platinumparty.org - 7 March 2013

The OGPU later became the NKVD (1934), MVD (1946) and the KGB (1953) after Stalin's death. After the fall of the Berlin Wall the KGB was renamed FSB by the British (aka the 'KG used to B') and the head of the KGB became the president of Russia in December 1999.

There was a stranger in the corner of the room at 59 Grove Street. He sat on the only armchair, puffing away on a pipe. He had a heavily pockmarked face, small shrewd eyes and was older than the rest. His name was Koba (31), who was to become Stalin, Russia's future dictator from 1927 to his medically assisted death in 1953.[7] The Special Branch informant Nikolai Tomacoff had been led straight to the leaders of the future Bolshevik Revolution as they made their final preparations for another fundraiser – an expropriation, a jewellery heist.

George Gardstein ran the British operation in London. George spoke to the others in pure classical Russian with no slang or colloquial phrases. He said they had 36 hours to complete the robbery, from Friday night through to Sunday morning. The Jewish Sabbath started on Friday night and continued through all of Saturday. During this time the Jews prayed, after which they would be out on the street again, going about their business. This was the same pattern with the Russian, Polish, Lett and Slavic Jews.

Espavo 5020 - treasurer@platinumparty.org -7 March 2013

Fritz Svaars began revealing secrets of the planned robbery in front of Special Branch informant Nikolai Tomacoff by saying the difficulty was going to be in keeping the noise down. Gardstein and Nina then cut him off and the topic quickly changed to the Anarchist Christmas play in which Fritz had reluctantly agreed to play the part of a policeman.

[7] Stalin was killed off on the instructions of his Jewish minder Winston Churchill. Stalin was killed off because he was hell-bent on WWIII. WWIII with nukes would have been an entirely different proposition to WWII. Stalin was a much older man and there was genuine fatigue in (and of) his decision-making at all levels of the party. The KGB and the GRU were utterly unable to do anything about him as was intended . . . so the British were forced to take their own agent out themselves. As is routine in these cases, it is the structure the British set up to safeguard their leader that was used to liquidate their leader. Because there were so many safeguards in that structure it was never seriously considered that it would be used, and was virtually a replay of Rasputin's death. There was a structure in place to render Stalin medical assistance but it was never activated and that comes down to a Sentry failure. These Sentries were picked officers of the NKVD and their failure was virtually incomprehensible. The guard commander should have been called. Instead the Sentries and his Jewish doctors stood by and watched Stalin die, refusing him all medication. That there was no punishment handed out confirms it was an organised occurrence.

There was to be a lot of shooting in the play and Peter Piatkow (Peter the Painter) jumped off the bed, snatched up the Mauser revolver, pointed it at Fritz and pulled the trigger. Fritz play-acted, put his hand on his heart, cried, "I'm shot, I am killed" and fell down. Fritz then got up and started playing the mandolin. Peter the Painter started to dance, Joseph (William Sokoloff) began to hum, and Gardstein put an arm around Nina, whirling her around.

Jacob Peters (the future Deputy Chairman of the Cheka) sat on the stool looking on blankly and Koba (the future Russian dictator) smoked on his pipe in dismay. The scene was such a rapid change that they presented as an untrustworthy schizophrenic troop, but it was still magnificent cover.

Koba (Stalin) considered many in the Anarchists to be stupid and probably soon dead. With this in mind, he spoke, quietly, but so that the room stopped. He said, "Comrades, do we have any idea exactly what is in this safe?" 'Comrades' was a word that no one else in the group used. It was, however, a word that was to become common amongst the cause after its success.

Koba then asked for Nikolai to be removed. Although Nikolai was allowed into the room as a potential patron, he was not allowed to join the gang. Nikolai left and an hour later he phoned Mr Quinn, something he was asked to do only in case of an emergency. Special Branch Superintendent Patrick Quinn was not so much interested in the burglary as in Koba. He knew Koba was Russian, an authority figure amongst the revolutionaries, and in charge of robberies in at least five countries.

That evening (Friday 16 December 1910) was the eve of the Jewish Sabbath. Most of the people living in the area were Jews so the streets were deserted. The Anarchist gang had recently rented two buildings adjacent to the Harris jewellery store in the Exchange Buildings in Houndsditch. They were trying to burrow through the brick wall to the neighbouring jewellery shop using hammers, saws and drills. Once inside, they intended to use a gas torch to cut open the Harris jewellery safe. But the robbery went wrong, not because of the information Nikolai Tomacoff gave Pat Quinn (who did nothing with it), but because they made so much noise. They actually expected to break through a double-skin exterior brick wall at night without being heard.

The young police probationer Walter Piper heard the noise, questioned one of the Anarchist gang and then ran to the police station. On the way he saw Sergeant Robert (Bob) Bentley (City of London Police – CoLP) and told him what was going on. Sergeant Bob then told him to go to the Bishopsgate City of London Police Station. He arrived just after 11 pm. Walter Piper told Sergeant Arthur Bryant (CoLP) that there was heavy drilling, sawing and hammering going on in the Exchange Buildings in a little cul-de-sac street on the right-hand side of Houndsditch and that he had told Sergeant Bob, who was now heading down there.

Walter Piper omitted to tell the sergeants that he had spoken to one of the robbers and that they were now on their guard. Sergeant Arthur Bryant left with Sergeant Charles 'Daddy' Tucker (CoLP) and one other City of London Police Sergeant who remains unnamed.

When they arrived, the shutters were closed over the windows but you could still see the gaslight shining through and there was a heck of a lot of knocking noise coming from the cellar next door.

There were seven policemen in all: three sergeants, two uniformed constables, and two plain-clothed constables. There was Sergeant Robert 'Bob' Bentley, Sergeant Arthur Bryant, Sergeant Charles 'Daddy' Tucker, Constable Strongman, Constable Ernie Woodhams, and the two plain-clothed constables who remained unnamed. The five uniformed police were armed with truncheons. None of them had guns.

The police covered the Harris jewellery store door, the exit to Houndsditch and the exit to Cutler Street. At 11.30 pm Sergeant Bob Bentley gave a loud policeman's knock on the door – bang-bang-bang.

On the side of the robbery there were six armed Anarchists; George Gardstein, Fritz Svaars, Jacob Peters, Nina Vassilleva, the limping William Sokoloff and an extra they had roped in named Max. They were armed with very accurate Mausers and Dreyse pistols. Fritz Svaars carried a Browning pistol as well.

Mauser.

Dreyse.

Browning.

George Gardstein, Fritz Svaars, Jacob Peters and Nina Vassilleva were inside the property next to the Harris jewellery store. Nina was upstairs keeping watch and later said the street was teeming with police, although there were only five in uniform. Her group all escaped together. The limping William Sokoloff (Joseph) and Max were outside keeping watch and a couple of curtains were raised on the house opposite.

Bang-bang-bang. The door next to the Harris jewellery store was opened to a dark interior. There was a fire burning in the room to the right, and the man in the doorway, Gardstein, was silhouetted and not readily identifiable. Sergeant Bob Bentley asked him a couple of questions, but he didn't answer. He then asked if there was anyone in the house who could speak English. Gardstein nodded and closed the door on them. The sound of hammering then stopped.

Fritz Svaars and Jacob Peters heard the police. In the time between Gardstein closing the door and the police bashing it in, the Anarchists set a trap. Fritz had placed a pre-prepared ball of gun cotton soaked in nitroglycerine on the hearth. Before plastic, gun cotton was the favourite explosive. With the heat of the fire it would explode soon enough.

The police then bashed the front door in and entered a silent house. Gardstein was standing at the top of the stairs. Sergeant 'Bob' Bentley asked him some more questions. Gardstein then indicated that the way to the back of the house was through the room to their right with the fire.

Sergeant Bob Bentley and Sergeant Arthur Bryant went into the room, which then appeared to explode. This stunned and temporarily blinded the two sergeants. Fritz Svaars then came in through the backdoor firing. Sergeant Robert Bentley was shot in the shoulder and again in the neck. This second shot severed his spinal chord, paralysed him and almost blew him out of the room. Gardstein then started shooting from the top of the stairs.

In those days, the penalty for murder was hanging, and the Russians were shooting to kill without hesitation. This was 1910 and the Russian Anarchist gang showed advanced military training. Some of them were Betar, a Russian-Jewish organisation that had received the latest military training. Their stock in trade became standard and you can still see their influence in movies today.

treasurer@platinumparty.org -7 March 2013

Sergeant Arthur Bryant tackled Fritz Svaars and was then shot in the arm and the chest. The room had filled up with blue smoke from the guns firing. As he escaped, twice-shot Bryant stumbled over Sergeant Bentley who had been blown somewhere close to the front door. At the same time, Constable Ernie Woodhams was dragging the still-breathing Bentley out of the house. Constable Woodhams was then shot at close range by Gardstein, who then stood next to the three shot police officers, looked down the street, saw Sergeant Charles 'Daddy' Tucker and Constable Strongman and shot 'Daddy' Tucker dead.

Twice-shot Sergeant Arthur Bryant then stumbled out on to the street to the opposite side, propped himself against a building and was left for dead. He could no longer move his body but he could still see everything that was going on. Sergeant Arthur Bryant was not supposed to survive. In his affidavit he said that it was the now deceased George Gardstein who shot Sergeant Charles 'Daddy' Tucker dead and wounded Constable Ernie Woodhams at the door. It was Fritz Svaars who killed Sergeant Robert Bentley and shot Sergeant Arthur Bryant twice, but Bryant survived to give this testimony.

Interrupted in their bolshy robbery, the Anarchist gang began to escape. Gardstein led the way and was followed out by Jacob Peters, the rat-faced, hunch-shouldered Fritz Svaars and the elegant Nina Vassilleva. Nina was decently dressed with a fur toque (bonnet) on her head and carried a large muff. A muff is a fur tube open at each end to keep the hands warm and is perfect for concealing a weapon.

The four sprung robbers ran out of the Exchange Buildings towards the main street, aiming for the back alleys of Houndsditch. As they left, they fired at the two remaining plain-clothed constables behind them.

Constable Walter Charles Choat was 1.9 metres tall (6'4") and as big as an ox. He was guarding the main entrance to Houndsditch. Having heard gunfire, armed with a truncheon and acting according to British Police training, he tackled the armed Gardstein, who turned and shot Choat once at point-blank range. Gardstein then tried to release himself, but big-as-an-ox Charley Choat hung on.

Fritz Svaars, Jacob Peters and Nina Vassilleva doubled back to find the big Constable Charley Choat and small Gardstein wrestling. Fritz Svaars shot Constable Choat in the back another seven times at close range before he let go. In the process, Jacob Peters shot George Gardstein through the back into his chest. He was shot so that he could not survive. George was unable to walk and he was carried away by Fritz Svaars and Jacob Peters.

Nina Vassilleva: "In Russia the police would have shot us [so the gang started shooting first to make their escape]. I could not believe it. That we should get clean away, all unhurt, all except for George, the only one who was worth anything."

After the Anarchist gang had left, twice-shot Sergeant Arthur Bryant (CoLP) walked through the streets in a daze calling for a doctor. The two plain-clothed constables were nowhere to be seen. They may have been seconded by Special Branch to observe, in which case they could not interfere and hiked it quick-smart to report back to Special Branch Superintendent Patrick Quinn. Certainly they feature no more in the story.

On their way through the narrow passages at the back of Houndsditch, the Anarchists threatened whoever they encountered. The East End is full of bolt-holes for petty criminals who want nothing to do with the police, and the threatened witnesses later refused to give evidence.

Peter Piatkow (Peter the Painter) replaced Jacob Peters in carrying George Gardstein through the alleyways and Jacob Peters ran off to report to Koba (Stalin).

Nina Vassilleva: "Our journey through the streets and alleys seemed never-ending, but at last we got to 59 Grove Street, where only that afternoon the last conference about the raid had been held. At Grove Street, Peters joined us, having run through the alleys another way. Max had gone off to a friend's house. Somehow, the three of them [Fritz Svaars, Jacob Peters, and Peter Piatkow] dragged George up the stairs, with Joseph [the limping William Sokoloff] and I following them."

Jacob Peters' bullet had entered George Gardstein between his shoulder blades and lodged in his chest, touching the right ventricle. It was an accurate close-range shot aimed to kill. When Fritz Svaars saw George dying he began to sob. He would rather die killing police officers than suffer torture again. Fritz Svaars' girlfriend Luba Milstein brought in a compress for George's mortal wound. She was not considered a security threat and was criticised by all for her cloddish lack of intelligence and plain looks.

Fritz Svaars then joined William Sokoloff and Jacob Peters in the corner of the room where they discussed their next move. Jacob Peters had spoken to Koba (Stalin) on the way back, and like all good revolutionaries in the face of responsibility, they shook Nina's hand and left to find a safehouse. Stalin later joined them and planned their next move.

At 3 am Nina and Luba left the shot George Gardstein by himself and went out into the night in search of a doctor. It was a bitterly cold night, with strong winds and driving rain. They walked with shawls wrapped around their heads to keep themselves warm. Luba walked sideways like a crab and repeatedly told Nina in Yiddish that she had nothing to do with the shooting and did not want to go back to 59 Grove Street. Fritz swore that Luba knew nothing of how he got his money and Nina had agreed by saying that Luba was the most stupid woman she had ever met.

Eventually they found a doctor on Whitechapel Road. The brass plate said Dr Bernstein so Nina spoke Yiddish through a tube at the front door. It was Saturday morning and the Jewish Sabbath. The doctor on duty was a gentile temp doctor who did not understand Yiddish so in her broken English and thick Russian accent Nina said, "A man is very bad – 59 Grove Street. You must come."

Espavo Sozo - treasurer@platinumparty.org -7 March 2013

Dr John James Scanlon came out three minutes later and nodded to Nina and Luba. Nothing was said as the three made their way to Grove Street. Luba didn't say anything and peeled off towards the end, going to adjacent Lindley Street.

Dr Scanlon and Nina continued on to 59 Grove Street. He looked at Gardstein's wound (3.30 am), noted that it had nicked the right ventricle and recommended that she take him to hospital. It was his only chance. Gardstein lay there vomiting blood and refused to go to hospital. Nina then followed Dr Scanlon back to the surgery where he made a morphine sedative.

When Nina returned with the medicine around 5 am, George Gardstein was dying. He said, "The doctor will go to the police [which he did]. Tomorrow the police will start a pogrom. When I die you must get petrol, pour it over me and on the bed, and set fire to it [which she didn't]. Then go to Gold Street (which was one place where we had a room, nearby) and burn all the papers there [which she didn't]. Then you must find Koba, tell him that I failed but that the cause will not fail [which she didn't]."[8]

[8] From Nina Vassilleva's statement.

Nina: "Where shall I find him [Koba]?"

George: "Through Jacob Peters. But perhaps he has already got away. He is very clever."

Nina had not liked Koba (Stalin) but knew how important he was to the mission. She was sure Koba had escaped and that Jacob Peters was trying to escape. Nina gave George a second dose of the morphine.

George: "You must disappear too. Disguise yourself. Remember all I have said."

Nina tried to give him a third dose of medicine but he refused. "No good" were his last words. George died just after 7 am with six different aliases and no one knowing his real name.

> There was no way Nina was going to burn the body of her lover, or destroy all his mementos. Nina did not go out and buy petrol and this was to be a grave mistake. Nina Vassilleva failed on this mission so badly, and left a linking trail so well lit, that she established herself as a double agent.

Instead of burning Gardstein, his guns, ammunition, plans and paperwork, at 7.15 am Nina left his body and effects as they lay. She then went to friends' houses in adjacent Turner and Lindley Streets but found no one except a rather distraught and miserable Luba who spoke of going to the police and telling them everything she knew.

Nina went to the Anarchist Club on Jubilee Street and no one was there – not Koba, Jacob Peters, Fritz Svaars, William Sokoloff, or Peter the Painter – but everyone at the club knew what had happened. Koba had been informed and had briefed them. They were all frightened of the police and of the women turning, so they gave her no information.

Nina then went to another room she and George occupied on the first floor of Buross Street and began dyeing her hair black and burning some of George's papers. She was in a panic and it was a bad dye job. Streaks of her fair hair showed through the black.

Her landlord Isaac Gordon lived on the ground floor. He was a short, round foreigner with an accent you could cut with a knife. He brought a newspaper up to her room that gave a description of her and what she was wearing the previous night at the Houndsditch robbery. Nina was 23 and the papers had described her as 26–30. It was a hard life she'd been leading.

She burnt some of the things the newspaper had described, the blouse, the skirt, and her black hat, but could not bring herself to burn the feather trimming on the hat or the lining of her skirt. She bundled up the rest of George's papers and gave all the remaining items to her landlord Isaac Gordon. Isaac Gordon gave the skirt lining to his wife Fanny Gordon.

This was against George Gardstein's last wishes and George had been trained by the cunning survivor Koba (Stalin).

Around the same time on Saturday 17 December 1910, Dr John James Scanlon phoned the Leman Street Police Station in Whitechapel (H Division of the Met) and spoke with Detective Inspector Wensley (Met). Dr Scanlon said that he had attended a mortally wounded George Gardstein at 59 Grove Street in Whitechapel around 3.30 am that morning and he was dead by 7.30 am.

Dr Scanlon's phone call brought the Met into the CoLP's case. Up to then, the Met didn't have anything to do with the Houndsditch investigation. It wasn't until the informants started phoning and arriving at the Met station that they got roped in.

Detective Inspector Frederick Porter Wensley joined L Division of the Met in 1888. This covered Lambeth, a tough but decent area. Three years later, in 1891, he transferred as a junior constable to H Division, which covers Whitechapel, the worst slum in London. Four years later, in 1895, he joined the CID. Wensley was a bit of a plodder, had huge feet, noticeable even amongst the police, and lacked imagination at times. He had a heavy frame, drooping jowls and a voice that retained a Somerset West Country burr. He looked and acted like a bloodhound, hence his nickname 'Weasel', also a play on Wensley. At the time, he was considered the finest detective on the Metropolitan police force and therefore the world.

Espavo Sozo - treasurer@platinumparty.org -7 March 2013

The City of London Police (CoLP) and the Metropolitan Police (Met) would carry out quite different investigations and their independence meant that they were not always cooperative. Because these were two separate police departments competing for reputations, they would often sabotage each other's investigations. A third party, the Home Office, used this to their advantage every which way. They got the City of London Police and the Metropolitan Police to work together cooperatively, to work separately, and to work against each other when the Home Office wanted to support immigrant crime or cover for the double agent training in order to support revolutions in other countries.

At midday on Saturday 17 December, Detective Inspector Wensley (Met) contacted Chief Constable Melville Macnaghten (Scotland Yard/Met) and asked him to meet him in Whitechapel. Macnaghten (nicknamed Mac, but never to his face) called his chauffeur Crowther, and asked to be driven down to the Met in his Daimler in half an hour. The time lapse allowed Macnaghten to get instructions from above.

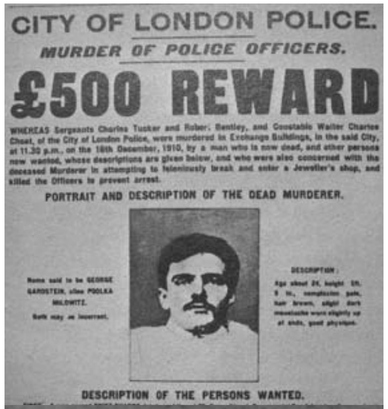
> This period started at the beginning of Stalin's British training (1907–11) and ended with the end of Hitler's British training (Feb.–Nov. 1912). Melville Macnaghten's ignorance was crucial to the success of the bigger plan – WWI (1914–18), the Russian Revolution (1917) and WWII (1939–45), that sort of thing.

In 1913 Macnaghten was knighted and became Sir Melville Macnaghten and then retired. He wrote and published Days of My Years the same year (1913), which mentions the mysterious Mr Nemo as the chief conspirator in these affairs. You can guarantee his work is a collection of lost leaders. His affidavits were the only ones that got the days of meetings wrong. He also said 100 Sidney Street had no cellar, when it had a full basement.

Since the Jack the Ripper Murders of 1888, Macnaghten had been notorious for getting information wrong, saying that he had solved a case while hiding the files, only to have them turn up sixty years later and be proved false. To detectives today he would be known as an upper-crust saboteur, a specialist in lost leaders, a guaranteed bribe taker, and a file thief – hence his knighthood in 1913.

Detective Inspector Wensley (Met) went to 59 Grove Street and was waiting there with Inspector Thompson (CoLP) when Melville Macnaghten (CID/Met) arrived. They went inside and George Gardstein lay dead on the bed. He had a 7.62-calibre Mauser by his bed and a loaded German Dreyse pistol under his pillow with two clips of ammunition.

The Dreyse was a very up-to-date pistol with a long, accurate barrel. Gardstein also had 50 cartridges of Belgian and German ammunition for other weapons and instructions in French for timing fuses, bomb making and gun specifications. There were letters in Russian which Mac could read, some in a primitive code, some in French, and some addressed to Fritz Svaars and Peter the Painter (Peter Piatkow). From this they knew that the deceased George Gardstein was part of a "resolute and dangerous gang" and who the gang members were.



CITY OF LONDON POLICE.

MURDER OF POLICE OFFICERS.

£500 REWARD

WHEREAS Sergeants Charles Tucker and Robert Bentley, and Constable Walter Charles Choat, of the City of London Police, were murdered in Exchange Buildings, in the said City, at 11.30 p.m., on the 16th December, 1910, by a man who is now dead, and other persons now wanted, whose descriptions are given below, and who were also concerned with the deceased Murderer in attempting to feloniously break and enter a Jeweller's shop, and killed the Officers to prevent arrest.

PORTRAIT AND DESCRIPTION OF THE DEAD MURDERER.

Name said to be GEORGE GARDSTEIN, alias POOLKA MILOWITZ.

Both may be incorrect.

DESCRIPTION:

Age about 24, height 5ft. 9 in., complexion pale, hair brown, slight dark moustache worn slightly up at ends, good physique.

DESCRIPTION OF THE PERSONS WANTED.

George Gardstein's eyes were propped open and he was photographed for a 'WANTED' poster to track down his fellow sprung Houndsditch robbers, Fritz Svaars (25), Peter the Painter (29) and Nina Vassilleva (23). A pro rata reward of £500 was offered. The police obviously considered this very important because it was a huge amount of money. It was like giving away a house.

Melville Macnaghten.

Chief Constable Melville Macnaghten (Scotland Yard's CID) usually took lunch at the Garrick Club, but he returned to the Met with Detective Inspector Wensley (Met) and Inspector Thompson (CoLP) for thick roast beef sandwiches. It was 3 pm on 17 December 1910 when Isaac Gordon (Nina and Gardstein's landlord at Buross Street) knocked on the door and asked Detective Inspector Wensley if he could come in. Isaac Gordon was very much in awe of Wensley (Weasel), whom he called Mr Vensel. The foreigners just couldn't get the pronunciation right and never got the joke.

Wensley (Weasel).

Isaac Gordon referred to Gardstein as Mr Morin[9] and said that he demanded privacy in his room and the door remain locked when he was out. He then gave Weasel (Wensley) the papers that Nina had given him around 9 am that morning. The papers included On the Revolution and on Revolutionary Government, a passport for a woman named Minna Gristis (Nina Vassilleva), and photographs of George Gardstein, Peter the Painter (Peter Piatkow), Fritz Svaars, Max and Joseph (William Sokoloff). This was to be the gang's undoing.

In six minutes, Wensley, Macnaghten and short, round Isaac Gordon were in the Daimler on the way to Gordon's depressing little boarding house on Buross Street. It was Gordon's first time in a motorcar and he was let out halfway so he wouldn't be seen.

They stopped the Daimler just short of the house on Buross Street. The landlord Isaac Gordon walked past them, entered the house and smoothed the way with his wife Fanny Gordon. Wensley (Met) then got out of the car and knocked on the front door. Macnaghten (Scotland Yard's CID) and Inspector Thompson (CoLP) briefed each other in the car. Macnaghten then went to the front door. Fanny Gordon opened the door to Wensley (Met) and Macnaghten (CID/Met). Thompson (CoLP) waited in the car.

They went to the front room upstairs and knocked on Nina's door. Nina opened the door and stood their defiantly. Melville Macnaghten (who also spoke French) said that he was chief of all the British police. Nina appeared terrified, retreated to the bed and sat down. Wensley, who didn't speak French, accused her of having guns and Nina said they could search the room. This was the intended result of Wensley's accusation.

Wensley and Mac found the muff that Nina had been wearing at the previous night's bungled Harris jewellery heist, a large blue coat with bloodstains all over it, and a small fireplace where papers and clothes had been recently burnt. This was enough incriminating evidence to lock her up, but that never happened. Nina was already showing signs of being a confidence trickster and double agent.

Wensley showed Nina the photographs of the revolutionaries that Isaac Gordon had given him ten minutes earlier. She denied knowing any of them until she was shown a photograph of her lover George Gardstein and broke down crying. She admitted they lived together at 44 Gold Street.

Nina asked if she was going to be arrested. Wensley (Met) didn't arrest her, which is astonishing because she was part of a burglary that involved three police murders with two others seriously wounded. Wensley merely put on his bowler hat and left Nina looking astonished.

This is called "trusting your agent" and implies long experience of successfully running undercover agents. Most police would not be able to do it, let alone trust an undercover.

[9] His aliases included George Gardstein, Poolka Milowitz, Mourrewitz, Mr Morin and at least two others.

On the street, Wensley stopped to have a chat with a man loitering on the corner. It was the young Constable John Holmes who had six years' police service and had been commended for bravery in a bank robbery (more tackling) a couple of years ago. He had been transferred from E Division to H Division the previous year (1909).

It was Fred Wensley's (Met) idea to let Nina go. "We shall get them through the women. Mark my words, the women will give them away." Young Constable John Holmes was then left in charge of following her.

Wensley's prediction was wrong. Nina realised she was being followed night and day by four interchanging large-hoofed police officers. She made no attempt to give them the slip but did take the train down to Dover. She tried to board the boat to France but the police stopped her (Monday, 19 December 1910) and turned her back to London. "If I go to Russia the Secret Police will kill me, and if I stay here I shall be hanged." (Nina was later tried and set free due to a judicial error.)

Churchill riding royal.

Nina went back to Isaac Gordon's lodgings at Buross Street and strangely they remained friends. As an Anarchist Club regular, Nina went one or two more times to the Anarchist Club but was never seen talking to anyone on the wanted list again.

Superintendent Patrick Quinn of Special Branch did nothing to prevent the burglary or arm the police who approached the robbers. He did not even chase after Koba (Stalin). Mr Quinn was more or less reporting to Churchill, who was ensuring the robbery did take place and Koba would not get caught. As such, the Houndsditch robbery was a training exercise and a fundraiser between Stalin and Churchill whose father, King Edward VII, had died seven months earlier on 6 May 1910.

Churchill was the most devious cigar-smoking fat-shit the world has ever seen. This is why he was voted the greatest ever Briton in 2003.

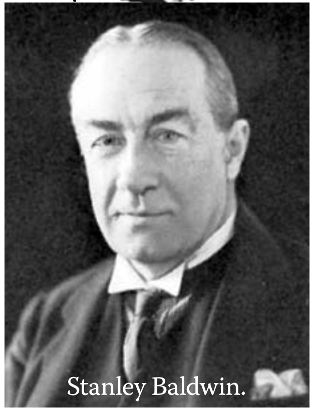
Churchill.

Viscountess Nancy Astor, MP and peerage pimp: "Don't put Winston in the Government – it will mean war at home and abroad. I know the depths of Winston's disloyalty – and you can't know how he is distrusted by all the electors of this country."[10]

Stanley Baldwin (1867–1947) was a conservative MP from 1908, and the British Prime Minister from 1923–29 and 1935–37. As Prime Minister, his non-intervention in Spain in 1936 was regarded as a betrayal of the League of Nations. The Spanish Civil War is universally regarded as the build-up to WWII, largely for the benefit of Germany, especially the trialling of their new planes, aerial bombs, artillery, tactics, and securing a safehaven for Hitler after WWII (OP SAFEHAVEN).

Nancy Astor.

After failing to recognise the threat from Nazi Germany, Stanley Baldwin resigned (28 May 1937) and was immediately congratulated for his ignorance and made Knight of the Garter the same day. Eleven days later he was elevated to 1st Earl Baldwin of Bewdley and 1st Viscount Corvedale, of Corvedale, co. Shropshire [UK] (8 June 1937) and High Steward of Tewkesbury (1939), as well as receiving ten honorary Doctor of Law (LLD) degrees from Oxford, Cambridge, London, St Andrews, Edinburgh, Birmingham, Liverpool, Belfast, Durham and Wales universities.



Stanley Baldwin.

When it comes to war you can bet the universities have got it all wrong.

---

[10] Viscountess Nancy Astor speaking to Stanley Baldwin in 1935, Voices from the Great War, p. 265.

Nancy Astor.

Viscountess Nancy Astor (1879–1964) was a politician, aristocratic pimp, and the American-born wife of Waldorf Astor. She succeeded her husband as Conservative MP for Plymouth (1919) and was the first woman to take a seat in the House of Commons. She was the most considered female political voice of her times and ran the Glass Club, London's version of Salon Kitty, a brothel.

There was continual sabotage and intrigue going on in Scotland Yard and between the City of London Police and the Met. Special Branch Superintendent Patrick Quinn worked across the courtyard from chief constable Melville Macnaghten (Mac) at Scotland Yard's Criminal Investigation Department (CID).

Mac liked Pat Quinn, and on Saturday 17 December 1910, after he was contacted about the robbery by Detective Inspector Wensley (Met), Mac made the five-minute walk across the courtyard to see Quinn rather than use the phone. Special Branch Superintendent Pat Quinn told Melville Macnaghten, Chief Constable at Scotland Yard's Criminal Investigation Department, that one of his pigeons (informants) had told him, less than 48 hours ago, that a robbery was going down. Pat Quinn said he hadn't warned him because he didn't have the details . . . and what concerned him was treason, not robbery.

Pat Quinn had spies amongst the Germans and the Anarchists, and would have had some hint of Stalin's Tavistock training. Had he not retired he would equally have known of Adolf Hitler's British training in 1912.

Peter Piatkow (Painter).

The police set up their 'pogrom'. They put undercovers in place as peddlers, shoe-shiners and street hawkers, but they were only fed misleading rumours. The Met and the City of London Police also had dozens of detectives combing every lodging house in the Whitechapel area. It appeared that Peter Piatkow (Peter the Painter), the excitable Fritz Svaars, the limping William Sokoloff (Joseph) and Koba (Stalin) had disappeared.

Their method of transport by sending one out and waiting for a coded message from the other still worked. When Jacob Peters saw Koba (Stalin) straight after the failed robbery they arranged for a group meeting to plan their escape. At this meeting they decided to fake two deaths, those of Fritz Svaars (who had killed Sergeant Bob Bentley and wounded Sergeant Arthur Bryant) and his loyal follower Joseph (William Sokoloff).

> Koba was British trained (1907–11), and for him, > the East End of London was one big training ground > and a training exercise was taking place.

After Jacob Peters spoke to him on the night of the Houndsditch robbery, it was widely believed that Koba left England for France on 17 December 1910 via underground channels made available through sympathisers. These included a fishing boat to France from where Koba went to Switzerland (where the 1917 Russian counter-revolution was being planned). The Anarchists had an underground movement in every industrial country and Koba (Stalin) was never underresourced.

> Stalin's escape did happen in this way but it happened
> 18 days later and under historic circumstances.

treasurer@platinumparty.org -7 March 2013

Koba frequented the Anarchist Club, as did Peters, Fritz, Joseph and Peter the Painter, and they had plenty of contacts there. That the British allowed the Anarchist Club to exist at all is amazing. They had spies there, but the spies were known as spies by both sides and were working for both sides. This was typified by Nikolai Tomacoff, whose information was often two minutes late. He survived, and in style, by informing both sides and producing no results against people he liked. When he didn't like them, which was the case with the more revolutionary Russian Jews, he turned them in. He was not brave enough to turn in Koba, and any news of Koba given to Pat Quinn was passed on to Winston Churchill, and only to Winston Churchill, and to no one else.

Special Branch Superintendent Patrick Quinn, in one of the great neon blunders of detective history, put the Russian informant and balalaika player Nikolai Tomacoff (21) into a hotel and bought him a new set of clothes. With his new dress and address he was transformed overnight from a poor 21-year-old Russian immigrant into a well-off English gent. With all this heat going down, Nikolai was paid to sniff around the slums of Whitechapel every day dressed as a newly trimmed poodle.

Despite these luxurious setbacks, he had some success – one success and one failure.

After a few days (Tuesday 20 Dec. 1910), Nikolai Tomacoff told Wensley (Met) where Jacob Peters was living. They put an officer in his room and Peters came quietly. He was arrested on a murder charge, said he had never heard of Koba and blamed everything on his cousin Fritz. This was the statement they had agreed to at the Houndsditch/Anarchist meeting early on Saturday 17 December.

Nikolai Tomacoff then gave Wensley a tip-off that Peter Piatkow (Peter the Painter) was living near Grove Street where Gardstein had died. When they arrived, Peter Piatkow had been tipped off and left a few minutes earlier. It looked like Nikolai was informing for both sides. Peter Piatkow went to ground. Three weeks later the French Sûreté informed Special Branch's Pat Quinn that Peter Piatkow was in Paris.

Nikolai Tomacoff was a cheeky spy. He even demanded payment for his affidavit, which he wrote down in Russian (some of which you are reading here). He had learnt to speak a little English, but couldn't write it. Nevertheless, he continued to work for Special Branch as an informant for some years after the Houndsditch and Sidney Street affairs.

Luba Milstein came to the Met on Wednesday 21 December and spoke to Mr Vensel (Detective Inspector Wensley – the Weasel) and turned herself in. She said she had been the lover of Fritz Svaars and knew nothing of the robberies. "Her stupidity was such that this could have been the case." She was retained in police custody "for her own safety". Luba was cloddish, too stupid to pick up on what was going on, too dull to warrant taking information from, and not a member of the gang. She was the opposite of Nina.

On Thursday 22 December 1910 (the day before the police funeral) a reward of £500 was offered by J. W. Nott Bower, the Commissioner of the City of London Police, for information leading to the arrest of Fritz Svaars, Peter Piatkow (Peter the Painter) and Nina Vassilleva (Lina, Minna Gristis). The reward was pro rata, depending on how many were captured, and the only photo on the reward poster was of the deceased George Gardstein.

What is so interesting about this is that Nina (via her landlord Isaac Gordon) had given CID chief Macnaghten and Detective Inspector Frederick Wensley photos of Fritz Svaars, Peter Piatkow (Peter the Painter), William Sokoloff (Joseph) and Max five days earlier on 17 December. Double agent Nina had given the Metropolitan Police and Scotland Yard the photos of the Anarchist gang, yet the Commissioner of the City of London Police either didn't receive them or did not publish them.

> This shows collusion between the Home Office and the Anarchist gang, and continual sabotage between Scotland Yard, the Met, the City of London Police and the Home Office like we've never seen before. It is part of what makes this case so interesting a century later.

Scotland Yard's CID Chief Melville Macnaghten: "The news of this outrage [the Houndsditch police murders] infuriated every policeman in London and horrified the general public. The funeral service for the three dead men took place at St Paul's Cathedral [22 December 1910, the same day the reward posters were put up], and it was a deeply moving scene . . . All of the important dignitaries of the City of London attended the service, including the Lord Mayor, the sherrifs and the aldermen in their scarlet gowns. There was a special police contingent . . . In the meantime, the three men and one woman seen by Bryant had got away."

Nina Vassilleva, accomplice to the triple police murders, attended the funerals and brought a memorial card with potraits of the three dead policemen inside. Nina could get police photos, yet the City of London Police could not, or would not publish photos of the 'wanted' men she had given them. Nina was amongst the City of London Police, the special police contingent, the city's dignitaries and the Lord Mayor . . . and no one said a word. Either they were overpowered by grief and stupidity or there was collusion and she was a protected double agent. Either way, no one arrested Nina for the reward.

Her attendance was a very visual statement to all the other Russian-Jewish anarchists that her cover had been blown, that she was being followed and her every move watched. The police took it to mean that she was sympathetic and this helped in her trial. In return they engineered a mistrial and let her off. Nina had taken part in the Harris jewellery heist, escaped, been present at the shooting of the police officers, been questioned by the police, handed over incriminating evidence, let go, stopped at Dover trying to escape, had a bounty placed on her head, turned up at the funeral, for which she took part in their deaths, and was not arrested by the police, nor was the £167 reward claimed for her capture (a third of the price of a house).

The British police were acting like gentlemen doormats for any and all Anarchists as long as they showed remorse and had stand-up breasts. Breasts are still the greatest influence on revolutions and the judiciary to this day.

After her attendance at the funeral, the inexperienced Chief Constable Melville Macnaghten concluded that Nina "was not devoid of decent human feelings". Nina was given her freedom and ongoing police protection and the trial was a show trial to secure her freedom while maintaining access to the immigrant gangs. She gained heroine status and retained her access to the Betar while maintaining her role as a British Special Branch double agent.

Spymaster: "The Betar was a Jewish Intelligence agency that existed within the Bolshevik and Tsarist Intelligence but was entirely loyal to itself. In the 1960s they penetrated the Mossad and supplied details of Gerhard Lotz to the GRU (Soviet Military Intelligence) who gave him to Egyptian Intelligence (the Muktabarik)."

Nina was always a double agent. She worked as a British Special Branch agent planted within the Russian Jewish Betar. She was involved in monitoring the emerging Russian Revolution for Patrick Quinn and Winston Churchill and was protected as such. She was not involved in any British counter-espionage of the Russian Revolution, because there was none.

Another landlord, this time from 44 Gold Street, recognised George Gardstein from the reward poster and said Gardstein called himself Mr Morin and claimed to be a chemistry student. When his room was searched the police found a virtual laboratory containing nitric acid, nitroglycerine, books dealing with the making of explosives and melting ingots, a Mauser pistol and hundreds of cartridges.

So the Anarchist gang had at least ten hideouts within their immediate crowd: 59 Sidney Street, Buross Street, 44 Gold Street, Turner Street, Lindley Street, two places in the Exchange Buildings off Houndsditch, 77 Jubilee Street, 100 Sidney Street (discovered 2 January 1911) and 104 Sidney Street (exposed for the first time here).

Fritz Svaars and Peter the Painter lived at 59 Sidney Street where George Gardstein had died. Nina and George Gardstein lived at Buross Street and 44 Gold Street where Gardstein's laboratory was also kept. Luba lived at Lindley Street and occasionally with Fritz at 59 Sidney Street. William Sokoloff (Joseph) had spent a couple of nights in the Exchange Buildings and George had spent one night there. They had only tenanted these a few days prior, but they were useless, due to the robbery. They also had Stalin's residence at 77 Jubilee Street off Whitechapel Road which could be used as a last resort.

On Sunday 1 January 1911, 19 days after the undercovers were put on the street and 10 days after the reward poster was issued and the funeral held, Nikolai Tomacoff tried to phone Pat Quinn at Special Branch with information leading to the whereabouts of Fritz Svaars and William Sokoloff. Special Branch Superintendent Patrick Quinn was on holiday and there was no answer. If Special Branch Superintendent Quinn had answered the phone, the Sidney Street Siege may never have happened, so Patrick Quinn was on holiday.

Nikolai Tomacoff then went to see Detective Inspector Frederick Wensley at the Met as his second choice. Just after midnight on Monday 2 January 1911, under cover of snow and fierce sleet rain, a male informant came to the Met's Leman Street Station covered from head to toe like an Islamic woman. He had a long blue overcoat, a black hat pulled right down over his eyes, and a scarf around his face. When he was alone with Wensley he undid the scarf and demanded the £500 reward money for information leading to the capture of Fritz Svaars and William Sokoloff. Wensley noted to himself that the clothes he was wearing had already been paid for by the police.

Nikolai Tomacoff went on to say that Perelman, a photographic enlarger, had once been Gardstein's landlord and that Perelman had recently arranged for the transfer of two important people from one place to another: from Betty Gershon's care at 100 Sidney Street to a room in a house owned by Perelmans' cousin. From here they were to be transported abroad.

Sidney Street

Betty Gershon was William Sokoloff's lover, and wherever William went, Fritz Svaars was sure to follow. The transfer had not yet taken place and they were still at 100 Sidney Street. Betty Gershon was also William Sokoloff's first cousin. This was common practice in those days. Even Albert Einstein took part in this with his first cousin Elsa in 1911. Strangely, it was the automobile that largely cured second-degree incest, although 20% of marriages are still between cousins.[11]

When Tomacoff left, Wensley (Met) phoned Superintendent Ottoway (CoLP) and then his boss, the head of H Division, Divisional Superintendent Mulvaney (Met). Wensley, Mulvaney and Ottoway then had an immediate conference and discussed the practical aspects of the attack, like how the men were to be deployed.

Wensley then phoned Macnaghten at his estate. Macnaghten spent Christmas in the "bosom of his family" at their estate down in Wiltshire (south-west of London). Wensley rang around 1 am on the morning of 2 January 1911 saying that another informant had told them that William Sokoloff (Joseph) and Fritz Svaars were staying at 100 Sidney Street on the East End.

Macnaghten was not a great detective and had no history of being a detective before he was appointed Chief Constable at Scotland Yard's Criminal Investigation Department. He was however, a great gentleman and knew the right things to say to people. He had a phenomenal memory and knew the names and dates of everyone in his force. He organised people very well, but he had little practical knowledge of fieldwork. He was brilliant at cutting red tape but sometimes the other detectives just wished he would be somewhere else. Inexperienced but highly promoted, Macnaghten was considered an administrator.

Detective Inspector Wensley told Macnaghten to stay the night in Wiltshire. "There's no need to come straight away, just turn up in the morning." Wensley generally took instructions from Macnaghten but in this case he was giving them.

[11] It is estimated that 80% of marriages through history have been between first cousins. Canada's first Prime Minister Sir John A. MacDonald married his first cousin, but the MacDonalds were known for it, and Franklin D. Roosevelt married his ugliest cousin (though not a first cousin). First-cousin marriages in the US have dropped to 0.1% and in Japan to 0.4%. Affordable travel made the biggest change. (Source: CousinCouples.com)

Detective Inspector Wensley (Met), Superintendent Ottoway (CoLP), Divisional Superintendent Mulvaney (Met) and a couple of Met sergeants went to 100 Sidney Street and had a look. It was pitch black and snow was driving into their faces. The house was in one of a block of ten, called Charley Martin's Mansions after the landlord who owned them all. They were all five-storey, flat-fronted walk-ups flush with the street. All had a large basement, a ground floor and three floors above.

Sidney Street was in the City of London but only a few yards from the boundary of the Met's Leman Street Police Station in Whitechapel. 100 Sidney Street was in a rough area that neither force wanted to work. Nevertheless, Sidney Street was known by the Freemasons as 'golden mile' and is known today as 'Freemasons' golden mile'.

They returned to the station and Superintendent Stark (CoLP) joined them. His main concern was that they could become a laughing stock after three of their men were killed at Houndsditch. Stark had already ordered detectives out around Sidney Street and Superintendent Ottoway (CoLP) had called in all available men. One hundred showed up ready to brave the cold and avenge their mates.

H Divisional Superintendent Mulvaney (Met) suggested overwhelming force and offered 100 men to match. Superintendent Stark (CoLP) then admitted that he didn't know the area well, although it was his area, and wondered where he was going to put all his police officers. Detective Inspector Wensley (Met) then drew a map of Charley Martin's Mansions showing that Sidney Street, Lindley Street, Hawkins Street and Richardson Street all shared a common backyard and an alleyway ran from Lindley Street to the adjacent Sidney Street.

They decided to surround the buildings, watch the rooftops, and remove everyone from inside 100 Sidney Street and the neighbouring houses at 98 and 102, just in case they tried to break through the walls. (This actually paved the way for them to break through the walls.)

H Divison of the Met had a few antiquated snub-nosed bulldog revolvers and most of these had to be reloaded after each shot. The best could fire five shots in ten seconds, but they were hopelessly inaccurate over 9 metres. The distance straight across the street was 13 metres, up to the fourth floor it was more like 17 metres, and from any safe location it was over 25 metres. Looking through glass at one end and into glass at the other didn't help either.

Espavo Sozo - treasurer@platinumparty.org -7 Ma 20

Superintendent Ottoway (CoLP) then said he could get his hands on some rifles. He went to a miniature army rifle range (maximum range 9 metres), returning a few minutes later with some .22 Morris-tube rifles. There were no questions as to the capabilities of the rifles nor were they issued to the 100 or so volunteer officers at that time.

Ottoway had immediate access to army training rifles in the wee hours of the morning and he either didn't know they were next-to-useless, or he didn't let anyone else know. Either way, this was very queer for the Superintendent of the City of London Police – to be able to access useless rifles at such short notice in the very early hours. It showed he had army connections capable of purposeful sabotage.

Superintendent Ottoway (CoLP) was effectively arming the City of London Police with wooden spoons. Their conference ended at 1.30 am.

Detective Inspector Fred Wensley: "[At 1.30 am] Detective Sergeant Sonny Jacobson . . . the only Jewish detective in H Division (Met) . . . took a dozen men and began to put them in the adjoining houses . . . knocked on a door in Hawkins Street [actually 98 Sidney Street] and the landlady, a Mrs Rubenoff, opened it . . . Sonny and four men crept through the house to the backyard . . ."

Espavo Sozo - treasurer@platinumparty.org - 7 March 2013

They walked through 98 Sidney Street into the backyard. Nine of them, including Sonny, crept over the low wall and blocked the back entrance of 100 Sidney Street. Four officers then climbed over to Mrs Bluestein's at 102. This left four officers guarding the backyards of 98, 100 and 102 Sidney Street and no one inside any of these houses. Detective Sergeant Sonny Jacobson announced to Wensley that they were all in place at 2.55 am.

The police did not occupy the houses at 98, 100 or 102 Sidney Street. They only occupied the backyards. There were no police on the third floor of 102 Sidney Street, nor anywhere inside that house. The occupants inside 98 and 102 were not evacuated until after the crowds had gathered.

At 3 am Detective Inspector Fred Wensley knocked on the shutter at 100 Sidney Street. Mrs Fleishman, the landlady on the ground-floor front room, replied in Yiddish, "We don't need any milk". Wensley had Sonny Jacobson translate. They identified themselves as police and Mr Fleishman opened the front door, left the chain on and skedaddled. Detective Inspectors Wensley and Jacobson then pushed the door open, breaking the chain.

They spoke to Mrs Fleishman, who told them there were sixteen in the house and they had to evacuate fourteen of them quietly. Through Detective Sergeant Sonny Jacobson, Wensley asked Mr Fleishman to go up and get Mrs Gershon. He said he wouldn't do it for £1000. If Mr Vensel was there (Wensley-the-Weasel) there was big trouble. He then asked Mrs Fleishman and she said she wouldn't do it for £5000.

Wensley: "Tell her to go up and say her husband has been taken ill. Ask Mrs Gershon to come down and help."

The Yiddish-speaking Mrs Fleishman went to the third floor and knocked on the front-room door. There was no answer and then Betty Gershon came out of the stockroom opposite. The knocking had alerted William Sokoloff and Fritz Svaars.

The Yiddish-speaking Mrs Betty Gershon came down. She was tall and thin with peering eyes and looked like an ostrich. Through Sonny Jacobson, Wensley asked her who was in her room. In her first of many answers she said that no one was in her room, then that Joseph (William Sokoloff) was sleeping there alone, and then let slip that Koba (Stalin) had already left England. Ten minutes later she admitted that Joseph had a pal in the room who he once called 'Fritz'. William Sokoloff and Fritz Svaars were sleeping in the third-floor front room of 100 Sidney Street.

She then said they had removed her dress and shoes to stop her getting out of the house and telling anyone. This shows a high level of training on both sides. Betty Gershon was then taken to the station.

At 7 am Detective Inspector Wensley left 100 Sidney Street for a conference with Divisional Superintendent Mulvaney (Met) and Superintendent Ottoway (CoLP) and CID Chief Macnaghten joined them.

The evacuation was left to Detective Inspector Sonny Jacobson (Jewish). This consisted of Mr Fleishman (the thin, bearded, fast-footed tailor), Mrs Fleishman (who only spoke Yiddish) and their daughter Leah from the ground-floor front room; Mr Clements (90, stone deaf, "made a hell of a hullabaloo") and Mrs Clements from the ground-floor back room; Mr and Mrs Shiemann and their four children from the first-floor front room; and the little Fleishman twins from the first-floor back room. The basement was used for coal storage and the attic was used to store paper, files, old furniture and the like.

By 7.30 am the City of London Police and the Met had surrounded the house with a hundred men each, two hundred in total. They were in position waiting in drizzling rain and biting wind when Superintendent Mulvaney (Met) pointed out that the men across the street had nothing to shoot with. Neither the City of London Police nor the Met had arms that could be considered modern or well stocked.

Superintendent Ottoway (CoLP) then borrowed the Morris-tube rifles again, returning around 8.30 am. It was strange that Superintendent Ottoway (CoLP) did not hand them out to the police at 1.30 am. If he had, the police would have realised how useless they were and this could have resulted in the police being armed with effective weapons and the Scots Guards arriving in position before first light.

This was an act of coordinated self-sabotage between the army and CoLP as only the Home Office and above could arrange.

Espavo S020 - treasurer@platinumparty.org -7 March 2013

The police were also issued with the antiquated snub-nosed revolvers but most of these had to be reloaded after each shot. There were not nearly enough rifles and revolvers to go around and most of the officers did not know how to use them.

The murder of three police officers during the failed Harris jewellery heist was the single biggest incident these British police had ever faced. Sidney Street was about to make it legendary and the police did not want to botch it up. Nevertheless, two hundred police officers turned up two weeks later with no effective weapons between them.

> Most of the officers were armed with intimidation, badges, Freemasonry logos strapped around their 'tits on head' helmets, and truncheons facing known murderers with accurate German pistols. This was called 'bravery' and 'in the line of duty'. It was, however, stupidity in the making of dead 'heroes'. This meant that most of the two hundred police officers were next to useless. They were merely spectators who were also targets.

Winston Churchill, son of King Edward VII.

At that time, the principal police defence against an armed Russian gang member was to tackle their opponents, which was fine if you played rugby, and if the opponent wasn't prepared to shoot, but this was the Betar (Russian-Jewish Intelligence) and you never got to play rugby again.

The Metropolitan Police had no stock of rifles and Scotland Yard was useless for supply. Rifles were considered for soldiers and could only be procured from the army. The quickest and best way to get hold of proper firearms was to bring in the troops. As Home Secretary, it was the young Winston Churchill (36) who controlled the army and the nation's firearms.

The Anarchists, on the other hand were known to have Mauser pistols, which were accurate up to 900 metres. Some models of Mauser pistols converted to rifles – the pistol's wooden pouch became the butt of the rifle, and the barrel, stored in the pouch, was fixed to the pistol, making the 'broom-handled Mauser' (1896).

Mausers came in 7.62 mm, 9 mm and 11.4 mm (.45 inch) and fired spitzers, which is a round pointed bullet loaded by stripper clip. The Mausers also took short and long magazines. This was the type of gun Winston Churchill used in Africa. They were a favourite of the Chinese and German Storm Troopers in WWI – 'schnell feur' ('quick firer').

The Anarchists also had Dreyse 32-calibre 1907 patent pocket pistols made in Germany and calibre-9 mm Browning long pistols made in Belgium from 1903. These were better than anything the police had.

The house opposite 100 Sidney Street belonged to a chemist named Cohen. There was no answer to their early-morning knocking on the front door, so Detective Inspector Wensley went around the back and used his skeleton key to get through the back gate, and the back door.

Chemist Cohen threatened to blow his whistle to call the police. Before phones, whistles were the primary method of alerting the police, and people in colonial countries kept whistles in their houses right through to the 1970s. Ten minutes later, Mr Cohen and his wife Rebecca were sitting in the back kitchen in relative safety.

Three Met officers, including Constable Harris, went to the top floor, took mattresses off the beds and placed them against the windows. They were concealed by the curtains, had their Morris-tube rifles ready, but were two floors below the Anarchists. They were very effective targets, useful for cover and morale, but useless for attack and end game.

Melville Macnaghten, Chief Constable at Scotland Yard's Criminal Investigation Department: "As I've said the excitement of the chase has always been the most fascinating thing about police work for me, and this was a chase in which it looked as though we'd found our quarry. I rose just before six, and as I shaved found myself humming a line of doggerel, I say what a day we are having, my boys, I say what a day we are having – the chorus of a popular song which I'd heard a week before at Evan's Cave of Harmony, the music hall in Covent Garden. I got Crowther out of bed early too and, still humming, had myself taken down [from Wiltshire] to the East End."

Espavo Sozo - treasurer@platinumparty.org

Chief Constable Macnaghten (Scotland Yard CID/Met) arrived in the dim light before dawn. "I must say it was very decent of Ottoway, Mulvaney and Wensley to seem pleased to see me at the unearthly hour of seven, when they'd no doubt been expecting me a couple of hours later. [They] were looking a little blue about the gills, and they didn't say no to a stiffener from the flask that I always carry in my top pocket . . . It was a ticklish question as to who was in control, the City of London Police or the Met . . . Mulvaney [Met] and Ottoway [CoLP] were polite enough, but it wouldn't have taken much to get them at each other's throats."

Divisional Superintendent Mulvaney (Met): "It's my opinion they know the game's up. Give them a shout and they'll surrender."

Chief Constable Macnaghten (Scotland Yard CID/Met): "Try to attract their attention, throw stones at the windows. If they come out, well and good. It not, we'll know where we are at."

Detective Inspector Wensley (Met) shouted out: "Come on, lads, let 'em know we're here. Some pebbles in the yard here. Use 'em."

The two hundred or so police had just had three of their mates killed and were equally impatient looking at drawn curtains. Sergeant Hallam ran across the road to the open front door of the house and ran back. Detective Inspector Wensley then grabbed a handful of pebbles and started throwing them at the top fourth-floor windows and others followed.

The curtains remained closed, and at that point CID's Macnaghten thought they'd escaped.

Sergeant Ben Leeson was quite a large man for the times. The pebbles and grit weren't doing the trick so he grabbed a brick from the woodyard, carried it down to 100 Sidney Street, stood outside and shouted: "I'm going to let 'em have this to wake 'em up with." He stretched back to throw the brick at the top fourth-floor windows when a third-floor window broke and three shots were fired from a Dreyse automatic. Sergeant Leeson was hit in both nipples: "I'm hit!"

The other officers sprinted back to the woodyard and closed the gate behind them. Sergeant Hallam (who had checked the front door) noticed Sergeant Leeson moving too slowly so he intercepted and carried Sergeant Leeson into Cohen's house, directly opposite 100 Sidney Street, and placed him on the kitchen couch.

Superintendent Mulvaney (Met) and Detective Inspector Wensley (Met) were there taking cover. Sergeant Hallam's helmet had taken a hit in the intercept rendering him temporarily deaf. Detective Inspector Wensley said: "Have a cuppa and you'll feel better."

Macnaghten (Scotland Yard CID/Met), Superintendent Mulvaney (Met) and Detective Inspector Wensley (Met) went upstairs to see how the police marksmen were doing. The windows were being shot out.

Macnaghten said, "What about your return fire?" and one of the three [Met] constables [Harris] looked up, tapped his rifle and in his slow-spoken English said: "These just ain't no good for the job, Guv'nor . . . and I ain't a bad shot, sir. If I had a real rifle, I might pick one of 'em off. But with these, it's going to be luck if we're on target, isn't it so, boys? What I mean is, they're not the tools for the job." Another constable said, "We're outmatched, and that's a fact . . . Morris-tube rifles are fowling pieces."

Morris-tube rifles are fowling pieces.

Espavo Sozo - treasurer@platinumparty.org - 7 March 2013

Even firing across the street, the Morris-tube rifles were not accurate, and the Met had no stock of rifles. Morris-tube rifles were modified rifles for long-range practice with a maximum range of 9 metres (30 yards). A small rifle barrel was fitted inside an ordinary rifle so that it could only shoot small .22 gauge bullets, close enough to single-shot birdshot. They were also fitted with training sights so the 9 metres looked 230 metres away.

Morris-tube rifles were the most inaccurate and powerless guns the police could get their hands on and the most inaccurate and powerless guns on the market. Aiming at the window, the bullet would hit the wall, and damage to the wall was minimal. Morris-tube rifles were only ever used for 'shoot-not-to-kill', they had a tendency to foul up and were training-only weapons. They effectively protected the Anarchists and exposed the police.

It was 13 metres across the street and Morris-tube rifles had a maximum range of 9 metres. This meant that the police bullets were not making it across the street, and if they did, they had difficulty breaking a window and would dangle in a target rather than maim. This meant that the 200 police posed absolutely no threat to the Anarchists whatsoever, and chances of being hit or incapacitated by British police fire was 'fluke only'.

The Anarchists knew this and were given every opportunity to kill the police. If they had the mind to, the Houndsditch/Anarchist gang had every chance of shooting their way out and escaping. As it was, they planned their escape under the cover of police and Scots Guard fire.

Once shooting began and couldn't be returned, Mulvaney said: "This is just what I feared. We should never have alarmed them. There's one man [Sergeant Leeson] dying now." Macnaghten (Scotland Yard CID/Met) thought Divisional Superintendent Mulvaney (Met) was a wet blanket.

They needed a doctor for the twice-shot Sergeant Leeson. Superintendent Ottoway (CoLP) volunteered and scrambled over the roofs of the outbuildings to arrange for the doctor. He stopped at the Mann & Crossman brewery farther down the street, sent for a doctor, gathered stretchers and organised a temporary headquarters just out of immediate range of the Anarchists' gunfire. He had set up a firing party with more Morris-tube rifles, but from that distance and angle they were just as likely to hit their own men.

Mann Crossman & Paulin Ltd. Albion Brewery.
Whitechapel Road, E.

Mann & Crossman brewery.

The rain became heavy and the firing slackened off. This provided some cover, and a few minutes later Dr Johnstone arrived and noted that both nipple wounds had exited through Sergeant Leeson's back and his only chance of survival was hospital.

Cohen's didn't have a phone so Wensley scrambled over the roofs to the Mann & Crossman brewery and returned a few minutes later, under cover of heavy rain, with a stretcher.

The rather large Sergeant Ben Leeson was strapped into a stretcher. They opened the back door to heavy icy rain, which was good because it provided cover, but it also made the steep roof crossings slippery.

Detective Inspector Wensley and Dr Johnstone carried the twice-shot Sergeant Leeson up a ladder over the outbuilding roof, where they were exposed to fire from the uppermost floor at 100 Sidney Street. As they attempted to get over a 4 metre wall, down a ladder onto the top of a wood van and into the woodyard, the Anarchists spotted them and harassed them with sustained bursts of firing.

In Cohen's upper floor, CID Chief Macnaghten remembered that he was a pretty good shot in Bengal and put the Morris-tube rifle to his eye. The 13 metres across the street looked 330 metres away. He aimed at the window, took half a dozen shots and they all hit the brick wall. He handed the gun back to Constable Harris (Met), saying, "You'll have to do the best you can lads". Superintendent Ottoway's (CoLP) firepower was toothless.

The police wanted proper guns, regular army rifles, Lee-Enfields, and men who could use them.

As Wensley and Dr Johnstone moved towards the brewery wall, with the rain falling in buckets, a hail of bullets hit the tiles. A bullet grazed Dr Johnstone's forehead and he dropped the stretcher. Twice-shot Leeson then undid his own stretcher straps, rolled down the roof, fell 6 metres and was caught by waiting police officers. This was miraculous for a man shot through both nipples with 7.62 mm bullets.

treasurer@platinumparty.org -7 March 2013

Spymaster: "He must have been Irish."

A policeman climbed the ladder, bobbed his head up over the roof and said, "We've got him, sir, he's all right", and then a bullet removed his helmet. Dr Johnstone made his way quick-smart off the roof and over the wall.

Macnaghten and Mulvaney went out to Cohen's backyard and watched the brewery getting shot up. Constable Corrington scrambled over the roofs and told them that Wensley had been trapped, presumed dead. Macnaghten said: "The police had never needed guns before in my lifetime."

Detective Inspector Wensley (Weasel) was the only one left on the roof and the Anarchists peppered the tiles around him with bullets. Wensley crawled into the gutter of the outbuilding shed and took protection from the small parapet wall. The whole time, Wensley was wearing his bowler hat, and when it fell off the Anarchists shot it.

Wensley stayed there for half and hour out of sight. He could have yelled out to the other police and the other police could have yelled out to him, but they all remained quiet. They were a mass of unarmed troops against two armed men and they were pinned down and hiding. Rumours of Wensley's death spread and published in a special edition of the Evening News rushed out a few hours later.

Wensley used his side-pocket persuader (about half the size of a truncheon with a lead shot at one end) and in five minutes he had broken through the roof tiles. He slipped in feet first and landed on a green and gold Mann & Crossman brewer's dray.

Constable Leeson got to hospital and recovered. God knows how – maybe his injuries were exaggerated or his nipples were in strange places.

Macnaghten (Mac) and Mulvaney stayed in Cohen's house for another half-hour. They watched the progress of the battle but there wasn't any. Sidney Street was clear between Lindley Street and Hawkins Street for a hundred metres or so. The Anarchists wounded a constable in the arm and killed a stray cat. Other than that, a lot of windows had been broken and there was glass all over the street.

Superintendent Mulvaney (Met) said to Melville Macnaghten (Scotland Yard CID/Met): "We need help . . . I mean weapons. Regular army rifles, sir. Lee-Enfields, and men who can use them. I think we need troops."

Scotland Yard had no authority for this. The order and supply had to come from the Home Office, and this meant the Home Secretary Winston Churchill, who was, by those in the know, occasionally referred to as W. C. behind his back (Water Closet – public toilet).

Mac decided they should make the same treacherous journey to the Mann & Crossman brewery under cover fire from Constable Harris (Met) and his men's Morris-tube rifles. The Anaracbists didn't even fire a shot. Churchill had briefed the Anarchists not to kill anyone in a bowler hat. Macnaghten (Scotland Yard CID/Met) was pleased to find Detective Inspector Wensley (Met) at the brewery, alive and well, although annoyed about his bowler hat. They were considered sacred objects of class distinction, and those who thought they deserved them, placed a lot of merit on brushing them daily.

Mac knew Winston Churchill slightly and phoned him from the brewery at 9.02 am (2 January 1911). A manservant answered, "I am afraid Mr Churchill is still in his bath."

Winston Churchill (36) was the Home Secretary at the time and so was in charge of the army. He was also an alcoholic and a brooding manic-depressive who liked to be pampered. Like the Boy Scout's Baden-Powell, he painted himself as a hero in whatever medium took his fancy.

Churchill would normally stay in his bath until 2 pm or longer, smoking cigars and sipping a combination of brandy and Champagne while he sang Clementine and his attendants kept the water at just the right temperature. He wrote his best speeches here. After getting out of the bath at 2 pm, he supposedly ran the Army, wrote history and painted. The first point of PR in those days was to be a renaissance man. The second point was to appear calm in all situations.

Winston Churchill actually employed 17 consultants to write his histories for him. Winston had contracted history out and consequently they all agreed to have it published under his name.[12]

At 9.05 am (something of a record) Winston Churchill answered, "I hope the urgency justifies my getting out of my bath wrapped in a towel like a Roman emperor . . . Tell me what you want."

Melville Macnaghten (Scotland Yard CID/Met) said: "I want enough troops, armed with modern weapons to arrest and kill these men." Churchill agreed to an order for a detachment of twenty Scots Guards.

Melville Macnaghten sent Superintendent Mulvaney (Met) down to the Tower of London. As requested, twenty Scots Guards plus Lieutenant Ross and two NCOs (Non-Commissioned Officers) came back with him. The Scots Guards arrived at 11 am carrying SMLE rifles (Small Magazine Lee-Enfield Mark III, No. 1 rifles).

Four Scots Guards replaced the three ineffective police marksmen in Cohen's bedroom across the street. Three Scots Guards went around to the backyard of 100 Sidney Street, climbed on the wood van, up the ladder and over the fences and shot at the back windows. Three Scots Guards went to the top-floor bottling storeroom of the brewery, two floors below the top floor of 100 Sidney Street.

Four more Scots Guards placed themselves on the roof of the Rising Sun pub at the end of the street. They began firing, but from that distance and angle all they could do was hit the building and scare the occupants. It was rare that they would even hit the windows.

The remaining Scots Guards pushed past spectators and lay on the street 40 metres from the house, three each side. They lay on newspaper poster hoardings, tilted their checked caps back and began firing with Lee-Enfield rifles. The angle was ridiculously acute, such that it was impossible to hit an Anarchist unless they were in the upper far corner of their window waving a red flag or lighting a cigarette.

On the street, the Scots Guards were exposed and an easy target. Yet, instead of half of the Scots Guards being killed, only one got a flesh wound on his thigh and another was shot in the arm. This was shoot-for-show amongst complicit parties and even Hitler called the Scots Guards the 'Cold Stream Guards'.

Stalin's men had been instructed to issue a lot of firepower but not to kill any police officers, Scots Guards, or anyone in a bowler hat. The Anarchists were crack shots. With their Mausers they could shoot a can downhill from the hip. They were also trained to kill in order to survive. With Sergeant Leeson it was all too easy. He was the first shot, it set off the siege and they just couldn't resist.

Two of the Scots Guards realised how vulnerable they were and took cover in a wineshop doorway on the same side as 100 Sidney Street. Here their angle was even worse. They were safe from attack but more likely to be hit by friendly fire.

Three Scots Guards in the top-floor storeroom of the brewery started firing. Despite the fact that they had horizontal wooden slats over the window cavities to contend with, Pat Quinn arrived excited about their position.

In order to avoid getting hit, all the Anarchists had to do was stay away from the windows and move from side to side and floor to floor with spurts of shots so the Scots Guards could not get a clear stationary shot. Like the police, the Scots Guards were next to useless. Like the police, they were an easy target on the street, yet only two suffered minor injuries.

Macnaghten (Scotland Yard CID/Met) had moved some 50 metres down the road to the Lindley Street cordon and was standing beside Special Branch Superintendent Pat Quinn when Quinn was hit by a ricocheted bullet that lodged in the cuff of his trousers. It only grazed his ankle but it still showed the power of the bullets.

Macnaghten (Scotland Yard CID/Met) later wrote: "There was a certain amount of poetic justice involved. If Quinn had passed on the information he received, we might have caught the whole gang, or most of them, at Houndsditch . . . and who could tell whether it was one of our bullets, or one of theirs."

Met and CoLP bullets did not have enough power to ricochet, so it was either an Anarchist's or Scots Guard's bullet.

Mac helped Special Branch Superintendent Patrick Quinn to the first-aid station at 11 am where Detective Inspector Wensley (Met) was arguing with 13 Met Police holding shotguns. Macnaghten (Scotland Yard CID/Met) asked the group what the trouble was. Constable Harris (Met): "We've got a small supply of weapons from a gunsmith, sir, and they've been given to men who are used to handling them."

Espavo Sozo - treasurer@platinumparty.org -

Constable Harris (Met) could get effective weapons when Superintendent Ottoway (CoLP) could not.

Detective Inspector Wensley (Met): "They want to rush the house. I've told them it's a no go." Wensley's face was red with anger and some of the marksmen were equally furious. The Met marksmen were out for revenge and Wensley wanted to keep the death toll to a minimum.

It's interesting that the Met were out for revenge when it was three City of London Police who were killed at Houndsditch.

Constable Harris (Met): "They're doing no better than we were. Why not let us go back there, now we've got these? Then whyn't they [Scots Guards] give us covering fire while we make a dash along the side of the street? If those Anarchists have to shoot us, they'll need to show themselves. We don't mind taking a chance, do we, boys? Now Sergeant Leeson's copped it, we want to get at them, that we do."

It was now mid-morning, drizzling rain, a biting wind, and the snow was slushy underfoot.

Macnaghten (CID/Met) and Wensley (Met) watched as Constable Harris (Met) armed with a shotgun and tacit, but undeclared, approval pushed his way through the police cordon followed by another couple of armed men. Constable Harris ran alongside 100 Sidney Street. The Scots Guards on the street, at the Rising Sun pub, and in Cohen's house held fire. Women opened their windows and cheered them on, as did the crowd. This was enough to alert the Anarchists that something new was happening out front.

Detective Inspector Wensley said to Scotland Yard's Macnaghten: "Never known the police so popular in this area."

The Scots Guards did not provide any cover fire as Constable Harris (Met) kicked the door open wider. He rushed inside and hit his head on a loose balk of timber protruding from the ceiling, fired a shot, and reappeared at the doorway swaying, took half a dozen steps across the street and fell down. The Scots Guards started firing again. Harris didn't move. It was presumed he was shot and possibly dead.

Espavo Sozo - treasurer@platinumparty.org - 7 March 2013

Two policemen zigzagged across the road, grabbed Harris and took him back to the woodyard. Mac thought Harris was a brave man, though a foolish one.

Constable Harris (Met) had done what he was supposed to do. He had armed a select group of Met-men with more powerful weapons than the police or army could procure, and made certain that they would not be used against the Anarchists. These shotguns would also ensure that they gained first inspection entry into the neighbouring houses when the siege was over. They were the Met's 'keen but none-too-bright' and would look for Anarchists rather than evidence of entry and exit. It was well planned and well rehearsed.

At the same time (12.30 am), Churchill arrived, cigar in mouth, 3½ hours after he was alerted. There was sporadic gunfire and in his affidavit he wrote: "My inclination has always been to march towards the sound of gunfire . . . The most recent information we could gather was from a newspaper bought in the street. A new edition was being brought out every hour and then was sold as fast as the newsboys could hand them out. The paper said that Detective Inspector Wensley had been killed and that three other policemen were believed to have been shot. That was decisive. I had myself driven down to the East End and to Sidney Street, immediately [3½ hrs]."

After the call, Churchill got dressed and went to the Home Office. "There I found remarkably little further information awaiting me. Some Anarchists were shut up in a house in the East End. Nobody knew how many were inside, but they were said to be firing in all directions."

Churchill stood next to Scotland Yard's CID Macnaghten: "What's been happening?"

Upon seeing Detective Inspector Wensley alive, Churchill said: "I am glad the rumours of your death, like the rumours of my own in the South African War, had been much exaggerated." The third point of PR in those days was to appear immortal during battle and after it. These were times when fantasists were gifted power and reality was something future historians had to work out.

As Churchill made his way through the crowd, it was as if the whole East End had gathered in Whitechapel. A women yelled "Oo let 'em in", referring to Churchill and his Liberal government's refusal to limit alien immigration. It was a very funny moment in East End history.

Churchill organised two uniformed constables plus D.I. Wensley, who volunteered, and they walked alongside 100 Sidney Street to the front door with Churchill leading. The crowd cheered thinking that Churchill was going to storm the house. It was a PR move that gathered no further information other than to sight the piece of wood Harris had knocked himself out on (Churchill's idea in the first place?). Churchill then suggested to Wensley to storm the front door, storm the back door and drop in through the roof simultaneously: "Damn it man, there are only two of them."

Churchill's report: "At that moment a bullet ricocheted off the roadway and struck the wall a foot away from where we were standing."

At 12.45 am Churchill retired to the Mann & Crossman brewery office and sat around the table with Wensley, Mac, Ottoway and Quinn drinking whiskey and making plans. Since Churchill was the highest-ranking person on site all decision-making was deferred to him. He asked for a steel foundry and Superintendent Ottoway (CoLP) said there were several within a mile or two. Churchill requested half a dozen old-fashioned shields to storm the house, each shield giving protection for two men. If there were no shields then any curved metal plates would do.

Mac queried that any foundry would have such shields in stock. Wensley thought their men would still get shot from above. Ottoway said: "That doorway's narrow. If the plates are too wide, they'd never get in." Regardless, Superintendent Ottoway (CoLP) went off to get the protective shields, effectively standing the police down. This was the same Superintendent Ottoway who supplied the toothless Morris-tube rifles at 1 am and again at 8.30 am.

A detective came in and reported that Constable Harris (Met) was not seriously hurt. Churchill lit his second cigar for the day and remained at the table with the others drinking whiskey. It was 1 pm when another constable came in and said: "The house, sir, the house is on fire."

Churchill, Mac, Quinn, Mulvaney and Wensley left the brewery office and went out for a look. Smoke was coming out the back attic window as the firing continued from the front of the house. Mulvaney put a call through to the fire brigade and the East Enders yelled: "Watch the rats come out now, watch 'em come out . . . they're going to be burnt alive . . . anyone fancy roast pork for dinner? . . . best way to . . . kill all that scum."

Scotland Yard Chief CID Constable Melville Macnaghten: "A postman in a red and blue uniform, sack on back, somehow managed to get through the police cordon, walked along to 104 Sidney Street, pushed some letters into the box, and returned the way he had come, apparently unaware of what was going on around him. The crowd gave him a roaring cheer."

When the Keystone Cops made their movies they were parodying early Intelligence work. In turn, WWI soldiers would parody Fred Karno's army song with: "We are Fred Karno's Army, we are his fusiliers. We fuck up everything we touch, and nearly everything else besides."[13]

The red and blue postman added to the historical hilarity of the situation and made a mockery of police posturing. The police were under strict orders not to let anyone through. The postie put mail in 104 Sidney Street and at no other address. The mail contained a brief report of the situation and was a signal to the other Anarchists inside 104 to begin the evacuation of 100 Sidney Street in earnest.

Siege of Sidney Street 1911

After talking to some police officers Mac suggested it would be pointless to rush the house now. The wind had died down and Wensley suggested to Churchill: "I shouldn't be surprised if they lit the fire themselves. We'll need to watch out they don't make a break for it."

Macnaghten (Scotland Yard CID/Met): "The smoke became thicker and gathered like a thundercloud around the top floor of the house . . . mixed in the cloud were thousands of bits of paper" – indicating that everything combustible had been placed in preparation for the fire and that the fire had been purposely lit. The attic room was often used for storage. Paper was also used as insulation between floors and some of the floorboards had been removed to create a firebreak and to add to the fire.

The soldiers increased their firepower front and back. The Anarchists moved to the floor below and began firing almost continuously. The noise was such that small amounts of gun cotton and a sledgehammer could be used without raising further alarm.

The firemen arrived at Lindley Street and started to unwind their hoses. Churchill spoke to Chief Fireman Davis and stood them down.

[13] Fred Karno was Charlie Chaplin's teacher and early employer.

Churchill stood the firemen down. This gave the Anarchists cover and an escape route.

The Russian immigrants at 98 (under Mrs Rubenoff) and 102 Sidney Street (under Mrs Bluestein) were then evacuated, which cleared the path for those at 104. A stream of women and small children came out. Some men followed carrying a few belongings, among them family pictures and Russian icons. One of the last Russian men to come out from 98 Sidney Street went up to Detective Inspector Wensley and said: “My fern cheer, Mr Vensel, what happen if my fern cheer burned?” This was to ensure that the firemen went to 98 before 102.

Macnaghten (Scotland Yard CID/Met): “I looked at my watch and saw almost unbelievingly that the time was one-thirty. I was reminded I had not eaten since early that morning. Many of the police, of course, had last eaten at some time on the previous night, and if I was hungry, they must be ravenous.”

There was a gasp from the East End crowd: “There ’e is.” On the third floor it seemed as if a man crawled outside the house onto the ledge and back in again, but it was just a curtain entertaining the excitable crowd. Then a single tongue of flame emerged out of the front top fourth-floor window. Then there was more firing from the third-floor windows front and back.

Espavo Sozo - treasurer@platinumparty.org -7 March 2013

Macnaghten (Scotland Yard CID/Met) thought: “The numbers of men inside had suddenly been augmented and that, with the evacuation of the inhabitants from the neighbouring houses, Anarchists had crept up out of the cellars or tunnels to join their friends.” He was right. There was now more firepower at 100 Sidney Street, but they hadn’t come from the cellars as there was no escape from there.

The fire was started right on 1 pm. Just after this the smoke was noticed. The brass went out for a look and at the same time the Betar operative postie delivered a message to 104 Sidney Street (no phones). The Russian neighbours were then removed from 98 and 102 Sidney Street. The last of them (from 98) spoke to Wensley at 1.30 pm to ensure that his house gained first attention from the fire brigade.

There was a lot of cover fire from both sides, creating enough noise to block the sound of two explosions followed by sledgehammers to finish off the holes. On the second explosion, between 102 and 100 Sidney Street, the curtains blew out the window. Two more Anarchists came through the wall and began firing out the front and back of 100 Sidney Street. They were careful not to fire any shots from 102 Sidney Street and to stay low and towards the centre of the building.

Apart from the two new Anarchist marksmen, three others were involved passing buckets of water through the walls from 104 to 102 to the burning 100 Sidney Street. They used the water to wet their clothing and keep the centre of the floor wet, while encouraging smoke and fire near the windows and steam in between.

The second hole, into 100 Sidney Street, was ‘V’ shaped to allow vertical entry and exit and to destabilise the top floor above, the collapse of which covered the hole at initial inspection.

The Anarchists were professional, expertly trained with weapons and explosives and the latest strategies. They took care to be forewarned and to cover their tracks at all stages. Even Betty Gershon erroneously let slip that Koba (Stalin) had left England on 17 December when in fact Koba had been sleeping next-door-but-one at 104 Sidney Street. Koba was now organising their escape. He was the only one with enough balls and kudos to pull it off, the only one with British training, and the only one who knew this was a training exercise.

required for Stalin's escape was provided. This included accommodation for Koba (Stalin) at 104 Sidney Street.

The top of the house was now burning furiously, with flames crowning over the roof. The upper floor was uninhabitable and a thick pall of smoke hung over the second- and third-floor windows. "All firing had stopped" because the Anarchists were busy setting up the scenario that would cover their tracks.

Macnaghten (Scotland Yard CID/Met): "Then a figure appeared at the second-floor window . . . a frightful apparition like something out of a story by Edgar Allan Poe. It seemed for a moment that the figure had red hair, but in fact the hair was wreathed in flame, the face blackened by it. The clothes were also on fire. Yet in its flaming hand the figure held a pistol, and some incoherent shriek of defiance came from its mouth."

Espavo Sozo - treasurer@platinumparty.org -

The question is how could Macnaghten see this from his position and through the smoke? By this time the Anarchists had dampened their clothes and wrapped handkerchiefs around their faces. Two of them held up the John Doe with no legs, the hair set on fire. The gun was held up by another Anarchist behind and they both made the shrieking noises, giving the East End ghost stories for decades to come. "The figure vanished from the window as suddenly as it had appeared."

At the same time, a gagged informant (who had once broken his leg) was brought in from 104, through 102 and into 100 Sidney Street and placed in the smoking stockroom on the third floor. He was then shot twice. He became William Sokoloff's dead body double. When the floors collapsed, this John Doe fell into what was the ground-floor back bedroom of Mr and Mrs Clements. in his nineties and deaf and had been pulled out of that bedroom eight hours earlier kicking and screaming.

Macnaghten (Scotland Yard CID/Met): "The sound of two more pistol shots were then heard from inside the house. Some of our men fired another volley in response, although there was now no figure to be seen, and they were firing into smoke."

The three Anarchists threw accelerants on the fire then escaped through the holes between 100 and 104 Sidney Street. The house then collapsed floor by floor from the top down, not unlike the Twin Towers. All firing had stopped and there was no sound to be heard except the crackling flames.

Macnaghten (Scotland Yard CID/Met): "Blazing timbers were flung into the street, masses of masonry crashed down, fiery splinters like shooting stars were hurtled 100 yards or more. Broken glass fell upon the pavement . . . iron girders stuck up out of the collapsed building like great naked ribs . . . [and there was] a terrific artillery of shots [from the police and Scots Guards]."

The soldiers and police had begun firing in useless triumph, making sure that any abandoned hostages were either shot or cooked.

After the Anarchists' escape, the waist-height hole at 102/104 Sidney Street was covered with a standing wardrobe – 'fern cheer' – and was repaired by the Anarchists that evening, while the occupants stayed elsewhere under police instructions. The collapsing floor had covered the hole between 100/102 Sidney Street.

Sir Melville Macnaghten: "Detective Sergeant Sonny Jacobson [Jewish] who had evacuated 100 Sidney Street earlier, approached the house with his double-barrelled shotgun. He had been instrumental earlier in getting the house evacuated – began to walk towards the house, holding a double-barrelled shotgun. He was followed by a dozen others [Met men], all of them with their guns out. They came up to the empty houses on either side and went into them, in order to make sure that the men had not broken through the walls."

Detective Sergeant Sonny Jacobson then kicked the door in at 100 Sidney Street and signalled for the firemen to come. Within minutes the firemen were inside the building. Soon after, there were shouts of warning as the middle section of the top floor collapsed on five of the firemen.

Constable Harris' dozen keen but none-too-bright shotgun-toting Met men (without the knocked-out Constable Harris) had searched 98 and 102 Sidney Street and found no Anarchists, nor any evidence of entry or exit. The hole at 100/102 could be clearly seen, although there was a floor hanging over it on the 100 side and the fire had removed any evidence of the gun-cotton blast.

Detective Inspector Wensley (Met), Chief Constable Melville Macnaghten (Scotland Yard/Met), Special Branch Superintendent Pat Quinn and Home Secretary Winston Churchill approached the house. Chief Fireman Davis ran out demanding stretchers, saw Churchill and said: "I've got men buried in there. If I'd been let free to work when we got here, this wouldn't have happened."[14]

Macnaghten (Scotland Yard CID/Met): "Inside the house was a shell, yet some fragments of it remained. If you looked up, you could see the sky, but you saw also sections of the upper floor leaning perilously inward. Above us a small table still stood, with ammunition on it, upon a part of the floor which looked as though you could walk on it. Beside the ammunition was a glass of water.

"The flames were all out, but smoke hung thickly, and we put handkerchiefs over our noses and eyes . . . Part of the sidewall had collapsed and had brought a section of the upper floor down with it. Five firemen lay there, half buried in the rubble. Two had been struck by a falling beam."

The Anarchists wet the floor in the middle, ripped up the floorboards either side so the fire wouldn't spread, and burnt off the outside of the floor. This floor collapsed where the sidewall had been blown out. Jewish coups always involve traps for the rescue staff.

Espavo S020 - treasurer@platinumparty.org -7 March 2013

Chief Fireman Davis said to Churchill: "I wouldn't stay if you don't have to. Another wall may come down." Churchill replied: "I understand your feelings, but if you'd gone in when you wanted to, these men would have been shot, not injured. Hallo there, what's this?"

Churchill spotted the first body. It was a headless torso by the fireplace in a sitting position. The head had apparently been burned away in the fire and all that remained was the torso and the arms. "A little digging in the middle of the room . . . revealed the legs separated from the body, and apart from these, a fragment of the brainpan and a skull cap."

Macnaghten (Scotland Yard CID/Met): "Another body was found in the back room, unrecognisable and looked as if it had been shot . . . further digging by the firemen revealed a pistol. Churchill picked it up, weighed it in his hand and said, 'A Mauser . . . better than anything we've got. We must do something about that'." This was part of Churchill's plan to arm the police before WWI broke out.

Macnaghten then stumbled out of the door across the road, removed his handkerchief and had a nip from his hipflask. Churchill came out twenty minutes later and also had a nip. "An excellent malt . . . two bodies were found, unrecognisable of course . . . I wanted to be sure none of them got away."

Forty or fifty of the public then began to clap in a loud chorus. Churchill said to Mac: "History will remember the siege of Sidney Street." The public has remembered Sidney Street, but for all the wrong reasons and for none of the right conclusions. It has been remembered for its violence and its unsolved mysteries.

The next day (Tuesday, 3 January 1911) Churchill sent a memorandum to the head of the Met's H Division, Divisional Superintendent Mulvaney, saying the Metropolitan Police must be provided with "the best pattern of automatic pistols at present procurable" and that "this should be put in hand immediately".

Sergeant Arthur Bryant, who was twice shot in the Houndsditch robbery, had said: "We'd have been happy to shoot them, but we had no weapons."

A few weeks later, Home Secretary Winston Churchill and Scotland Yard's Melville Macnaghten tested dozens of pistols and revolvers. They selected the British-made Webley-Scott .32 automatic pistol (7.62 mm bullets) and the British police force was now armed in preparation for WWI. It was not a good choice, but it was a patriotic choice. Churchill's family had a huge financial interest in Webley-Scott.

A week after the siege (Monday, 9 January 1911), the Commissioner held a conference in Scotland Yard. He was the head of the Metropolitan Police of which the CID was only a part. Present were Chief Constable of Scotland Yard's Criminal Investigation Department Melville Macnaghten, Special Branch Superintendent Patrick Quinn, Divisional [14] Hermann Goering learnt from this. In 1933 he stopped the firemen putting out the Reichstag fire. Both were publicity stunts to go to arms.

Superintendent Mulvaney, Metropolitan Detective Inspector Frederick Porter Wensley and City of London Police Superintendent Ottoway. It was the full brass.[15] The Commissioner pointed out the international newspapers. "A Thousand Police versus Two Rebels", "Tragicomedy as British Authorities Muddle Through", "The Army Called Out to Deal with Anarchists". He asked if anyone would like to comment.

In fact, the real situation was much more tragic than the newspapers had portrayed. Not only had the Anarchists got away but the true damage from the thwarted Houndsditch robbery and Sidney Street Siege was much greater than the newspapers alluded to. What's worse is that the police had placed themselves in ridiculous and dangerous situations en masse (two hundred) with no situation control or foreseeable conclusion other than to starve them out. Tanks were not yet invented.[16]

At Houndsditch, Sergeant Charles 'Daddy' Tucker was killed outright. Constable Walter Charles Choat had been shot eight times and died in hospital. Sergeant Robert (Bob) Bentley was shot in the shoulder and the neck and his spinal cord was severed. He died in hospital the following morning. Constable Ernie Woodhams was permanently crippled by the shot that shattered his lungs. Sergeant Arthur Bryant was shot and the bullet remained in his chest. He could no longer perform active duties.The Jewish neighbourhood clubbed together and bought him a gold watch.

At Sidney Street, Sergeant Ben Leeson was shot through both nipples yet survived. One constable was wounded. One Scots Guard suffered a flesh wound in the thigh and another to the arm. Dr Johnstone was shot but the bullet only grazed his forehead. Special Branch Superintendent Patrick Quinn was nicked by a ricocheted bullet. Detective Inspector Wensley was hit by fragments of a roof tile from gunfire and his bowler hat was shot as it fell. Another officer's helmet had been hit. Sergeant Hallam's helmet had taken a bullet rendering him temporarily deaf, and Constable Harris had rushed 100 Sidney Street and knocked himself unconscious on a piece of wood.

Scotland Yard CID Macnaghten: "Several civilians were hurt, but they knew the risk they took being there."

[15] Like Ottoway, those with Christian names never mentioned were less popular.

[16] Tanks were invented by the British and made their first public appearance in 1916. They were first used in 1917 at Cambrai during WWI.

A cat had been killed and the Russian Betar dressed as a British postie had walked through the "tight police cordon" and delivered mail directly to Koba (Stalin). After the siege was over, five firemen were buried in the collapsing rubble.

Two dead bodies were found in the house. One was dead when it was brought into the house and the other, an informant, was killed in the last moments of the siege and then bombarded by police bullets, ensuring that if he was still alive, he had no hope of escaping the flames and bullets.

Koba (Stalin) and at least four other Anarchists had broken through two walls and assisted Joseph (William Sokoloff) and Fritz Svaars while the house was under siege from one hundred City of London Police, one hundred Metropolitan Police and twenty Scots Guards, with the Home Secretary and all the top brass standing by, guiding and watching.

> Not only was this a monumental cock-up, it was the biggest police/military cock-up in Britain's history – so much so that it was an inside job. Britain takes a lot of pride in being the coloniser, and to be had in such a way – well, the embarrassment was such that there has been a complete cover-up of the Sidney Street Siege ever since. The only information that has ever surfaced on Sidney Street is either false, or written in such a way that it cannot be readily deciphered into clarity . . . Nevertheless, the British covered up their follies with the usual array of promotions and knighthoods to the service of ignorance.

From Houndsditch, Constable Ernie Woodhams was promoted to sergeant and Sergeant Arthur Bryant was promoted to sub-inspector. The two plain-clothed constables (Churchill's spies) were never mentioned.

From Sidney Street, Detective Inspector Frederick Wensley (Met) was promoted to Chief Constable of the CID, equal to Macnaghten. In 1913, Melville Macnaghten was elevated from Chief Constable of Scotland Yard's CID to Sir Melville Macnaghten and then retired.

Winston Churchill took a lot of flak from the House of Commons for taking part in the siege and Prime Minister Arthur Balfour accused Churchill of acting improperly, but Balfour was also Jewish and in on the scam. Balfour was also close friends with the First Baron 'Natty' Rothschild (d. 1915) and the Second Baron 'Walter' Rothschild (the homosexual eccentric), with whom he played a major role in the creation of Israel five years later.[17] Since the Jews had been centred around the Black Sea (since the 1500s) and Stalin was an illegitimate Rothschild from Georgia, the whole thing was a training exercise for Stalin's Jewish takeover of Russia – the 1917 October Revolution.

Churchill, an illegitimate Rothschild (by his biological father), used the siege to foster his image. In the eyes of the public he remained a renaissance man, calm in all situations and immortal during battle and after it.

Churchill used the Houndsditch and Sidney Street cock-ups to arm the police, keeping them very 'mumsy' about the whole affair through promotions. The more sincere the police are, regardless of whether they succeed or stuff things up, the more they're promoted. Sincere collusion and failure is the fastest way to promotion in the force, and mutual promotion was the preferred method of covering up the affair.

'Oo, they must 'ave dun well.' It would have been better to give the Anarchists a bus ticket out of London.

At the same Monday conference the Commissioner said: "We have killed only two of the conspirators . . . there is no proof of their identity . . . and the rest of the murderous gang are still at large."

Special Branch Superintendent Patrick Quinn: "The identification. These men were Fritz Svaars and Joseph [William Sokoloff]. Joseph had a limp and one of the bodies found had been shot and was certainly the man who appeared for a moment at the window."

This was a Churchill-instigated comment designed to confuse the identities of the bodies. It was the John Doe torso for Fritz Svaars that appeared in the window and the John Doe for William Sokoloff that was twice shot.

Pat Quinn had two pieces of evidence that the body found twice-shot in the ground-floor back bedroom was that of the limping William Sokoloff (Joseph). The first was an old thigh fracture found on the body. The second was Detective Inspector Wensley's interview via the Yiddish-speaking Detective Sergeant Sonny Jacobson when he spoke with Betty Gershon. This interview was then passed to Chief CID Constable Melville Macnaghten, who then told Special Branch Superintendent Patrick Quinn, who then told the Commissioner for Scotland Yard. It was a veritable Chinese whisper of calculated misleads involving the well-timed story changes of Betty Gershon.

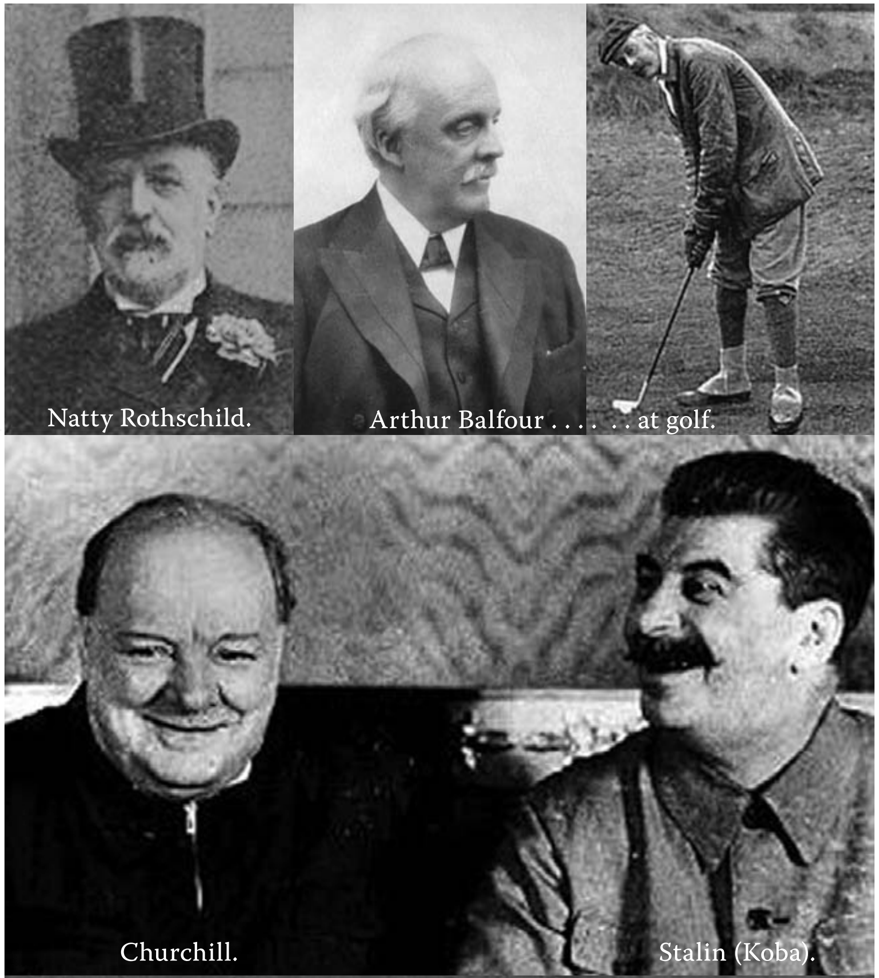
[17] Prime Minister Arthur Balfour confirmed the Rothschilds' desire for a State of Israel in his Balfour Agreement on 2 November 1917.

Betty Gershon, William Sokoloff's cousin and lover, said that William Sokoloff wasn't there, then that he was in her bedroom alone, then that he was with another man, then that that man was always called 'my pal', except on one occasion when he let slip and called him 'Fritz Svaars', and then that they had been there for a couple of days. Betty Gershon had also stated that Koba (Stalin) had left the country, when he plainly hadn't. Betty Gershon never knew Fritz Svaars beforehand and couldn't positively identify him as Fritz Svaars, alive or dead.



First Baron 'Natty' Rothschild was close friends with Prime Minister Arthur Balfour, encouraging him to play golf, so Churchill and Stalin, both illegitimate Rothschilds, could have a laugh about their successful training exercise. All worked together on the destruction of Russia with a Jewish Communist takeover, and creation of the state of Israel.

Betty Gershon was somewhere between Luba Milstein and Nina Vassilleva in the intelligence stakes. Nina was attractive and intelligent. Luba was dull and plodding. Betty Gershon was tall and thin with peering eyes and looked like an ostrich. She didn't speak English, was a Russian immigrant who spoke Yiddish, and was strange-looking enough to be unemployed, desperate for money and in need of friends. She hadn't managed to branch out and was desperate enough to sleep with her cousin without cashing him in for the £167 reward.

Nevertheless, William Sokoloff was staying on the third floor of 100 Sidney Street, but the body found was not his. It was a body planted by the cunning and conniving British-trained Koba, who had the confidence to treat Sidney Street as a training exercise for the Russian Revolution – which indeed it was.

Special Branch Superintendent Patrick Quinn: "Fritz couldn't be identified as the body was too badly burnt, but the torso was the right size for a short man."

This is further confusion supplied by Churchill via his mouthpiece Patrick Quinn. Fritz was 1.75 metres (5'9") and couldn't be classified as short, especially when the average male height then was 1.68 metres (5'6").

treasurer@platinumparty.org -7 Mar

The torso of Fritz Svaars was left on the floor near the third floor window with its head set on fire. The skull cap had already been removed and accelerant was poured inside the skull. This is why the head burnt off.

When the building burnt down, the torso fell through two floors against the wall of the ground floor. That it was leaning against a wall is either a fluke or an incorrect statement. Either way, in a fire, it is rare for a live body to sit against a wall when all is burning. One tends to lie face down in the middle of the room.

The legs fell into the middle of the room from where they had been dropped and they fell separate from the body. There were no allegations that the body had been shot or died from asphyxiation.

If the body was alive before the fire then the only way the legs could have separated was from a beam falling from a great height, missing all the other beams on the way down, and landing perfectly horizontally directly over the tops of the legs, 0.3 metres (one foot) out from the wall.

The chance of this happening makes the experts look stupid. A falling beam hit two firemen after the siege but their legs never came off and in the list of casualties there are no reports that any legs were broken. Certainly people went missing in that area all the time, and the testy relationship between the Metropolitan Police and the City of London Police meant that many of these murders were effectively treated as part of East End culture.

Misinformation was always on the breakfast menu for the City of London Police and the Met. Interrogations were regularly sabotaged by each other's department, and both departments had spies giving the other police department false information.

It was normal then, as now, for the City of London Police and the Met to sabotage each other's cases through misinformation, running informant gangs in each other's territory, providing erroneous leads, conflicting affidavits, and sabotaging arms. This was partly an attempt to improve their respective reputations but it resulted in the denigration of both police departments. As a result, it was a liar's paradise.

The immigrant gangs thought the British police were a joke, and got away with murder every second night. Spymaster: "The same conflict happens with the police and security intelligence services today."

Special Branch Superintendent Patrick Quinn had his own agenda and the information he gathered was not routinely disseminated to the police. The Irishman Pat Quinn worked for Home Secretary Winston Churchill, and Churchill, trained in the Military Psych-Ops war school of Tavistock, was running a live training programme in London for the equally trained Stalin.

> There was an agreement between Stalin and Churchill to create a scenario where Stalin would be tested and the police would be required to be armed. If this had not occurred, the police would not have been armed in preparation for WWI, something Churchill also had his hand in.

It should be remembered at this point that Stalin had already completed three contract killings on behalf of the British Government. As such, he and his gang were protected and it would have been most embarrassing to bring him to trial. As a result:

1. Whoever was with Stalin was protected.
2. None of the Anarchists were killed by British hands.
3. Those who were captured were set free by the British courts due to lack of evidence and a mistrial by the judge.

The Sidney Street Siege and escape was a canned meat operation. A torso and two separate legs were brought in from 104 Sidney Street to simulate the body of the 1.75 metre (5'9") Fritz Svaars, and an informant who had once broken his leg. The later was brought in alive and then shot twice to simulate a dead version of the limping William Sokoloff.

Faking Fritz Svaars' death meant that the police stopped chasing him for the murder of Sergeant Robert Bentley, the near mortal wounding of Sergeant Arthur Bryant, and shooting Constable Charley Choat seven times (but not the first shot).

Similarly, Jacob Peters shot George Gardstein under Koba's (Stalins) orders, who was in turned ordered by Churchill. This allowed the mission to succeed and the British to feel like they'd got one.

William Sokoloff (Joseph) and Fritz Svaars escaped out of 100 Sidney Street with Koba (Stalin) and four other Anarchists in support. They lay low at 104 Sidney Street until the night of the 4/5 January 1911 and then escaped by boat and were in France by 8 January 1911. Peter Piatkow was located in Paris on 9 January 1911, a week after the siege.

> This situation was unprecedented in police history. Stalin had organised the two most violent events the British police had ever dealt with – something he could only do because he was trained and supported by the British higher up (Churchill and his half-brother King George V).
> After this there was a strong move to ban all further immigration into Britain and an equally strong movement to arm the police.
> The immigration rules remained slack until WWI broke out. This was long enough for Hitler to enter the country 13 months later, arriving in February 1912 and leaving in May 1913. For identification, Hitler used a birth certificate showing him to be his brother, Edmund Hitler, who was five years younger and had been dead for fifteen years. Hitler then began his Tavistock training in the same place Stalin was trained two years earlier.
> In 1910, and in the surrounding years, no aliens were refused entry into England. The British Government simply refused to place any limit on the entry of aliens into England, nor the amount of arms they brought into the country.

Espavo Sozo - treasurer@platinumparty.org -7 March 2013

Jacob Peters, Nina Vassilleva, Luba Milstein, Max, Ivan Lebeder and another female Anarchist were put on trial. The police, as witnesses, could not identify the bank robbers positively (Churchill's Home Office influence) despite having been given photos by the double agent Nina (via her landlord Isaac Gordon), and most of the East Enders were too afraid to come forward.

The unintelligent and unattractive Luba Milstein had given herself up and was quickly discharged as merely being a tool for Fritz Svaars. Max, Ivan Lebeder and another Anarchist were not at the Exchange Buildings when the robbery took place and they were dismissed as well. The prosecution could never prove Jacob Peters shot Constable Walter Charles Choat and he was dismissed. Within a week of his acquittal, he left England.

Nina Vassilleva (Lina, Minna Gristis) was present at the Houndsditch robbery but had not fired a pistol. She was tried and convicted and received a two-year sentence for breaking and entering. However, "during the trial Judge Mr Justice Grantham intervened saying, 'Well of course we all know who the murderers were. It was Gardstein, Fritz Svaars and Joseph' [William Sokoloff]".

"Judge Mr Justice Grantham described all those who were [written off as] dead and immediately kicked the mainstay out of the prosecution's case. Nina Vassilleva was convicted for two years and appealed five weeks later, citing that the judge had misdirected the jury. The case was then thrown out. This meant that no one went to prison for the Houndsditch murders of three police officers?"[18]

Rather than return to Russia where Nina may have been found out by the Betar or killed by the Russian secret police, she stayed in England and wrote a memoir which forms part of this account.

Only George Gardstein (Mr Morin/Mourrewitz/Mr Poolka Milowitz) was dead and he was killed by his own man, Jacob Peters. George Gardstein and Jacob Peters were equally close to Stalin, and Gardstein was killed by the revolutionary Jacob Peters as the quickest method of self-promotion. It worked. After the 1917 agenda-driven Revolution, Jacob Peters became the Deputy Chairman of the Cheka until he was killed in the Russian purges of the 1930s when Stalin emerged as ruling dictator without peer.

> The whole thing was a purposeful police and judicial bungle that showed insider training and insider trading.

The Russian agenda-driven Revolution took place on 27 October 1917 and the Russian-born Tavistock/Freemason/British agents then sent a memo to Tavistock/British Royal Family/Switzerland, who sent back a reply congratulating them and told them to change their clocks. This did not occur after the splintered 1905 revolution, but after the bloody 1917 agenda-driven revolution where 82% of the new revolutionary Commissars were Jews. Russia then changed from the Julian Calendar to the Gregorian Calendar 110 days later on 14 February 1918. This meant that the 27 October counter-Revolution is now celebrated as the Red October Revolution on 7 November 1917.

> This is classic Golden Dawn Effective coven as '110' translates as "from here mastery begins". The date change was used to provide desired confusion for all who read history.
> The British police, army and courts had no effect on the well-trained, well-armed Russian Betar revolutionaries. Churchill knew from this that Stalin had taken on board his British training and would succeed in his Bolshevik Revolution. This allowed Churchill to make plans for the safe removal of Tsar Nicholas II and his Russian Royal Family. Officially they were shot at Yekaterinburg in 1918 by Stalin's Red Guards. In reality they were swished out to Eire in Ireland by Lieutenant Colonel Meintzerhagen, later promoted to head of MI-5.
> The British Royal Family was related to the Russian Royal Families and they were hardly going to have them killed, more so since Stalin was their British agent.
> The ties between Britain and Russia, and Britain and Germany, were so strong at the time that the Russians were referred to as 'uncles' and the Germans were known as 'cousins'. The British Royal Family used their 'cousins' in Germany to remove their 'uncles' in Russia to relative safety, anonymity, and out of the history books. This was one of the goals of the British monarchy's instigated and assisted Russian Revolution.
> In this way, after several British Freemasonry-run revolutions and wars, the British Royal Family is the only surviving Royal Family of the three competing countries. Great Britain remained the richest country, with the highest percentage of males – so much so that they had to export them. Pity.

> The British Royal Family is the only Royal Family with their faces continually pasted over magazine covers and it is the only Royal Family where the same style of murders and intrigue continue.
> The male head of the British Royal Family is also the head of the Freemasons – the Grand Pooh-Bar. The British Royal Family and Freemasons have a history, but it is not the history we normally read. The history we read is the one that is written under their instruction and it is bunkum.

Special Branch Superintendent Pat Quinn: "A subtle, resourceful, intelligent man. I should have liked the chance of interrogating Koba." Home Secretary Winston Churchill could have arranged it but it would have been the last interview Pat Quinn ever conducted.

Stalin never slept for more than thirty minutes at a time. In Tavistock he was given the secret to a very deep sleep which he took to readily. This allowed him to achieve a tremendous amount in many different countries. If Stalin required eight hours' sleep, the Bolshevik Revolution may never have happened.

Just prior to WWI, Stalin bungled a bank robbery in Odessa, Russia. The police locked the doors to the bank and trapped him inside with his hostages. Stalin reacted by shooting everyone in the bank. When he ran out of bullets he battered the people to death with his revolver. When his revolver became so covered in blood that it slipped out of his hand, he ripped the chemise (petticoat) off a girl and wrapped it around the barrel of his gun and continued.

When a police bullet nicked a gas pipe the bank caught fire and Koba (1879–1953) escaped through the flames out the back. He was as great an escape artist as Harry Houdini (originally Erich Weiss, 1874–1926), both of whom were Freemasonry trained in the gothic (magic) tricks of the Knights Templar, ex-King Solomon's Tomb.

Lenin was told about this in negative, disapproving terms by one of his assistants, but Lenin approved and nicknamed Koba 'Stalin' meaning 'Man of Steel'. It stuck. Dzhugashvili changed his name again, this time from Koba to Joseph V. Stalin. Stalin did a lot of killing first hand, via his secret police and through government policy. He was a psychopathic killing machine with a revolutionary direction that was backed by Britain's war training school and protected by his Rothschild birthright.

Five years after the Sidney Street Siege, the 1917 Russian Revolution took place and the Bolsheviks seized power under Trotsky and Lenin – both of whom were British trained and protected. Jacob Peters and Koba, now Joseph V. Stalin (Prince V, Man of Steel), appeared in a special edition of the Russian revolutionary newspaper, Pravda.

> Jacob Peters had become Deputy Chairman of the Cheka, aka 'Peters, the Terrorist'. Stalin joined the Central Committee Russian Communist Party and simplified his name to Joseph Stalin (Prince of Steel). The man who ruled Russia for 29 years was a convicted criminal, jail breaker, gang leader, murderer, contract killer, international bank robber, British war school graduate, illegitimate Rothschild and all-round psychopath. Stalin's robberies/expropriations, helped fund the Russian Revolution. Stalin was a British agent. He was trained in Britain and given every assistance to succeed in his robberies and murders in every European country he acted. Sidney Street was a Rothschild exercise for their two favourite sons, Stalin and Churchill.

Stalin spoke perfect English (William B. Breuer's Feuding Allies) and learnt this from more than one person, as he understood innuendo. He didn't learn English from travelling around Europe, which spoke predominantly French and German at the time, but from his time in the war schools (Kriegschules) of Britain and Ireland.

Before Stalin, the British used the same format with Trotsky and Lenin, taking both in after they were exiled to Siberia (Trotsky, 1900–02, 1907–11; Lenin 1897–1900). The British harboured Lenin while he founded the revolutionary Bolshevik Party of which Stalin and the Houndsditch/Anarchist gang were major players. The British also trained Adolf Hitler 13 months after the Sidney Street Siege. Churchill and Stalin were to work together again during WWII. Churchill thwarted Germany's attempt at peace on 11 May 1941 then encouraged Germany to attack Russia in Operation BARBAROSSA on 22 June 1941. This pretty much preoccupied Russia for the whole war. Under Stalinism, Russia was becoming a country of dead people.

Spymaster: "Stalin reacted to the German invasion by getting drunk for two weeks. This is what the highly-trained-by-British-Intelligence do. He got paralytically drunk because he thought his life was over and one of his followers would come and murder him. Being invaded by Germany is the equivalent to being fired by British Intelligence. But being a dictator he completely forgot that he had murdered all his opposition, any that could be considered opposition, and there were no opponents of the régime left. When he learnt that Churchill had been making kind references about him in the House of Commons and promising him aid, he decided that perhaps there was hope, and sobered up." The British war school watched as their two pupils, Stalin and Hitler, battled it out.

> As rape and infrastructure colonists, the British ensured that they were the only race that were not exotic. Even as the Empire dwindled and fell, losing the title 'Great British Empire', new plans of colonising on another level were put in place, one that would not register on the world map. The British were in a pattern and they simply couldn't help themselves. They were addicted to power and manipulating world events, no matter the cost. If the British couldn't have a physical empire, they were going to have an invisible empire.

The British have used their military Psych-Ops training schools to take over parts of Europe including Germany and Russia, parts of Africa including Uganda, and all of the Commonwealth countries at some point in time, including Canada and America, whose citizens still pay tax to the UK. The British installed their puppets in destructive regimes, thus continuing their colonialism under someone else's name, but in a more destructive form. The practice of training foreign national dictators is still used by Britain today.

Ugandan Army Sergeant Idi Amin trained in Sandhurst for three years. In order to place him in Uganda, the Queen invited Ugandan President Milton Obote to take tea with her at Buckingham Palace in 1971. At the same time, Idi Amin left Britain for Uganda with a contingent of British Green Berets and terrorised the country for eight years. Idi Amin achieved notoriety by consigning political prisoners to the croc-infested Lake Victoria under the auspices of the State Research Bureau, registered in the Station's Logbook column as "disposition of prisoner". For Idi's services to Britain's 'undeclared war against Marxism in Africa' he won the MC, then the VC. These could not be gazetted or pinned on him by the Queen so the British Ambassador was assigned. Feeling ill at the thought, he gave it to the Military Attaché at the Kampala embassy who did the deed then got horribly tanked (drunk). When the British finally woke up eight years later and realised they had made another international blunder, they assisted Milton Obote to regain control and Obote became Uganda's prime minister again from 1981–85.

Idi 'Big Daddy' Amin then lived in exile in the Saudi Arabian city of Jeddah where he had protective cover as a devout Muslim until his death in 2003. Idi Amin took on the Muslim religion so that, if murdered, the act would be considered a Christian attack against the Muslims with the possibility of an international religious war. As things lay, this was delayed until 2001 when the 9-11 Twin Towers went down in a controlled demolition organised by President George W. Bush.

The British colonies are still prone to this form of colonisation. New Zealand's National Prime Minister Robert Muldoon (1975–84) was also trained in Tavistock, 1945–47. He succeeded in ruining New Zealand's economy and left every New Zealander with an international debt of NZ$20,000. Muldoon (the talking cheek) also sold off all the major government assets and ensured that the bulk of New Zealand was owned offshore and therefore controlled by offshore interests. This was done to ensure New Zealand's social policy would be controlled from offshore. The following government, Labour, continued the practice.

Muldoon.

Bill Sutch exposed the sale of government assets with social policy controlled offshore in his 1972 book Takeover New Zealand. Bill Sutch was then killed on 28 September 1975 and Muldoon became Prime Minister 11 weeks later (12 December 1975) and the killer was knighted soon after, as Sir Randal Elliott, KBE, GCStJ. It was a commissioned hit and is typical of knights, who are elevated for either murder, file theft or paedophilia. Elliott was not a doctor of the pancreas, but he was the highest-ranking military medic in the southern hemisphere.

Espavo Sozo - treasurer@platinumparty.org -7 March 2013

Once in power and working for the British, Muldoon soon established total control by getting all his cabinet ministers to sign their resignations before they took office. A third of his cabinet were paedophiles, the secret of which ensured they would never speak out and would also curb the same tendencies in others. His opposition, Wallace Rowling, was heavily compromised (some say an incestuous paedophile), so he became Ambassador to the US as toady ensuring all secrets were transferred.

There are various forms of dictatorship and not all of them involve death. During Muldoon's tenure, all British responsibility for New Zealand was thwarted and all allegiance withdrawn. After eight years of Muldoonism he handed over a bankrupt nation in July 1984, having already lost its identity and the ownership of its assets. Little did they know, they also had no citizenship.

This was, in part, retribution for New Zealand's Walter Nash and Peter Fraser burning the British flag and stomping all over it in 1923. They were then charged with sedition, but this didn't stop them from both becoming PM. Peter Fraser became the Labour (Russian-aligned) PM from 1940–49 (during which time Muldoon was trained in Tavistock) and Walter Nash was Labour Prime Minister from 1957–60. Because New Zealand had a Russian-aligned Labour PM during all of WWII, New Zealand troops were placed in the worst possible situations and consequently had a very high death toll. To keep this situation under wraps, Kiwis were known for their bravery, when in reality, they were cannon fodder sent to their deaths, but somehow managed to survive. Monte Cassino is a case in point.

Muldoon handed over the government 12 days late on 26 July 1984 because he had contacted the Pentagon and requested they take over New Zealand. During those 12 days the Pentagon Committee voted 4 'for' and 4 'against', with the chairman casting the deciding vote against the American occupation of New Zealand. Muldoon spent this entire time in his office getting drunk, after which he met the Spymaster at the Duck Pond in the Auckland Domain and asked him to plan a coup. This was prevented by his wife, Thea Muldoon, who yelled from the car, "Stop talking to that man. You'll get the both of you into trouble."

There are many more double agent Prime Ministers like this. It is typical in Western nations to have a double agent PM or president every 25 years, but this timeframe has now been reduced to 'nearly always'.

New Zealand's Labour (Russian-aligned) PM Helen Clark took office in November 1999, 24 years after Muldoon. She is the KGB operative 'IE' (pron. 'e'). Through Stalin, the British Tavistock war school psychological training was incorporated into Frunze,[19] Russia and then on to the KGB, with a branch opening on the outskirts of St Petersburg. At the same time, Tavistock opened up in London. Helen Clark was trained in

It contains a major Soviet military pilot training school and trained Hosni Mubarak who has been president of Egypt since Sadat's assassination in 1981. Frunze is a landlocked mountainous area in Central Asia and borders on China, Kazakhstan and Uzbekistan. As Marx once said, "As goes the family, so goes the country". Helen Clark's communist goal is the destruction of the family and the promotion of homosexuals and paedophiles. In support of this, she has a homosexual husband and bisexual PR agent. Her husband Peter Davis is a compulsive child-sex abuser whom she placed under house arrest in February 2004 – for child-sex abuse (not the first or the last time). Helen's PR agent Brian Edwards is a paedophile caught in the act with a 12-year-old schoolgirl in 1981 at 21 Salamanca Road, Kelburn, Wellington, a house he was evicted from, about a month later, for unpaid rent. The schoolgirl was from the Anglican Samuel Marsden Collegiate and was not Brian Edwards' first or last paedophile victim. There have been many.

Helen Clark's much-promoted Minister of Conservation Chris Carter was also outed as a paedophile by the former Minister of Police treasurer@platinumparty.org -7 Marc on 23 March 2006. Helen Clark had made the homosexual child-sex abuser Chris Carter the unofficial Minister of Internal Affairs in order to cover up her own paedophilia (and to rig elections) and that of the homosexual paedophile Jonathan Hunt whom she promoted from Speaker of the House to New Zealand's highest political position, High Commissioner to Britain (April 2005) upon his exposure as a paedophile by US Customs in September 2004 (top on a list of 75 names). To complete the cover-up, the Privy Counsellor (as of 1989) was invested (1 April 2005) with New Zealand's highest order, Member of the Order of New Zealand, restricted to 20 live members … Jonathan Hunt mentored Chris Carter.[20]

The investiture was made by the Governor-General Dame Silvia Cartwright, who was elevated to that position via the process of career twins, by Helen Clark. She was previously Judge Silvia Cartwright, New Zealand's most corrupt judge, with 18 major complaints against her – none of them heard and most of them regarding gender bias. It is most common for fierce feminists to promote paedophiles as this suits their agenda – the destruction of the family in order to access unprotected fatherless children, often for their husbands.

When I was asked on radio when I was going to get into politics, I thought about it and came to the conclusion that "Parliament is dining with paedophiles". Similarly, when the position of Director of Security came up in April 2006 three references were required and I wasn't prepared to give any.

This is the way that countries are colonised today, through financial turmoil, paedophilia, child-sex abuse, bisexuality, the destruction of the family and financial, social and cultural annexing. As such, New Zealand has been renamed, although the new name is only known by a select few, and New Zealand citizenship has not officially existed since 10 January 1920.

America has the same practice, but is more overt about it. America has the 'US Army School of the Americas' (SOA) based in Panama where it openly trains dictators and troops to make war against their own people.[21]

[20] We only know Chris Carter to be a child-sex abuser. His paedophilia was news to us. The difference is in the age of the child. Paedophilia is under 13 and child-sex abuse is 13–16 years old. Labour (New Communism) MP Chris Carter has two cases of child-sex abuse against him from two of his male students while he was their schoolteacher. The New Zealand Police are refusing to press charges while he is an MP. That's their excuse and it is a delaying tactic. They will probably never press charges as they employ so many paedophiles themselves. Paedophiles in the New Zealand Police are protected by promotion and paedophiles become MPs in order to avoid being charged, prosecuted, and jailed.

The SOA recently moved to Fort Benning, Georgia and was renamed the polite 'Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation'.

When the School of the Americas moved they painted over all the old murals in Panama without using sealer and when the BBC went to film it, all the old murals and graffiti had come through the new acrylic. The murals showed fascists killing and torturing communists in such graphic detail that nothing was left to the imagination. Many of the murders and tortures employed by the fascist death squads were performed on young children and these are also visibly depicted.

People's names, military cover names and noms de guerre are also clearly and legibly shown, and most are traceable. The fact that most of these School of the Americas graduates have not been tracked down by the Forces of Order – the military, the police, the Catholic Church, the government, big business and the established education system – shows complicity amongst the Forces of Order.

What person in one small country is going to defy all these powerful Forces of Order when they have been propagandised into working for them and obeying them all their lives? It is as ridiculous as expecting the Israelis to pluck Nazi war criminals out of those same countries after WWII.

Eichmann was kidnapped because he was obviously gettable, he would serve as the sole and only war criminal to be returned to Israel, and his capture served to rehabilitate an Israeli spymaster, the equally rotten Rafi Etan. But this was delayed for as long as possible by the CIA.

"Determined to win the Cold War, the CIA kept quiet about the whereabouts of Nazi war criminal Adolf Eichmann in the 1950s . . . In a March 19, 1958, memo to the CIA, West German intelligence officials wrote that they knew where Eichmann was hiding. But neither side acted . . . The CIA also routinely misled US immigration officials in the mid-1970s . . . The Bush Administration has dispensed with guidelines that had discouraged the CIA from using informants with unsavoury backgrounds . . . Their unreliability was surpassed only by the harm that ensued . . . Historians cited examples such as former German SS officer Heinz Felfe, a Soviet spy who used his ex-Nazi credentials in 1951 to join the US-sponsored West German intelligence service, the Gehlen organisation. He [then] exposed 15,000 intelligence 'items' to the Soviets."[22]

Similarly, the US gave Helen Clark full cover for her KGB training by giving her two Fulbright scholarships, despite her aborted nuclear strikes against New Zealand, Australia and America, 1980–89. In the height of her communist putsch (2002) she requested Who's Who remove these Fulbright scholarships from her résumé.

America then regained control of New Zealand's Prime Minister Helen Clark by filming her having sex with a female CIA pillow talker at Andersen's Cottage, better known as Lincoln Cottage, a short horse-and-buggy ride from the White House on the night of 3/4 January 2003. The diplomatic community roared with laughter and shouted each other out to lunch just so they could tell the story. I paid for lunch.

Jack the Ripper
and Sir Melville Macnaghten

I'm not attempting to solve the mysteries of Jack the Ripper, as it appears to have been solved many times over, each providing clarity and confusion. The truth has always been blurred, but now authors and publishers no longer have to declare their intention. This had led to forensic fiction novels like Patricia Cornwell's Jack the Ripper: Case Closed being presented through the media as 'the new breakthrough'.

Many of the so-called mysteries of history are not mysteries at all when confronted with the knowledge of intelligence officers. These events can be seen not as random occurrences, but as build-ups for what was to come. The Jack the Ripper murders shed light on the methods and agendas of influential societies – those that have created history and were to claim history and the future as their own.

In 1888 six women were murdered and these homicides were attributed to Jack the Ripper. The crime remained unsolved. To support the investigation, Scotland Yard brought in Melville Macnaghten, a man of breeding, but with absolutely no police experience. It was as if he were brought in to ensure that these crimes were never solved. The crimes were not solved but Melville Macnaghten did what he was best at – he calmed the waters and ensured the criminal remained at large and those involved were protected.

Macnaghten was brought in eight months after the Jack the Ripper murders as the Chief Constable of CID on 1 June 1889. This was an act of sabotage in Greater London crime solving.

Melville Leslie Macnaghten (1853–1921) was a tall, elegant man with an air about him that only belongs to the British upper class. He was the 15th child to the last chairman of the East India Company and educated at Eton. As the country's most dedicated Eton Old Boy, he immediately went to Bengal, India to manage his family estates between the ages of 19 and 35 (1872–88). Here he was a keen pig sticker and shooter as long as health permitted. In 1878 he (25) married Dora, the daughter of Canon Sanderson of Chichester, and had two sons and two daughters. His youngest daughter Christabel married the Hon. H. D. McLaren, the eldest son of Lord Aberconway.

She became Baroness Christabel Mary Melville Macnaghten Aberconway McLaren and wrote A Wiser Woman? A book of memories – a book she later regretted writing. A more pompous family one could not hope to meet. Today, stripped of titles, this is called a solipsist mental illness: "I am titled, therefore I am. There is no part of me left to develop and no part of me that is developed. I have invested heavily in social capital and divested many conversations of all contention . . . others have credited my most studious thoughts with the invention of the vacuum. I have no evidence of this but I take on all titles."

With no training and no obvious qualifications, Melville Macnaghten was appointed the Chief Constable at Scotland Yard's Criminal Investigation Department (1889), a class appointment by his old friend James Monro whom he had known in India.[1]

James Monro, Secret Department.

Melville Macnaghten.

India was the Mecca of homosexuals and paedophiles. It was where the British upper class sent their sons when their sexuality was suspect and where murderous paedophiles such as Baden-Powell were exiled until the reigning monarch died.

---

[1] Others say Macnaghten joined Scotland Yard in 1899 and became the Head of the Criminal Investigation Department in 1903. Either way, he was immediately put in charge of the Jack the Ripper file. The reality is he became the instant Head of the Criminal Investigation Department on 1 June 1889 and Assistant Commissioner in 1903.

The 'dedicated Old Boy' gives weight to this as the British public schools were known for their boarding-house buggery. At the time of Macnaghten's instant appointment to this senior position (head of crime solving in London) the Jack the Ripper murders were eight months old and James Monro was in command of the Secret Department. Monro then became the Commissioner of Metropolitan Police (10 Nov. 1888–90) and Melville Macnaghten's boss. This was the old fag system – bum buddies and secret keepers for life.

Macnaghten was British to the core and everything that went with it – dumb at his job, good at everything else, and promoted for it. He also suffered from a life of continual 'innuendo when required' from all the homosexual leanings that the public school system brings and the acting world provides. He was a personable fellow with great connections, an expert at Shakespeareanese and was used to cover up crime whenever it was required. This was the system of British policing. It made London, and especially its East End, a crime haven, a criminal's paradise, a training ground for dissidents and a holiday home for whoever wanted to immortalise their cause through the most horrendous crimes.

Melville Macnaghten became the Chief Constable at Scotland Yard's Criminal Investigation Department (CID) from 1889, and after continual failure at his job, but being personable and remembering everybody's name, he was made Assistant Commissioner (1903–12).

In 1907 he was elevated to Knight Commander of the White Military Order of Spain and Commander of the Order of Dannebrog, becoming Sir Melville Leslie Macnaghten. After the Houndsditch murders (16 December 1910) and the Sidney Street Siege (2 January 1911) were allowed to pass without conviction, he became ill, received the Companion of the Order of the Bath (1912) and retired prematurely in late 1912.

Some say 1912, others say 1913. There is a difference between when the knighthood was awarded and when it was gazetted. There is also confusion as to when he retired, 1912 or 1913. Macnaghten also went on a cruise for "ten" years from 1913 to 1920, which essentially means he disappeared during WWI.[2]

[2] This often indicates double agent activity, with occult practitioners liasing between both sides, ensuring the number of deaths (sacrifices) were up to scratch. Many of Britain's elevated were into the occult, so much so that it has been entirely eliminated from official history. The occult is very often the reason behind the elevation.

Dates are easily mistaken in old records and were routinely mistaken as a matter of course. The recorders of dates often have their own reasons for getting things wrong, as this book illustrates. It makes research difficult and writing look incompetent.

Regardless of this, as Assistant Commissioner, Sir Melville Macnaghten was in control of the Greater London Police (Scotland Yard/Metropolitan Police) during the time that Adolf 'Edmund' Hitler was trained in Britain (February–November 1912). Macnaghten was in this position because of his grandiloquent incompetence.

At the time of the Jack the Ripper murders (August–November 1888), the general populace were just becoming literate. The press was becoming a force for social change and the turmoil between liberals and conservatives was being played out in print for the first time . . . and hasn't stopped.

Crime was being used for political ends as a way of getting media coverage for one's cause, with the likes of the Irish Home Rule partisans, the forerunner to the IRA. The Irish covered their tracks by saying, "Arggh, it's always the Irish".

But the Jack the Ripper murders, it turned out, weren't Irish but a Jewish/Freemasonry-related phenomenon. The Jews cover their tracks by calling any accusation "anti-Semitism", an ecclesiastical-slang if ever there was one. Equally, the Freemasons cover their tracks utilising the lower-ranking Freemasons who insist they're a Christian organisation.

The East End at the time was one grim slum. In 1888, Whitechapel had 233 common lodging houses, accommodating 8530 people, with an average of 37 people in each. Sanitation was nonexistent, inadequate, or remained unused through ignorance. There were 62 known brothel houses and a similar number of unknown brothels. There were an estimated 1200 prostitutes and a similar number who resorted to casual prostitution to make ends meet.

Whitechapel was an immigrant brothel slum given to any and every vice: ". . . death from starvation was commonplace, and 55 per cent of children died before the age of five."[3] As a result, people became hardened to death and crime, but the Jack the Ripper murders still managed to terrorise the largely Jewish population.

[3] Daniel Farson, Limehouse Days, p. 59.

> Ironically it was these Jews at the time who strongly suspected Jack the Ripper was a Jew and voiced this suspicion.

Most of these Jews settled in the Spitalfields area and were predominantly from Russia. The conditions were appalling and the Jews rioted over their living conditions and the unemployment they were forced to face. The British monarchy, including Queen Victoria, responded by crying whenever they were told the truth about their plight – hence they were not reminded.

> It was the Jack the Ripper murders that finally brought the faux policing of the East End to Queen Victoria's attention.

On 13 November 1887 there were mass demonstration in Trafalgar Square protesting unemployment. Eighty-eight per cent of the population in Whitechapel were Jewish migrants and formed the bulk of those protesting. The myth that Jews tend to protest their cause silently and walk to their own deaths, dying like martyrs, only became popular with post-WWII propaganda.

> As usual, it was one race killing its own race. Hitler, Churchill, Stalin and Roosevelt were all Jews and they killed Jews for the Jewish cause. The other great piece of Jewish propaganda was going for a walk for forty years in someone else's desert.

Freemason Sir Charles Warren, Chief Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police, called in the troops and there was extraordinary violence – 300 were injured and one man died. It became known as 'Bloody Sunday', and since then almost every country has had a Bloody Sunday – England (13 Nov. 1887), Russia (9 Jan. 1905), Australia (22 April 1919), America (7 March 1965) and Northern Ireland (30 January 1972).

Bloody Sunday in Northern Ireland on 30 January 1972.

Sir Charles Warren
GCMG, KCB, FRS.

The attitude of the people at the time was that the police were incompetent and Chief Metropolitan Police Commissioner Warren was even published as such. The public knew the police were incompetent but the criminals knew how they were incompetent and took advantage of this.

Sir Charles Warren was paranoid about civil unrest and thought that if the Jews were implicated in the Jack the Ripper murders, there might be an outbreak of anti-Semitic violence. This was unlikely as 88% of Whitechapel were immigrant Jews fleeing pogroms of persecution in their own countries. Chief Police Commissioner Warren lacked logic and resigned at 8 pm on 9 November 1888, immediately after the sixth and last Ripper victim, Mary Jane Kelly.

In Golden Dawn coven language '8 pm' translates as "back to zero", and indeed Hitler bombed these slums during WWII, just as Churchill had asked him to do.

Frederick Porter Wensley.

At the time, forensics was at such a basic level that the police had to catch someone in the act of murder, or have them confess, in order to convict them. This prevented the wealthy from ever being convicted. There was rarely any evidential backup that could tie the perpetrator to the victim, unless they were plain stupid. So police training specialised in tackling and boxing. This meant that any fast runner, boxer or upper-class person could run, box or talk their way out of a situation. The police were not armed and anyone with a gun could shoot their way out. The police response was to send more police, by foot, and to this end the famous Detective Inspector Frederick Porter Wensley invented the forerunner to rubber-soled shoes. Wensley fixed car tyres to the soles of police shoes so they could sneak up on people and run with greater ease. As one of Whitechapel's part-time prostitutes said, "Ee's got indiarubber soles ohn 'es shoowes".

Neither the Police Commissioner nor the Home Secretary Henry Matthews offered a reward for the Jack the Ripper murders.[4] This indicated high-level complicity. Rewards were offered for the later Houndsditch murders but were so thoroughly ignored that the police didn't even arrest a WANTED person when they turned up to the police funeral they had caused.

The fifth Jack the Ripper victim was Catharine Eddowes, also known as Mary Ann Kelly. She was mistaken for the final victim, Mary Jane Kelly, who died 40 days later. Mistakes such as these in history have a way of occurring time and time again, as if they were part of some ritual. Catharine Eddowes/Mary Ann Kelly was the second woman murdered on 30 September 1888.

Jack the Ripper used a piece of her apron to wipe off his knife and dropped it in a doorway. This was discovered by the non-Freemason Constable Alfred Long at 2.55 am on 30 September 1888 in Goulston Street, Mitre Square, a well-known Freemasonry location.

Above the door, Jack the Ripper, or his minder, left some latter-day graffiti written in chalk:

"The Juwes are the men
That Will not be blamed for nothing."

Sir Melville Macnaghten writes in Days of My Years: "During this night an apron, on which bloody hands had been wiped, was found in Goulburn Street [sic; it was Goulston Street] (situated, if my memory is correct, about half-way between Berners Street and Mitre Square). Hard by was a writing in chalk on the wall, to the effect that 'the Jews are the men who will not be blamed for nothing.' The apron gave no clue, and the chalk writing was obliterated by the order of a high police official, who was seemingly afraid that a riot against the Jews might be the outcome of this strange writing on the wall."[5] This was the only clue ever left behind by the murderer.

[4] It was commonly noted that the Police would have put up a reward if it happened at West End. Reacting to this, tradesman and the local MP offered a reward.

[5] Sir Melville Macnaghten, Days of My Years, Chapter IV, Laying the Ghost of Jack the Ripper.

City of London Police officers wanted to photograph the defiant Jewish message but Police Commissioner Sir Charles Warren (the Freemason who offered no reward) thought that it was better to leave it until morning light, but leaving it might cause riots against the Whitechapel Jews, so the law-defying pro-Jewish message was erased in its entirety from the doorway, never photographed, and never followed up as evidence. They could have photographed it with a flash or just erased the word 'Juwe', but no, the whole message was erased and the evidence was never acted upon.

> At the time it was believed by those on the street, who were largely Jews, that Jack the Ripper/the Whitechapel Murderer/the Leather Apron was a Jew. This was all the more surprising because Jack the Ripper had created an atmosphere of terror and the Jews occupied most of Whitechapel, Spitalfields and the East End where the murders occurred.
> This may seem a random series of events, but these events were not random. They were an orchestrated series of events in order to imprint on the minds of the public that the Freemasons and the Jews were to be the controllers of all major events and all future events to come.
> Sure enough, this has come to pass.

Chief Police Commissioner Sir Charles Warren had a deep interest in the history of Freemasonry, was a frequent visitor to the Royal Alpha Lodge, and founded the Quatuor Coronati Lodge (No. 2076) in 1884. He knew the shared history of the Jews and the Freemasons and therefore acted as a protector of that history. With this knowledge, he erased this message as quickly as possible, but not without people of note sighting it, repeating it and creating a culture of myth, mystery and legend.

"The Juwes are the men That Will not be blamed for nothing" had a huge range of meanings for the educated and initiated. Handwritten with so many upright slashes it could be read as 'JUIVES', which was French for 'Jews'. (The most common form of Freemasonry is the Scottish-French rite.)

During the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries when all the languages across Europe were in a flurry of development, the word 'Jews' had many spellings including the phonetic 'Juise', 'Juwys', 'Juyse' and 'Juwes'.[6]

[6] University of Michigan Dictionary of Middle English.

"Juwes" can also mean 'a judicial sentence, punishment, damnation, pain, torment, judgement and justice', all of which were to follow. The goal of the spelling was to take the sentence, threat and promise date back as far as possible to exert as much influence as possible.

This was not frantic writing or a spelling mistake, but a well thought out sentence by historically educated secret society insiders. It also contained purposeful mistakes so commonly found amongst the Freemasons – 'That' and 'Will' had capital letters. This gives emphasis for the future 'That Will' come to pass.

"Juwes" was also a collective term for 'murderers', especially the murderers of Hiram Abiff who built King Solomon's Tomb. This was dropped from the Masonic ritual around 1818 and was replaced with 'the Three Ruffians', which remains to this day. The sentence also meant, "The Murderers are the men That Will not be blamed for nothing".[7] This too came to pass with WWI, the Spanish Flu, WWII and all the other wars in between and afterwards.

> In the public's eye, Freemasons and Jews were enemies. They hated each other on the face of things, but they worked together behind the scenes to create wars for their benefit. The Freemasons and the Jews share a common heritage in legends, details, rituals and war, which all stem back to King Solomon's Tomb.

King Solomon's Tomb was raided by the Knights Templar in AD 1127. They soon became the most powerful organisation in Europe – powerful enough for the Catholic Church to become jealous and attack them in a crusade – OP OUR WAY OVER YOUR WAY. After being massacred and scattered, the Knights Templar then went underground and resurfaced as the Freemasons in Germany, took over the British monarchy in 1714, and took a more public hold over the British in 1717 and 1818.

The Freemasons invented democracy in the 1790s, communism in 1848, non-slavery capitalism in 1865 and totalitarianism in 1914 (WWI) – most successfully in Russia in 1917 with the Bolshevik Revolution.

Chief Police Commissioner Sir Charles Warren had Superintendent Thomas Arnold (a non-Mason) arrange for the erasure of the sentence, threat and promise "The Juwes are the men That Will not be blamed for nothing".

[7] Melvyn Fairclough, The Ripper and the Royals, Duckworth, London, 1991, p. 67.

Chief Police Commissioner Sir Charles Warren interpreted "The Juwes are the men That Will not be blamed for nothing" as "The Freemasons are the men That Will not be blamed for nothing".

This was true enough as well. Freemason synapses work by strange linking. Sometimes it is almost childlike, other times it is historical, and in others it is coded, as in taking the previous letter of the alphabet and rewriting it, or looking at numbers via a silly mirror.

To the uneducated, educated, secret society, and secret society historians the message had the following meanings:

1. The Jews will not be blamed for anything.
2. The Freemasons will not be blamed for anything.
3. The French Jews will not be blamed for anything.
4. The murderers will not be blamed for anything.
5. "That Will" with capital first letters means 'We control the future with a Will that controls us'.
6. Those who incite 'a judicial sentence, punishment, damnation, pain, torment, judgement, and justice' will not be blamed for anything.
7. More simply put the message is "Blessed are the war makers. We control the future", something we know only too well today.
8. In Golden Dawn coven language the year 1888 reads as '∞1∞∞' – 'infinite one everywhere forever'. The message had become "Blessed are the war makers. We control the infinite one everywhere forever." This referred to the occult's Holy Ghost's grandfatherly conception and concurrent gestation of Adolf Hitler.
9. Aprons were worn by the stonemasons who made King Solomon's Tomb. As such, the apron was a symbol of the Freemason. Catharine Eddowes' bloody apron was found in Mitre Square and both the 'mitre' and the 'square' are Freemasonry symbols. She was born Catharine Eddowes but had a different public persona as Mary Ann Kelly, a given name and a front name, comparable to the Freemasons' agenda and the front organisation.
10. The women were murdered in a kosher fashion with a sharp knife cutting their throats, after which they were successively mutilated more severely and with medical knowledge.

Espavo Sozo - treasurer@platinumparty.org -7 Ma

11. These were 'modern day' sacrifices that had replaced 'breeding with virgins' with 'prostitute murder mutilations'. The third prostitute, Annie Chapman, had her uterus removed. The fifth victim, Catharine Eddowes, had her kidney removed from the front. The sixth victim, Mary Jane Kelly, had her heart removed.
12. Ultimately the message became "Blessed are the Freemason and Jewish war makers who murder. We will sacrifice you all and make virgins and prostitutes of you all with control of the infinite one everywhere, forever." This instigated the rather dark, vicious, murderous Victorian prostitute/virgin genre and was all to come to pass. It came true in WWI, the Spanish Flu, WWII and all the wars after.

Now can you say that the occult has no influence on history? You could argue that the meanings have no meaning and every connection had been a giant leap of faithlessness, and that would also be true.

13. The destruction of religion is one of Freemasonry's goals. The penultimate meaning then becomes "Blessed are the Freemason and Jewish war makers who murder. We will sacrifice you all and make virgins and prostitutes of you all. Have no faith for we have destroyed religion and faith infinitely, everywhere and forever."

    This was no hastily scribbled graffiti. It was well thought out history. It was history in the making and its starting point was 1.30–3.10 am on 30 September 1888, the last day of the month the King of the Jews was historically born.

    The King of the Jews had to be conceived in December from 'virgins', and in less pure, more modern times, breeding with virgins of pedigree has been replaced with the flipside, murdering prostitutes and mutilating them on equally infamous dates. At the time of the message Hitler had been gestating for 11 weeks and 1 day (111 – 'master of self').

Each organ has qualities associated with it and the removal of Catharine Eddowes' kidney represented 'lust and fear, hopelessness and dependence, the removal of security and self-respect, the removal of hindsight and standing, a lack of self-determination, the inability to discriminate or eliminate, and a tenuous survival'.

These were sacrificial murders to the cause of war and the future has reflected everything symbolised in these Golden Dawn occult murders.

The Jack the Ripper murders were a Jewish/Freemasonry statement: "The Juwes are the men That Will not be blamed for nothing." This was effectively a claim that the Jews, who control Britain's finances, are above the law (as were the Freemasons who served them). Having graffiti-ed this on the psyche of generations with the most memorable peacetime murders in history, it is all the more interesting to look at the murder dates in light of the symbolism of their Golden Dawn coven language. This is the language of significant dates as used by the power-elite.

Secret society organisations are always split into two groups. The first is the 'Effective' – the cause. The second is the 'Affective' – the front. The Effective has a huge effect on the real politic. The Affective has a huge effect on the virtual politic, moving into the realm of fantasy, literature and art movements which influence public imagination towards acceptance of the Effective. The Golden Dawn organisation is a case in point.

The Golden Dawn coven made use of the year 1888. Significant numbers are 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 8, 9, 11 and 13, and numbers are formulated towards these wherever possible, and somewhat reversed from their original order, as viewed in a mirror image via a silly mirror.

The '1' is interpreted as 'one' and has no mirror image; '11' reflects itself and means 'master'; '2' means 'to', 'too' or 'us'; '3' means 'them' or 'oligarchy'; '4' means 'stagnant' or 'holding pattern'; '5' is the occult version of '2' as in 'to you with witchcraft'; '55' means 'occult master of self'; '6' means 'dead'; '9' is flipped into a '6' meaning 'dead after a process'; '8' is written as '∞' and means 'everywhere', 'forever', or 'infinite'; '31' becomes '13' as does '1+3' and means 'bad luck'; '9+7' = 16, which is reversed and means 'dead one with an assassination attempt beforehand'.

The numbers are then read as a sentence. The numbers 8,8,31,8,9,1 can be flip-sided to '16∞13∞∞' meaning 'one dead and infinitely unlucky person everywhere forever'. So these numbers are very much a curse – hence their use in the dark arts.

The Jack the Ripper murders occurred on the following dates:

1. Martha Turner/Tabram was murdered on 8 August 1888 – ∞∞∞1∞∞, meaning 'forever infinitely immortal one, forever everywhere'.[8]

---

[8] Martha Tabram was actually murdered somewhere between 7–9 August 1888 with 39 stab wounds from two blades simultaneously. This was the first murder and involved the least mutilation. It is only considered by some Ripperites to be the work of Jack; '7–9' translates as 'dead one', giving the meaning 'infinite, infinite, infinite one, infinitely dead one with a failed murder attempt beforehand'.

Espavo Sozo - treasurer@platinumparty.org -7 March 2013

2. Mary Ann Nichols/aka 'Polly' was murdered on 31 August 1888 – ∞∞∞1∞13, meaning 'forever infinitely immortal one, everywhere bad luck'.[9]
3. Annie Chapman/aka 'Dark Annie' was murdered on 8 Sept. 1888 – ∞∞∞16∞, meaning 'forever infinitely immortal one, dead everlasting after a process'. Her head was nearly decapitated.[10]
4. Elizabeth Stride was murdered on 30 Sept. 1888 – ∞∞∞136, meaning 'forever infinitely immortal one, bad luck dead after a process'.
5. Catharine Eddowes/'Mary Ann Kelly' was also murdered on 30 Sept. 1888 – ∞∞∞136, meaning 'forever infinitely immortal one, unfortunate death'. Her nickname was Mary Ann Kelly and she was purposely mistaken for Mary Jane Kelly who was murdered 40 days and nights later, referring to the man-made famines that were to come – many of them based around exterminating religious populations.
6. Mary Jane Kelly/'Marie Jeanette' was murdered on 9 Nov. 1888 – ∞∞∞1116, meaning 'forever infinitely immortal one, one master dead after a process'. This being the 6th murder adds further emphasis on 'dead' and should be read as 'forever infinitely immortal one, one master dead'. She was three months pregnant at the time and her given name 'Mary Jane' has been immortalised as slang for dope. Dopey also refers to the goyim population – Gentiles treated as cattle to be drugged and milked.

   One of the goals of WWII was to replace Jesus with Hitler, and at the time of this murder, Hitler was 118 days in gestation. In Golden Dawn coven language this translates as "infinite master".

This is called 'drawing a long bow' but it is what the occult specialises in – mirror image by longbow through a silly mirror. Silly mirrors were invented by the Freemasons.

[9] Princess Di's assassination on the same day, 31 August 1997, has the numbers 7991813. 7 + 9 = 16 = dead one. Because of the same loose linking it also refers to the failed assassination attempts on her beforehand. So the numbers become '1661∞13' and read 'Assassination attempts beforehand, dead one, infinitely unlucky'.

[10] After this murder the police bucked up and actually took an interest in the East End. There were no policewomen so two policemen dressed up as women in an attempt to attract the Ripper. This just added to the hilarity of police incompetence. One of the policemen had a large black moustache and had to wear a veil. He was approached by a male reporter, also dressed as a women and each accused the other of being a man. Neither were propositioned by the Ripper.

The Jack the Ripper murders were placed in 1888 because of the significance of the date to both Freemason and Jewish traditions. The original all-powerful Effective Golden Dawn Inner Circle coven is the occult link between these two groups. The Affective Golden Dawn Outer Circle created by the Freemason Dr William Wynn Westcott in 1887/88 was a public façade for the change in public consciousness that was to come.

Dr William Wynn Westcott (1848–1925) was a country doctor who started The Order of the Golden Dawn (Isis-Urania Temple of the Golden Dawn in the Outer) along with Dr William Robert Woodman (1829–91) and G. Samuel Liddel Mathers (1854–1918). Dr William Wynn Westcott left his country practice and came to London soon after the Jack the Ripper murders in 1889, where he became a coroner for Central London to the end of WWI in 1918. Here he dealt with the dead and fiddled with their files.

By 1897, Freemason Coroner Dr Westcott had written 16 books on the occult and was threatened with expulsion from public office if he did not sever ties with occult practices.

Espavo Soze - treasurer@platinumparty.org - 7 March 2013

At the height of Dr Westcott's Affective Golden Dawn Outer Circle there were 200 members, but they were the most influential people in literary circles, or the lovers thereof . . . including William Butler Yeats (Nobel Prize 1923), actress Florence Farr (a double dipper, firm on the overlap . . . lover of Yeats) and George Bernard Shaw (Nobel Prize 1935[11]), Constance Wilde (wife of the flamboyant homosexual Oscar Wilde[12]) and Algernon Blackwood[13] – all in the 1890s. This group virtually created the dark and macabre Victorian genre.

[11] George Bernard Shaw's first successful play was Arms and the Man (1894) followed by The Devil's Disciple (1897), both at a time when his overlapping lover Florence Farr was a member of The Golden Dawn. He later wrote Pygmalion (1913), which became My Fair Lady (1956) and received the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1935. He tried to invent a new phonetic English alphabet called Shavian. Shaw got one of Renoir's models pregnant and the resulting son became the homosexual necrophiliac Lawrence of Arabia.

[12] Constance Lloyd married the flamboyant homosexual buggar Oscar Wilde in 1884. He published the novel The Picture of Dorian Gray (1891), whose character took part in the movie The League of Extraordinary Gentlemen 112 years later (2003). He died alone in exile in Paris under the pseudonym Sebastian Melmoth (1900).

[13] Algernon Blackwood's works reflect a taste for the occult and the supernatural, such as John Silence (1908), Tongues of Fire (1924) and Tales of the Uncanny and Supernatural (1949).

The murders were an historical act that cemented Jack the Ripper's place in history, along with the group he represented.

People have spent years fascinated by these cases and therefore focusing on this group. To those involved in the occult, this is a power coup. Two Nobel prize-winning authors helped with this coup.

To say that the Golden Dawn had no influence on history is to underrate them and ignore the whole Victorian genre. But in the larger scale of things, all influential societies have a front:

1. When they really started up.
2. When they became a force.
3. When they showed a false public face to hide that force.

"At the time of the murders, the [Golden Dawn] Society was 'nothing more than a kindergarten for would-be occultists'."[14]

Freemasons organised the Hanover coup of the British monarchy, then emigrated from Germany to Britain as soon as it became successful (1714) and then started up in 1717, but its public face came in 1818.

The Freemasons front as a Christian organisation, but further up the ranks it is well known that they become less and less Christian and more and more involved in instigating wars. In order to progress beyond the 33rd initiation they have to dump (defecate) on a Bible. All of these lesser-known initiations, the 34th to 42nd initiate Freemasons, have done this and it is these higher initiates who create the events that lead to the history we read about, live through and live in the results of, with special reference to misery.

In common folklore history Jews are homeless people who demand empathy for their plight of 2000 years ago. The King of the Jews was crucified, yet the Jews bypass Jesus ("Yahu'Shuah"; pron. 'Yahoo shoe') and focus straight on God. This has always struck home as an anomaly in cause and rational thought and starts to look like a long con itself.

> In reality, the high Jews manipulate their people more than any other race. As a consequence they are now protected more than any other race. In Germany, for example, if one challenges the questionable six million dead from WWII, there is an immediate loss of human rights for that person.

[14] Ellic Howe, Fringe Masonry in England, Ars Quatuor Coronatorum, Volume 85, 1972, pp. 242–295.

The Jewish message could just have easily been written by a non-Jew, a Freemason or a dissenter from either of these ranks who wanted to expose what was going to happen. Whoever wrote "The Juwes are the men That Will not be blamed for nothing" was an educated man and predicted much of the future – the Houndsditch murders, the Sidney Street Siege, WWI, WWII, the entire news media for the next century and consequently the ongoing history of the planet.

> Many of the Jack the Ripper files were burnt during the blitzes of WWII, but they were also stolen. Lords and knights steal files and don't return them because they are protectors of the establishment. It is also common practice in the upper echelons of the police and army to steal files. Historians steal files on a regular basis, copy them and return them overnight – because they are the protectors of history. There are a lot of crimes by authorities on these files.

Retiring Scotland Yard inspectors often take sensitive official files with them. When interviewed at their homes they are often surrounded by the official files that others no longer have access to. With these official files they are often elevated to a knight or lord. This gives them further protection and unquestioning trust, after which they become the most prolific file thieves.

> Protecting the establishment by file theft is one of the main functions of a knight. A crime is committed, the case is botched and the files are stolen. Ipso facto, the stitch-up is all stitched up. History then becomes a swarm of second guesses based around posed black-and-white photographs.
> File theft, which we know so little about, is the most revealing aspect of history. To understand history one has to follow the murders and the file thefts. All else is fiction, propaganda and mystery graffitti-ed onto generations of psyches with error-ridden synapses. As a result, history contains generations of unbelievable claptrap where nothing fits and most lose interest – the desired goal of establishment historians, most of whom are embedded into the occult.

Cat thief historian: "When you read the files you realise the most powerful elements of our society have always been sexually deviant, or 'as bent as fuck'. Stealing a file for the establishment is a prerequisite to becoming a knight. Certainly, stealing files was routine amongst knights once they've been elevated.

"Files in British Intelligence were routinely triplicated and sent to the most far-flung stable parts of the Commonwealth for security. These places had to be free from internal insurrection and governed and policed effectively. In my time, in the late '60s and early '70s, these places were Canada and New Zealand, but there is no guarantee that this is still the case.

"The files were in plain English and the most breathtaking crimes were disclosed in the bulk of the files. Files had a life of normally 20–50 years and were scheduled for destruction before the 50-year rule could free them. They were retained purely for internal consumption and none were meant to see the light of day.

"Every two years, low-ranking SIS [Security Intelligence Service] personnel were sent on internal fact-finding missions and these personnel were meant to inquire after the security of the files and to visually check on them. I was told that during this phase our SIS routinely took the files to Fiji for R&R.

"'Are the files safe?'

"'Yes, the files are as safe as the Bank of England.'

Espavo Sozo - treasurer@platinumparty.org -7 March 2013

"No mention would be made of the fact that I'd been left in charge of the files. I was responsible for turning them from alphabetical order into some form of numerical order I didn't understand.

"The files detail incidents in British and Continental history that range from spy walk-ins to embassies . . . assassinations of foreign nationals on the streets of London … arrests of nationalists in Africa and the Pacific . . . and their subsequent deaths at the hands of judges that were pensioned off to live in Cambridge, New Zealand and rewarded with large numbers of shares in the Colonial Sugar Company."[15]

The Jack the Ripper case was officially closed in 1892, but remains open in the eyes of the public.
It has graffiti-ed itself onto the psyche of generations.

Scotland Yard's files on these Jack the Ripper/Whitechapel/Leather Apron murders were supposed to have been officially sealed until 1992, the 100th anniversary of the death of HRH Prince Albert Victor Christian Edward, the Duke of Clarence, an initial suspect.

[15] Numerically inadequate government-employed liaison historian under NZ tenure exercised rapaciously.

As King Edward VII's eldest son, the Duke of Clarence was first in line to the throne. He became engaged to his second cousin Mary of Teck but died of a mysterious illness six weeks later. Officially it was pneumonia. The Duke of Clarence was a total homo and a biological reject. Mary of Teck (whose great-grandfather was Mad King George III) then married George V (within two years) and became Queen-consort of Great Britain.

> This homosexual biological reject, HRH Prince Albert Victor Christian Edward, the Duke of Clarence was the half-brother of Winston Churchill. They shared the same father in King Edward VII.
> The files were opened to the public four years earlier on the 100th anniversary of the murders in 1988. What Jack the Ripper had done to his victims, the establishment did to the Jack the Ripper files. They monstered them and the only leads were omissions and cover-ups.

"The files had, however, been purged of essential information beforehand. Anything of any real value that could possibly lead to the identification of the killer was removed. Time after time we are told of lost archives, stolen letters, purloined documents, mysterious disappearances of pertinent materials, files that were purposely destroyed or systematically 'sanitised' or simply 'misplaced' . . . Careful searches, for example, have failed to reveal the whereabouts of the original detailed post mortem report of Catharine Eddowes, prepared by Dr Frederick Gordon Brown, the City Police Surgeon.

"Moreover, private notes and diaries belonging to individuals who were retired officials, or who were otherwise personally involved in the investigations of the murders, or had information pertaining to them, have on several recorded occasions 'disappeared' – sometimes within a few days of an individual's death.

"Dr Thomas Stowell's files were destroyed within hours of his death by his son, who refused to discuss the matter. Sir Melville Macnaghten's personal files and first-hand knowledge of Scotland Yard's entire investigation simply 'vanished' shortly after his death on 12 May 1921. These files were originally taken by non-Mason police who wished to preserve the truth. They were then recovered by Freemasonry police and destroyed."[16]

[16] Dennis Stocks & Barron Barnett Lodge, Freemasonry and the Ripper; slightly paraphrased.

"However, shortly after his death [Sir Melville Macnaghten], his daughter [Lady Aberconway] copied his notes"[17], which were given to author Daniel Farson in 1959. She was not immune to the shenanigans of her Freemason father, who often specialise in duping their kids into carrying on the lie into the next generation.

"Much of the information that has come down to us is not merely incomplete, but incorrect . . . the so-called 'writing on the wall' found in the passage off Goulston Street following the Murder of Catharine Eddowes had at least seven different versions . . . and each version is from a 'respectable and reliable' source like Sir Henry Smith who sighted it before its removal."[18]

> 'Respectable and reliable' invariably means "paedophile minder". Specialists in this are Freemasons, religions, justices of the peace, the police, governor-generals, and judges, who are, for the most part, drawn from the most corrupt lawyers who, through tidy files and complicit silence, bribe there way up into positions of more complicit silence.
> The violence and the organisation behind the Jack the Ripper murders were a practice run for the confusion required for Stalin and Hitler's British training and the violence they would bring – the Bolshevik Revolution and WWII. It is something the Freemasons role-play over and over again. History is created by confusing its origins, avoiding blame and profiting from the organised response.
> Crime and war have always been connected and are regarded as the highest level of achievement by all of those involved. The police view crime as the pinnacle of their achievement and Army Intelligence view war as the pinnacle of their achievement.

If you look at the peacetime crime statistics you can get a good idea of how a country will do at war. Cat burglars are brilliant at scaling walls, but are excluded from the army because of their record. When the country gets desperate they are utilised. Military commandos are often recruited from jail for war and these criminals are very often patriotic underdogs keen to prove themselves. War after all, is a liar's paradise.

Espavo Sozo - treasurer@platinumparty.org -7 March 2013

Eddie Chapman (British) was a dynamite burglar during WWII. He got caught on Jersey Island and was locked up there. When the Germans occupied Jersey in 1940 they offered him a position to train with them and bomb key sites in London. Eddie Chapman (1908–97) ended up parachuting into London and faking the bombings of major buildings with MI-5 help.

The unwanted criminal managed to penetrate the Abwehr, fake the espionage, pass on false information to the Germans and get paid by them in the process. By the time he was compromised in 1944 he was one of Britain's most helpful double agents. A criminal record is a prerequisite for this sort of work. In exchange, MI-5 wiped his criminal record while the Nazis paid his extravagant wage. At the end of the war the British offered him a medal. His response was, "Medal be damned. You birds owe me £25,000."

Horrendous crimes are always the forerunner to wars and horrendous crimes at the end of wars are indicators of war-in-peacetime society. Jack the Ripper was no exception. It occurred well before WWI, but just before the African campaign in which Churchill and Baden-Powell, the future leader of the Boy Scouts, took part.

Espavo Sozo - treasurer@platinumparty.org -7 March 2013

Baden-Powell was on a train in Ghana, West Africa, returning from the Ashanti expedition in 1896. He located two 16-year-old Irish soldiers on the train, accused them of cowardice and tied their hands behind their backs. He told everyone in that carriage that he was going to interrogate them, then ordered everyone else off that carriage.

Robert Baden-Powell (1857–1941) then sodomised the two handcuffed 16-year-old Irish soldiers and shot them in the back of the head, dead. Despite the fact that Baden-Powell (39) was a flamboyantly homosexual sodomising double-murderer and persona non grata in the UK until Queen Victoria died in 1901, and was exiled from 1896 to 1903 (in India with the murderous paedophile Lord Kitchener), he became Sir Baden-Powell in 1909 and Lord Baden-Powell of Gilwell in 1929.

Since the Bank of England was taken over by homing pigeons on 22 June 1815, the Jews have had as much control as the British monarchy in elevating 'Establishmentarians' to knights and lords. They have also had equal control over the sabotage of crime fighting and file theft. As a result, all of those knighted within the British Empire from 1815 have been 'Jew-minders' and all of those who have challenged the Jewish position in Britain or its colonies have not been knighted.

> Britain is a subset of Jewish everything and homing pigeons have been the single biggest influence on history.
> The Metropolitan Police, known as the Met or Scotland Yard, were responsible for all crimes committed in all the boroughs of London except the central square mile of the City of London proper. The rank and file of the two forces (Met and CoLP) worked together, but the seniors in each force sabotaged each other's efforts frequently, as a matter of course, and with instructions from above. Their failure to cooperate stopped cases being solved whenever it was expedient to do so.

The Jack the Ripper murders, the Houndsditch robbery and Sidney Street Siege were all cases in point. They all occurred both in the City of London and in the Metropolitan Police districts of Whitechapel, Aldgate and Spitalfields. It was known that they would sabotage the information they shared and add confusion for the other side.

> Crimes that the authorities wanted covered up were often committed in both areas, and sometimes with the body straddling both districts. This gave the establishment commanders from both police districts leeway to sabotage the case without copping any blame aimed exclusively at the applied incompetence of their own police unit.

The Jack the Ripper case was no exception. Of the six murders, three occurred in each district and only the sixth victim, Mary Jane Kelly, was photographed before being moved from the crime scene.

Regardless of all the cover-ups, Jack the Ripper was a psychological coup over the human race and the message it left was there for all to see (but never photographed) – The Jews will not be blamed for anything from this point on.

"Plots involving Freemasons, court physicians, and sinister figures from occult organisations have been paraded before the public as the final solution."[19]

Six years after the murders (1894), Melville Macnaghten named his top three suspects – from memory.

[19] Jack the Ripper casebook:www. casebook.org.

These were a mad Russian doctor, an insane Polish Jew, and a mentally fragile lawyer (whom he named as a doctor). Macnaghten then effectively sealed these names under the 70-year-rule and the 100-year-rule. Macnaghten then alluded to this report, but kept it secret until everyone involved was dead.

When part of his report was finally made public in 1959 his prime suspect was M. J. Druitt (Montague John Druitt), whom he describes as a doctor turned teacher (41), who committed suicide on 10 November 1888 or 3 December 1888. He was in fact a cricketer and failed barrister (31).

Montague John Druitt (1857–88) was educated at Winchester College where he won a scholarship to New College at Oxford University. Qualifying as a barrister, he kept chambers at King's Walk/The Temple. This was Freemasons' legal with strong ties to the Prince of Wales (King Edward VII), whose son was a suspect.

After failing as a lawyer, Druitt became the assistant master at a small cramped public boarding school in Blackheath, although he still kept his chambers at King's Walk/The Temple. He was sacked from the school around the time of the last Jack the Ripper murder.

treasurer@platinumparty.org -7 March 2013

Colin Wilson suggests that Montague John Druitt could not have been Jack the Ripper "because in his view no cricketer could commit murder".[20] But we all know cricket is a game for bisexuals, an extension of British public schools, the fag system, Freemasonry, and paedophilia amongst goat mounters. And there is always the sexually bizarre death of cricket umpire Peter Plumley Walker to remember.[21]

Montague's father, Robert Druitt, and his uncle were surgeons and his mother Anne Druitt had been committed to a private mental asylum in July 1888, just two miles from Whitechapel. She was physically incarcerated by Montague's father, and her mental state may have been caused by his actions. Robert Druitt was a surgeon, Conservative, strong Churchman, Justice of the Peace and governor of a grammar school in Wimborne, Dorset. He was therefore 'respectable'.

As we have learnt, 'respectable people' are prone to crimes under a veil of dignity, and when Freemasonry, religion, Conservatism, justice of the peace and school governor are mixed together there is a strong likelihood of paedophilia, the shame of which compels anyone in 'Freemasonry-membership-for-cover' to do anything that any knowing intelligence requires for shared cover. This is how 'Tithing' works, how 'Career Twins' work and how 'Freemasonry' works – shared cover for shame.

Just as it was a family of Freemasons, it was a family of liars.

Montague's brother, William Druitt, was also a lawyer and he gave evidence that he was the only surviving relative other than their 'insane' mother. In fact, the Freemason father, three sisters and a younger brother, Captain Edward Druitt, were alive. The latter had departed for Australia in early 1899. This left the capable liar William Druitt, lawyer, who lied on instructions from his father and these instructions would have come from high up the Masonic ladder, of which King Edward VII was the effective head. King Edward VII was the Grand Master Mason and biological father of the soon-to-be agent of war, Winston Spencer Churchill, then aged 14.

> The British Courts have been a liar's paradise for centuries. They accept all lies, as long as they come from a Freemason, a Master Mason, the Grand Master Mason, or the Monarch.

The Freemasons are not beyond sacrificing one of their sons. Robert Druitt's son, Montague John Druitt, died on 31 December 1888 and King Edward VII's son died in 1894 – both under mysterious circumstances. Both were sacrifices.

Montague John Druitt was supposed to have drowned in the Thames on 31 December 1888 (reported 2 January 1889). Both Macnaghten's Days of My Years and the Scotland Yard public record files contain almost identical wild conjecture, ". . . from private information I have little doubt that his own family believed him to have been the murderer . . ." with absolutely no evidence to back it up. Officially, Macnaghten would have to be referring to the "only surviving relative" William Druitt (lawyer).

From Hell suggests Montague John Druitt was killed by the Freemasons as a scapegoat to take the heat off the real killers.[22]

In 1988 when the 100-year-rule was up, Macnaghten's second suspect was confirmed as Aaron Kosminiski and the third as Michael Ostrog, but these were both disproven. No other police officer supported Macnaghten's allegations.

We had to wait for the 70-year-rule and the 100-year-rule before finding out that the much-praised Sir Melville Macnaghten, Chief of the CID at Scotland Yard/Met, was a saboteur of detective work, constantly getting information incorrect, a major instigator of false trails for the City of London Police and a no-good detective from the upper class working a protection racket for the wealthy and the Freemasons. Rather than write things down, he relied on his superior memory, which proved to be as absent as his police training.

"The task was aggravated by several mistakes made by Macnaghten."[23]

After being brought in to sabotage the investigation of the Jack the Ripper murders, the Houndsditch murders and the siege of Sidney Street, and consequently being elevated three times, Sir Melville Macnaghten got away on a cruise liner for the next eight years, after which he wrote his account of the Houndsditch murders, the Sidney Street Siege and the Jack the Ripper murders from memory in 1920. He then retired into the bosom of Venus on a permanent basis.

Soon after it was known that he had written his memoirs he died at Queen Anne's mansions in Westminster on 12 May 1921. His files of Jack the Ripper, the Houndsditch murders and the Sidney Street Siege were immediately stolen, stolen off the thieves, and then reportedly destroyed.

Macnaghten effectively sealed the case in a ton of ignorance and made it all the more difficult for anyone else to solve – just as he was supposed to do. His writing covers for the killer, suggesting the killer is dead once the murders stop and future murders should be watched to solve this one. He provides no clarity and no leads for the police. Not only did he steal files and misreport on them, he hid the files for 100 years.

> Melville Leslie Macnaghten was affective only. He was what we call today "a tosser". He continually missed the plot and was more interested in being admired as an actor, outsmarting everyone by talking in Shakespeareanese than being effective. Typical of someone sodomised through the British public schools, his brain was a befuddlement of wanton errors, and that he should play a part in history, puts history in its place.

Lord Robert Stephenson Smyth Baden-Powell of Gilwell

Baden-Powell (22 Feb. 1857–8 Jan. 1941) joined the army in 1876 (21). Despite doing badly at school he came second in the army exams, bypassed the officer training, soon became an Honorary Colonel in India and eventually became a Major-General at 43.

In 1896, Baden-Powell was returning from the Ashanti expedition on West Africa's Gold Coast (later Ghana) with the Ashanti Star (1895–96) under his belt. He located two 16-year-old Irish soldiers, accused them of cowardice, tied their hands behind their backs, told everyone he was going to interrogate them, cleared the carriage, sodomised the two bound 16-year-old Irish soldiers, then shot them both in the back of the head, dead. Robert Baden-Powell was 39.

At first Robert Baden-Powell was awarded the Matabele Campaign Medal (1896–97) but was then banished from England. He clawed his way back into society, was promoted to the highest-ranking secular position in England, then elevated to Sir in 1909, Baronet in 1922, Baron in 1929 and then Lord the same year.

Robert Baden-Powell.

Baden-Powell was a flamboyantly gay sodomising double murderer and persona non grata in England until Queen Victoria died in 1901.

Baden-Powell was exiled from 1896 to 1903 (in South Africa and India with Kitchener) and returned to England as the Inspector General of Cavalry. He received 16 medals (although he rarely fought), started the Boy Scouts in 1908, was knighted in 1909, started Girl Guides in 1910 (with his sister Agnes) and was then asked to retire from the army by King Edward VII.

Baden-Powell (55) then married the psychiatrically challenged Olave St Claire Soames (23) in 1912. He then became the commerically influential Master of the Mercer's Company in 1913 (which now gifts £38 million annually), started Wolf Cubs in 1916, the Scoutmaster course in 1919, acclaimed himself as Chief Scout (for boys) in 1920 and was elevated with five titles, becoming Knight Commander of the Bath (1909), Knight Commander of the Victorian Order (1909), Baronet Baden-Powell (1921), Lord Baden-Powell of Gilwell (1929) and 1st Baron Baden-Powell (1929).

There was an investigation into Baden-Powell's double murder-rape and this was reported back to Queen Victoria and Kitchener (1850–1916). Luckily for Baden-Powell, Kitchener, seven years his senior, was also a murderous paedophile, so Kitchener put the necessary cover in place for Baden-Powell's future.

B-P.

B-P.

From this moment on, the eventual Lord Baden-Powell (39) and the soon-to-be Lord Kitchener (46) worked together and competed to commit and get away with the most horrific crimes commensurate with a failing empire – get in quick, cover up, deny, serve, commission oil portraits and offer complicit cover for each other.

After the murder-rape, Queen Victoria refused to allow Baden-Powell back into Britain. Kitchener and Baden-Powell served together in South Africa (1900–02) and India, keeping each other in comfort.

Kitchener, as chief-of-staff, then commander-in-chief, was credited with bringing the Boer War to an end and was elevated to Viscount for his efforts. Viscount is an ancient German title for which all sexual practices go unchallenged. It is the German equivalent of Knight and all the night rights that go with it. Amongst heterosexual Viscounts, 'night rights' included first sex with a bride on wedding night, but with Kitchener, it was night rights with young boys.

Robert Stephenson Smyth Baden-Powell performed intelligence work under commander-in-chief Horatio Herbert Kitchener (right) and received high praise for his military defense of Mafeking, which successfully resisted a 217-day siege in 1899/1900. More died of typhoid than in defense and B-P armed black Africans, betrayed their women, then starved them to death. Baden-Powell and Kitchener were oil paintings in their own lifetime and S&M oil paintings for each other.

In 1902 Baden-Powell returned to India with Lord Kitchener who became the 1st Earl of Khartoum and Commander-in-Chief of India (1902–09). India gave Horatio Herbert Kitchener (52) and Robert Stephenson Smyth Baden-Powell (45) an unlimited supply of brown boys in the form of servants.

Robert Baden-Powell and his buddy and co-protector Earl Kitchener had competitions to commit the most heinous crimes. Baden-Powell specialised in preparing children for paedophiles and Kitchener specialised in removing the protective biological fathers through war.

Kitchener had formerly won the 'most heinous crime' competition on 2 September 1898 with the five-hour genocide of 11,000 Dervishes with another 16,000 wounded and left to die on the fields (27,000 dead and wounded). The British were testing their new water-cooled machine guns. Only 500 on the British side were wounded or killed, mainly wounded, and mainly from friendly fire.

Kitchener then looted Khartoum, murdered many of the Khalifa's supporters, had the Mahdi's bones exhumed, drank from his skull, then threw his bones into the Nile. Curiously, Winston Churchill was the war correspondent and he named Kitchener “the Conqueror of Sudan”.

SCOUTING FOR BOYS
BY B-P
LIEUT. GEN. BADEN POWELL C.B.
Published by Horace Cox, Windsor House, Bream's Buildings, London E.C.

Baden-Powell.

Baden-Powell, like many gay men and paedophiles, was very involved in his own image. As such, he gave himself hero status by painting himself overcoming negro warriors in battle. Most of his paintings were of gallantry in the colonies – the sort of romantic propaganda that started up the boys' annuals – rosy cheeks, adventure, spiffing stuff – this is where it began, with Baden-Powell's rather talented watercolours. As an intelligence officer, little of this hands-on conflict occurred for Baden-Powell, although it was heavily imprinted in his overactive imagination.

The expertly projected vanity of Baden-Powell and dressing up in British African war uniform formed the basis of the Boy Scouts (Scouting for Boys) founded in 1908. Within a year of starting Boy Scouts he was elevated to a Knight (1909). There is no faster way to promotion than by providing masses of childen for higher-ranking paedophile predation.

In 1910, King Edward VII advised Baden-Powell to get out of the army. In 1911, B-P displayed 30,000 boys for scouting in front of the new King George V (1910–36). The Great European War (WWI) started six years later (1914–18) and the first Scout Masters' training camp was held in Gilwell, England in 1919.

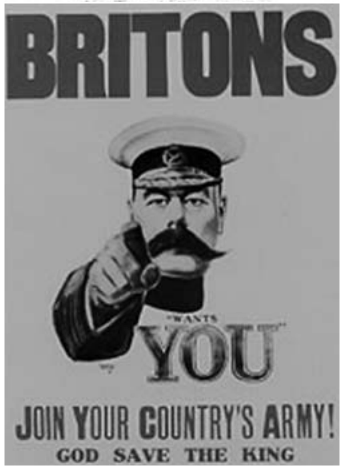
The imitation African war uniform and the many orphaned boys attracted many gay returned soldiers who also admired themselves in the regalia of war. The Boy Scouts were playing at war. It was the camaraderie of war, the male-to-male contact and the dressing up without the battle. It was a gays' war and Boy Scouts was a gay's version of war. Girls had ‘let's play house' and boys had ‘let's play survival without adversary'.

Baden-Powell.

It is debateable what side of the war Baden-Powell was on, but as leader of an emerging international movement, murderer, rapist, paedophile and flamboyant homosexual in a cover marriage to a psychiatrically challenged lesbian, he was in a unique position to spy and to be bribed by both sides. Paedophiles in power tend to be agents for anti-family conflict on the scale of war. As such, the power of paedophilia has always gone right to the top, especially in the military.

- treasurer@platinumparty.org -7 March 2013

B-P.



Lord Kitchener (bottom) used his commanding image on recruiting posters, saying, “Join Your Country's Army!” (with the capitalised letters code for ‘JC YA' – it was a Jewish conspiracy). The more fathers that died in war, the more fatherless children required mentorship, and that mentorship was offered by his paedophile buddy and fellow Lord, Chief Scout Baden-Powell.[1]

There was some comeuppance for Lord Kitchener and this story belies the truth of these claims. Lord Kitchener died on 5 June 1916 when the ship taking him to Russia was sunk by a mine with at least one other bomb inside the vessel.

Everyone wanted Kitchener dead.

[1] In the Boer War, Kitchener gave Australian soldiers the order to kill prisoners. When the Australians were charged and up for execution, Kitchener refused to confirm he had given the order and the Australians were executed.

Lord Kitchener's poster resulted in over 3000 recruits turning out on 14 August 1914. Bottom: Lord Kitchener leaving the War Office.

Kitchener was ruthless in the use of Commonwealth Allies. He was a paedophile. He was a secret society occult friend of Joseph Stalin and was taking the war in a direction the warmongers didn't want. The careers of the British Admiralty would be advanced by his passing so Kitchener was killed while taking gold to Stalin to break Russian procrastination and strengthen their resistance during WWI.

Lord Kitchener.

This was a Freemasonry-commissioned hit on the Empire's "greatest soldier", Britian's best hope for winning the war and the most celebrated cult figure of the times. Lord Horatio Herbert Kitchener, KG, KP, GCB, OM, GCST, GCMG, GCIE, Colonel Commandant Royal Engineers, Colonel of the Irish Guards and Secretary of State for War.

British Naval Intelligence Director Admiral Sir William 'Blinker' Hall in 'Room 40' (London) supplied the news to the Germans (in late May 1916) that Lord Kitchener was going to Russia and the alternative route he was to take. They even knew the Kriegsmarine officer in charge of the U-boat that was to sink the HMS Hampshire.

'Blinker' Hall.

Admiral Sir William 'Blinker' Hall (1870–1943) founded British Naval Intelligence, referred to as 'Room 40', during WWI. He was called 'Blinker' because of his chronic, almost mesmerising facial twitch, and even his official photograph captured him on the blink. As Director of British Naval Intelligence, he was responsible for codebreaking and he deciphered the hoax 'Zimmerman Telegram' in early 1917. This suggested a German plot to assist Mexico in annexing its US territory and was used to bring America into WWI.

Essentially, British Naval Intelligence Room 40 was a war creation room involved in assassinations, self-sabotage, mass murder, fake decoding, hoaxes, misdirecting its own Navy, and the war effort for continuation and expansion of war. It was the Freemasons' ORDER OUT OF CHAOS directed on a massive scale.

'Blinker' Hall was also responsible for naval decrypts in the Battle of Jutland in 1916. These were also misused by the Admiralty. 'Blinker' Hall was knighted in 1918 in recognition of his efforts in the Zimmerman affair (the hoax to bring America into WWI) and promoted to Rear-Admiral. Retiring from the Royal Navy in 1919, he entered Parliament the same year as Conservative MP for West Derby, Liverpool. Those who create war are elevated and elevations cover mistakes on the scale of war.

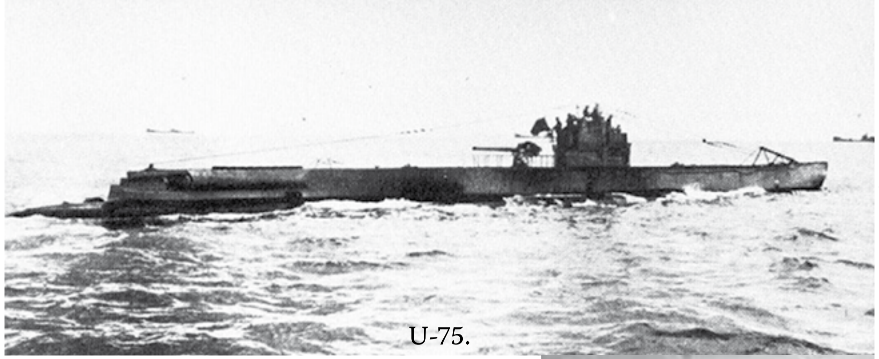
For the hit on Kitchener, the British Admiralty 'commissioned', through leaked information, the German Kapitänleutnant Curt Beitzen of the U-75. The rather large 57-metre U-boat had been modified to lay 38 mines. On 29 May 1916, Beitzen worked in the north Scotland channel two miles offshore and dumped 22 contact mines 7 metres below high water between the two rocky promontories – Marwick Head and the Brough of Birsay, about four miles apart. He did this between 3.30 am and 6 am and experienced no resistance from any British forces.

On 2 June the British Naval Trawler Laurel Crown struck one of the mines and sank. This sinking was kept very quiet by the English Fleet Directors (Freemasons). This area of sea either side of the Orkneys was not swept for mines due to "bad weather", which accounted for three of the next four days. It was previously thought that the U-boats did not have the range to reach the Orkney Islands. Regardless, this 13th mine was replaced just before dawn on 5 June 1916.

Kapitän Curt Beitzen.

Kapitän Beitzen was working to very stringent data provided by British Naval Intelligence and had even been told how wide the channel was. The mines were not chained to sea-anchors, so that meant they knew what kind of ship they were hunting. To a battleship or protected cruiser they were no danger, but to a light cruiser or destroyer, they would be fatal.

The British Admiralty also turned a blind eye to the Sinn Fein agents in positions on many of the British ships. These Irish agents took up naval positions in a plan to destroy a docked British fleet by placing large bombs in the ammunition rooms so that on a designated day the whole fleet sank.



U-75.

U-75 AEG mine.

Sinn Fein knew that if ships were intact when the war was over, Kitchener would use returning troops to attack Ireland. It was easier to take out Kitchener alone, or Kitchener on one ship, than to take out the entire British Fleet. This option also stopped the Germans from taking over Ireland at the end of the war.

- treasurer@platinumparty.org -

Ernst Carl, Germany's Master Spy in Britain, was working with Sinn Fein agents in England and Ireland. He and his compatriots sat in a pub on the Orkney Isles and watched the HMS Hampshire leave port three hours late. During the delay, they thought their plan had been discovered. It had, but the Freemasonry-dominated British Admiralty allowed the bombs to stay on board and removed the gold. The British Admiralty were now certain the Hampshire would sink.

Ernst Carl and Fritz Joubert Duquesne both claim credit for sinking the Hampshire but were both written off as not being involved by Scotland Yard. They were officially dismissed as 'agents in their own mind'. This is a common strategem employed when an incompetent outfit is faced by one that is competent. This stops any need for embarrassing arrests – and this ploy is still used to this day when dealing with Israeli saboteurs.

Duquesne.

HMS Hampshire.

Earlier in 1916, British Naval Intelligence Director Admiral Sir William 'Blinker' Hall instigated a policy of ensuring cooperation with other British Intelligence departments, exchanging data with MI-5, MI-6 and Scotland Yard's Special Branch. The police always cover for home turf military assassinations and take their orders from the Home Office and British Naval Intelligence, all of which are controlled by high-ranking Freemasons.

When it was discovered that bombs had been placed on board by others not involved in the British Admiralty hit, rather than remove the bombs, the sailing of the HMS Hampshire was delayed for three hours while the Admiralty had the gold removed. Lord Kitchener was then sent into a storm, without escort, into known mine territory.

Such was the complicity in killing Kitchener that the British Freemasons, the British Admiralty, the Irish Sinn Fein and German spies were all involved. Even the Sentries and Home Guard were complicit players. Lord Kitchener was effectively nursed to death by the British Admiralty.

On the evening of 4 June 1916, Kitchener took the train from London's King's Cross Station to Thurso. He then travelled on the HMS Royal Oak from Scrabster across the Pentland Firth to Scapa Flow, arriving on the morning of 5 June. From here he was to catch the HMS Hampshire to the Russian port of Archangel, the only port open to British ships.

Once in the large British Naval Base at Scapa Flow (it's gone now) the Royal Navy's commander-in-chief, Admiral Sir John Jellicoe (Freemason) joined Kitchener (Freemason) for lunch on the navy destroyer. Kitchener wanted to hear all about the Battle of Jutland off the coast of Denmark (31 May–1 June 1916), the greatest ever navy sea battle, in which thousands of men had just died. At the last minute Admiral Sir John Jellicoe advised Captain Savill, in view of the heavy weather, to take the more sheltered route west of the Orkneys.

The HMS Hampshire was delayed for three hours and then slipped off her mooring at 4.45 pm, passed out of Scapa Flow and was joined at 5.45 pm by the destroyers Unity and Victor.

The east route was regularly swept for mines but the west route was not. Britain's Laurel Crown had been sunk by a mine on the west route three days earlier. This had been kept secret and neither the west nor the east route had been swept for mines since. The exploded mine had been replaced by the German U-75 just before dawn. The British Admiral and Commander-in-Chief John Jellicoe was sending the Secretary of State for War Lord Kitchener through a passage where he knew there would be mines.

When the HMS Hampshire entered the open seas, the ships faced a head-on northerly Force-9 gale. The destroyer escorts could not sweep for mines in the high seas and were having trouble keeping up. At 6.20 pm Captain Herbert J. Savill ordered the destroyers to turn back. This was preordained and ensured no effective rescue.

Given the Force-9 storm, the lack of escort destroyers, no rescue craft, mines in the channel and the bombs on board, Kitchener's death was a certainty. At 7.30 pm, 1.5 miles off the rocky coast of Marwick Head, the HMS Hampshire hit one of the mines laid by the German U-boat.

All but one of the hatches was closed due to the weather. The explosion was not strong enough to blow the hatches and the closed hatches concentrated the fumes and began killing men. The order to ABANDON SHIP was given and the hatches were all opened to huge swells and raging seas. Thereafter, all orders were lost to the howling wind.

There were three explosions. The first was a mine that hit at the foremost boiler room (No. 1 Stokehold) and burst the boiler. This in turn tore out a section of her bottom and caused a flash fire to rip through the ship. Steam lines were cracked open and the fumes from high explosives penetrated all the way up to the upper stoker's mess deck and then to the uppermost compartments of the ship.

This was followed by a second explosion – a bomb that blew outwards very soon after – and a third explosion 15 minutes after that. These three explosions allowed the German U-boat, the German spies and the Sinn Fein to all claim responsibility for sinking the HMS Hampshire.

The German spy Fritz Joubert Duquesne claimed to have sunk the HMS Hampshire in The Man who Killed Kitchener (1932), as did Ernst Carl in One against England; the death of Lord Kitchener and the plot against the British fleet (1935). When it comes to big hits, there are often three avenues of death all working simultaneously and independently. Rightfully they can all claim part in the killing, just as each can use the others' actions for impunity.

The fire and the second explosion took out the generator and the ship was without lights. The wireless wouldn't function, the steering had failed, but the propellors were still moving. All of the lifeboat derricks had electric winches and were impossible to launch without the generator. What lifeboats did get away were immediately smashed against the ship's side.

Those left on board resorted to the Carley rafts. These round cork rafts with rope rail edges could hold 60 men, but no officers would get in them as they lacked the dignity required to abandon ship. One had to stand waist-deep in water. As a result, all of the officers including Kitchener perished.

Some waited in the life rafts as the ship sank, hoping to release themselves without the electrical winches, but the Hampshire somersaulted at the last minute and turned on them, crushing the lifeboats and all inside. Ships don't tend to invert unless they've been bombed from the inside.

Espavo 3020 - treasurer@platinumparty.org -7 March 2013

All but 12 of the seamen died from explosions, burns, poisonous gases, exhaustion, drowning and exposure in the icy waters. The No. 3 Carley raft started off with 40 men but was reduced to four by the time it was blown to shore and broken up. The four survivors clambered up a craggy rock cliff and crawled another 300 yards to a house where the farmers and fisherman from Birsay stripped their wet clothing and poured great quantities of hot tea and brandy into them.

Kitchener was not a good sailor and was prone to seasickness. The last any survivor saw of him was standing impassively on the fore-bridge in his khaki S.D. without his greatcoat. Having judged his chances of survival as virtually nil, he retained his dignity, refused to scramble, and gave himself up to the Force-9 seas. Kitchener's body was never recovered. All of his six staff perished, as did all the officers on the ship. No one survived who saw what happened to him. The War Minister died less than 3 miles (5 km) from the naval stronghold of Scapa Flow while in the care of the Royal Navy – 662 men were on board; 650 died; 12 survived.[2]

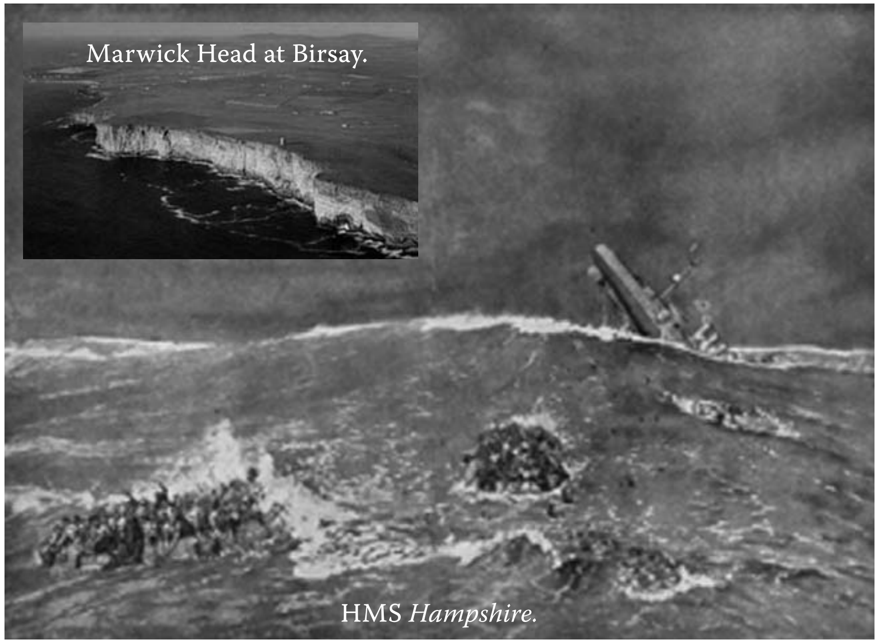
[2] Some sources suggest 643 died (not 650) and 12 survived.



Marwick Head at Birsay.

HMS Hampshire.

The sinking of the HMS Hampshire (painted above without the ship inverted) was observed on land by British Sentries from go-to-woe. The Sentries sent a telegram half an hour after the sinking at 8.20 pm: "Vessel Down". At 8.35 pm they sent: "Four Funnel Cruiser sunk 20-minutes ago. No assistance arrived yet. Send ships to pick up bodies." Two destroyers arrived at 10.30 pm with no survivors to rescue.

Public Record Office: Shortly after 9 pm Royal Navy's commander-in-chief, Admiral Sir John Jellicoe "directed Officer Commanding Western Patrol to take any action to warn all inhabitants along the coast to assist in any possible manner. A motor cyclist was despatched within a short period."

The local Home Guard at Orkney were then told that a German warship had been sunk and that they were to shoot any survivors. Some locals who wanted to help were "forcibly prevented under dire threats" and told "that all civilians were to remain in their houses and not to venture near the shore or we should be fired on". Armed soldiers posted on the cliffs around Birsay kept curious folk away at bayonet point.

The next day the whole sea was calm and by 9 am Commander-in-Chief Admiral Sir John Jellicoe informed the Admiralty: "I greatly fear there is little hope of there being any survivors as the whole shore has been searched."

Four hours later (1 pm) the Admiralty flashed an urgent message: "Lord Kitchener had a number of most secret and important official documents. Any wreckage floating about should be examined and precautions taken to watch the coast for wreckage drifting in." Within the hour all survivors were interviewed.

All communication between Orkney and the mainland was suspended and the "strictest censorship of letters and papers" in Scotland was ordered. It was emphasised that "no indication should be given of the Hampshire's position when it sank". All Orcadians who wanted to help were again turned back. 'Securing secret documents' was the excuse. If Kitchener or any others were found alive, they would have been killed on the spot.

Of the 12 survivors, William Bennett was the only Warrant Mechanic (10 survivors were Petty Officers). In his 2 pm affidavit he states: "Was officer on watch in the engine room. Explosion occurred in No. 1 Stokehold – there were two or more explosions, the second causing a cloud of yellow smoke and being slightly further aft than the first. A fire was started forward by the foremost magazine at which he was present and assisted to put out. First explosion probably caused by a mine, as there was a loud crack – subsequent explosions were not so violent, more like a 3-pounder gun going off."

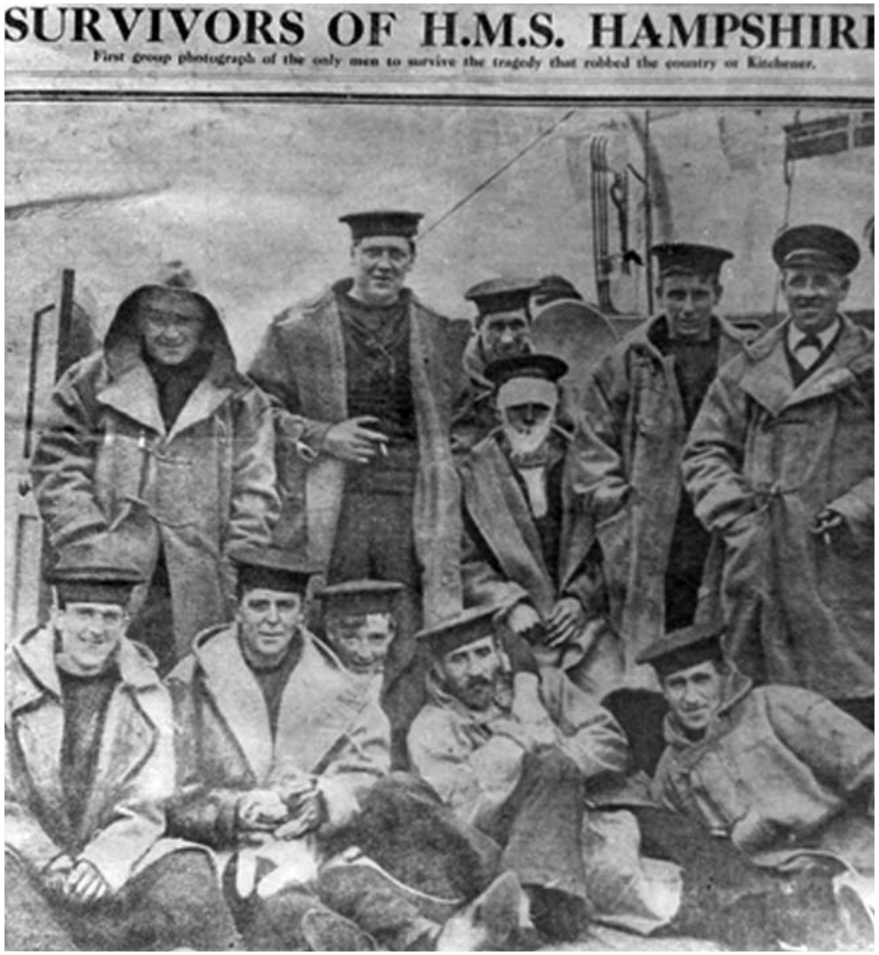
Petty Officer Samuel Sweeny: "Two explosions about a second a part, the second being less violent. Lyddite [military explosive] flames and smoke came up, hot and suffocating. Steering gear was broken down by explosion."

Leading Stoker Alfred Ernest Read: "Mess deck was filled with choking smoke and fumes so that men could not stay in it. Hatches which were battened down were not blown off by explosion." The mine and the weather combined to create a death trap for the men.

Petty Officer Wilfred Wesson: "Saw Lord Kitchener in gun room flat with a naval officer; they both went up [to the] hatch before him. Naval officer shouted to make way for Lord Kitchener." The Poms resort to using the British class system at the very moment you'd expect them to use their brains – whenever there is an emergency.

Leading Seaman Charles Rogerson: "Ship went down by the head. Saw propellers working after he left her. Saw about four Military Officers in Khaki and one in a blue suit and hard hat on quarter deck after the explosion, but saw no more of them after going to his station forward." No other seamen saw Kitchener after that. It appears that he and his staff were washed overboard.

A 13th man, naval writer Petty Officer John Downes (24), survived the sea but died of exposure soon after. Although naval writers are pretty much clerks, it was imperative that no one with first-hand knowledge record what happened. Those who survived were sworn to silence. Their affidavits, typical of naval recording, were conflicting and minimalist and their newspaper interviews were purposely limited responses.



SURVIVORS OF H.M.S. HAMPSHIR

First group photograph of the only men to survive the tragedy that robbed the country of Kitchener.

A dive in early 2003 showed that at least one of the explosions that sunk the HMS Hampshire had blown outwards. This would back up the claims of Ernst Carl and Fritz Joubert Duquesne to have sunk the Hampshire. In the least, they may have contributed to it, but it was probably the old intelligence trick of a U-boat acting as a cover for sabotage. It is clear, though, that the operation did rid Britain of its much celebrated and honoured mass-murdering sadistic paedophile.

When a British General announced the death of Secretary of War Lord Kitchener to British soldiers behind the front line at Eataple, the soldiers cheered the news of Kitchener's death so much that the British General thought he had been misheard. So he announced Kitchener's death again and got the same response. An Australian Officer observed that "the natives are a bit pissed off with Pommie Generals and have been ever since the Somme Push in France. They think the Pommie Generals want them dead."

Spymaster: "Kitchener was assassinated by a joint British and German effort for the sole purpose of removing a rampant and overt child-fucker and mass-murderer from the military hierarchy. Everyone hates a child-fucker. They survive because they are easily controlled and therefore commonly saluted. Because of their deviousness and because their methods know no bounds, they make good spies and are easily utilised by both sides. 'Here is the information, where is the child?' They also have a ruthless disregard when sending breeding males to their deaths and remain the only sexual group comfortable murdering children."

Espavo Sozo - treasurer@platinumparty.org - 7 March 2013

HMS Hampshire survivor Petty Officer Walter Charles Farnden (Stoker 1st Class K. 18337): "That there was a deliberate plot to do away with Lord Kitchener has often been rumoured. It has been said that the Germans were aware of the projected voyage and sent the Hampshire to the bottom . . . by a mine laid purposely on its course . . . subsequent sweeping in the vicinity where the Hampshire went down accounted for twelve of the thirteen mines known to have been laid by the submarine U-75 as a preliminary to the enemy's action at Jutland [30/31 May 1916]."[3] The thirteenth mine sank the Hampshire.

The HMS Hampshire (1905) was an armoured cruiser of some 11,000 tons, 150 yards long, with a crew of 655, that could travel at 23 knots. The British Royal Navy's Commander-in-Chief, Admiral Sir John Jellicoe (5 December 1859–20 November 1935), knew there was a full crew, knew of the mines, the removal of the escorts, the bombs on board, the Sinn Fein navy staff plots, and the weather. He knew all of these facts and rightly considered himself responsible for the death of the Secretary of State for War, Lord Kitchener, yet he was not reprimanded in any way for the 650 deaths, nor was the issue of the gold ever raised.

Admiral Sir John Jellicoe.

First Sea Lord Sir John Jellicoe.

As First Lord of the Admiralty, Winston Churchill (Freemason) appointed Sir John Jellicoe (Freemason) second-in-command of the Grand Fleet in November 1911. He was then made Commander of the Fleet on 4 Aug. 1914. After the (31 May–1 June 1916) Battle of Jutland, Admiral Sir John Jellicoe was known for his unwillingness to risk and lose warships. This provided further cover for his part in the murder of Lord Kitchener, his six staff, 643 seamen and the loss of the HMS Hampshire.

The orders for the sinking of the HMS Hampshire came from those responsible and available for Admiralty promotions.

Rather than be reprimanded, Admiral Sir John Jellicoe was promoted to First Sea Lord within six months, effectively making him Naval Chief of Staff. But with a new view on events, he was abruptly removed from office on Christmas Eve of 1917 by the new coalition Prime Minister David Lloyd George (1916–22). As Chancellor of the Exchequer (1905–15), Minister of Munitions (1915), Secretary for War (7 June 1916) after Kitchener's assassination, and 1st Earl of Dwfor, he would have known what had happened to Kitchener and the gold.

A film about the life of Prime Minister David Lloyd George was made in 1918, mysteriously suppressed, lost, and premiered 78 years later in Wales in 1996.

In his retirement, former Admiral Sir John Jellicoe wrote The Grand Fleet 1914–1916 (1919) and The Crisis of Naval War (1921). As is so common in secret society mass murders, he was swished to the colonies and made Governor-General of New Zealand (Sept. 1920–Nov. 1924), where only a select few knew he was "the man who killed Kitchener". He returned to England in 1925 and was further elevated to Earl, becoming Viscount Sir John Jellicoe, GCB, OM, GCVO. He was buried in the much-admired St Paul's Cathedral in Nov. 1935 in the wing dedicated to Lord Kitchener and the WWI dead.

Lord Robert Stephenson Smyth Baden-Powell of Gilwell
London-born Robert Baden-Powell had something of a history of a gay man. His father was an Anglican reverend and mathematics professor who taught at Oxford. He died when Robert was three. Robert Baden-Powell was then raised by an overbearing mother and did not marry until he was 55. When he did marry in 1912, it was to a 23-year-old naïve tomboy named Olave St Claire Soames (22 February 1889–1977), who was born on the same day of the year as him. From 1927 the date of '22 February' became the Boy Scouts' and Girl Guides' 'World Thinking Day'. Olave St Claire Soames took over the Girl Guides in 1912 and specialised in laxative biscuits and continuing to say 'No', as was the Victorian way – and the lesbian way.

Baden-Powell's marriage caused an international sensation amongst the 100,000 Boy Scouts, who despaired and speculated that it would bring an end to the Chief's Scouting and its flavour of well-presented public homosexuality imbued with an allegiance to denial . . . "Be Prepared to Deny".

"Instead Olave St Claire Soames' boundless exuberant tomboy energy led to her being called 'The Mother of Millions'. Her unflagging support of Baden-Powell helped Scouting to grow even faster, and her own vision saw Guiding become the largest organisation for girls and women [virgins and lesbians] ever seen. She found meaning to her life which has profoundly affected millions of women this century and will continue to have influence into the future."[4] Yep. All Girl Guides practised kissing each other then became paedophile minders, just like their 'mother of millions'.

B-Prepared to deny.

The 55-year-old Baden-Powell married the pyschiatrically challenged 23-year-old naïve tomboy, Olave St Claire Soames – perfect paedophile cover. In the First Provincial Training Camp a 1927 hermaphrodite lesbian (or man-in-a-dress) tugs on a rope with teenage girls still open to direction. Boy Scouts and Girl Guides were a sexual tug-of-war and there was a lot of pulling going on.

The naïve lesbian and psychiatrically challenged Olave St Claire Soames married the world's most prolific and murderous paedophile-enabler, and five years later he held the most powerful secular position in Great Britain – 'Master of Companies'.

In reality, Olave St Claire née Soames Baden-Powell became the most efficient in a long line of paedophile-enablers – the women who enable paedophiles to function. Edwina Mountbatten and Astrid Malcom were others. Picked for their stupidity, they led vicarious lives empty of self-accomplishment and battled with overwhelming guilt.

Lady Baden-Powell in the 30 June 1945 "People wake up to Paedophilia" rally, as she prepares to speak to an empty field eight weeks after WWII ended. Still going, in 1958 Australians rewarded her with a large melt-free icecream and in 1961 she found more eager paedophile minders in the Stadacona Gym in Halifax.

It's a tragedy that their stupidity and psychiatric conditions prevented them from acknowledging what they were part of.

The British monarchy had strong ties with Germany. Their name remained Saxe-Coburg-Gotha until 17 July 1917, and the writing on the Prince of Wales' crest, a position held by every future King of England, read "Ich Dien". This was German for "I serve", essentially saying, "I serve Germany". Baden-Powell's relationship with the Germans was more or less confirmed by his contacts within the British military and hierarchy, the British monarchy acting purposefully towards another German takeover of Britain.

The Germans, known by the British as 'cousins', had no laws against child prostitution and openly used streetwalkers as young as 11. Child porn is still legal in Germany today and this made the German customs very attractive to the British monarchy, who actively supported all forms of paedophilia as "the sport of royals". This went some way to bringing the sexually deviant British Royal Family towards sabotaging their own country's defences, exemplified in the most extraordinary way by the bisexual King Edward VIII – a Nazi informant/avid supporter and sexual deviant who was not immune to giving Hitler British state secrets.

Espavo S020 - treasurer@platinumparty.org -7 March 2013

> Some people will do anything and everything to make amends and overcome the crimes of their past. After his double murder-sodomy rape, Baden-Powell started the Boy Scout movement, was a tireless artist romanticising colonial life in the colonies, and a spy. Spying was a way back into the fold for disgraced persons. You got caught, got swished out, did some active spying, survived and then returned to favour.

Baden-Powell published Scouting for Boys (1908), My Adventures of a Spy (1915), The Adventures of a Spy (1924) and Scouting for Boys in India (1932) among others. The 1908 version showed a topless boy lying down in striped pants peering over a cliff with a Scout Master's staff and hat nearby. The entire picture focusses on the ten-year-old boy's raised posterior. It is homo-erotic and paedo-erotic to say the least. Baden-Powell's favourite play was Peter Pan, but the most telling title on him was Tim Jeal's The Boy-Man (1990).

As is common with paedophiles and murderers, when you get away with the crime you are knighted. Robert Stephenson Smyth Baden-Powell was elevated to 'Sir' 13 years after his murder-rape (1896/1909) and elevated to Lord Baden-Powell of Gilwell 33 years later (1929), once he had maintained the continual supply of children to paedophiles while bypassing the tedium of war. His authorship, spying, and 'Scouting for Boys' provided him with a believable cover which his five-time elevation recognised. He also received 28 foreign orders and decorations and the keys to over twenty cities worldwide, including London. This prevented him from ever being charged.

> A shameful personal history was very useful to the ruling British Empire. As a Knight and a Lord this made him respectable, influential and imminently bribeable. Baden-Powell became an agent for anyone who had the wood on him, which is why he survived – he was useful to both sides. It was sometimes unclear which side Baden-Powell was on and even which side the British monarchy was on. Sabotage ran rampant at the highest levels in Britain – Ich Dien.
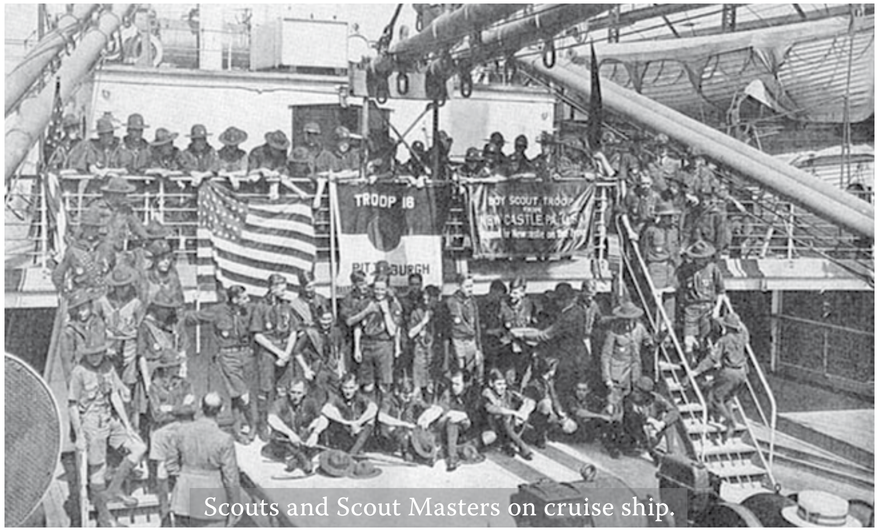
> Baden-Powell was working for an organisation that had its allegiance over and above the sights of the British Empire. Baden-Powell's job was to attract other noteables into the paedophile movement so that they too could be bribed, made to spy and give results at no expense. This he duly did by having Jamborees at various castle holdings around England, northern Europe, the Commonwealth and America. Regardless of country, the overarching ideology was the collusion of silence and providing an arena for paedophilia.



Scouts and Scout Masters on cruise ship.

In August 1933 Baden-Powell left on a cruise ship with his psychiatrically-gymnastic wife and 650 Guides and Scouts and travelled to Holland, Poland, Lithuania, Latvia, Estonia, Finland, Sweden, and Norway, returning to England the same month. By 1933 the Nazis had come to power in Germany, and in less than ten years all but one of the countries Baden-Powell visited would be occupied by Germany or Russia and the world would be at war. Exported paedophilia has long been a precursor to taking over countries as it compromises their leaders. Ideological and physical battles then firm up the changes with a predetermined outcome.

The Scouts and Guides were both 'front and bait' and the countries visited later became the subject of the Molotov-Ribbentrop Pact (1939). In the Secret Additional Protocol of the Pact, Article I states "the sphere of influence of Lithuania including its northern border, goes to Germany . . . [and] . . . the spheres of influence in Finland, Estonia and Latvia goes to the USSR."[5]

Baden-Powell competed to be the most notorious person of the new twentieth century. As Sir Baden-Powell (1909) and then Lord Baden-Powell (1929), he was to become the largest supplier of children to paedophiles for the next 75 years, with over 200 recorded complaints of paedophilia each year. His Lordship gave him the blind cover needed from other Lords, making Lordship and the Boy Scouts 'a complicit child-molesting and open child-trafficking movement between towns and countries'.

By the 1980s there were Boy Scouts in over 100 different countries, resulting in over 100,000 sexual complaints against Scout Masters. Due to the shame factor, public sector damage, the influence of lordships and payoffs, the number of prosecutions was limited to 16,000. Nevertheless, paedophile wings in prison wards were named after particularly perverted Boy Scout Masters such as the 'Sergeant Dan Wing' in Wi Tako Prison.

A Boy Scout prepares to take it up the arse for Jesus.

Elevation establishes cover with others of the same title, with service and complicity from the police, judiciary, social services, tenants, and the head-bowing blind service of those who envy their title.

Lordship established reasonable doubt, where otherwise there would have been discharge, medal stripping, judicial mayhem, convictions, and public executions – generally the fall of the British Empire decades before it actually occurred. It was complicit support from elevated paedophiles – peers, barons, viscounts, earls, marquess, dukes, (Lords), cabinet ministers and judges (Honourables) – that maintained the British Empire for as long as it did.

The Boy Scouts wore their uniforms, gave a helping hand to the public and were prepared for almost anything – except sexual abuse. Their motto "BE PREPARED" had the same initials as their vain solipsist Baden-Powell (BP). But the homo-erotic life of the Boy Scouts could not prepare "the young boys who were scouted" for the sexual advances of their paedophilic masters.

Baden-Powell conferencing with Sioux Chief Dr Eastman at Queens' College in England, 1928. This was quickly followed by some Scouts' cross-dressing.
Baden-Powell: "You mean I could wear that."
Sioux Chief Dr Eastman: "There's a changing room over there. We'll both still be Scouts. Wanna go (left)."
Baden-Powell: "The kids will love this (right)."

> It is common knowledge amongst gays that their preference is underaged heterosexual boys whose father has been removed, permanently, temporarily, or just for the day. The post-war Boy Scouts provided this scenario in greater abundance than any had seen before.

Gay men were banned from Boy Scouts – however, under the communist-created United Nations, whose most irritating branch is Human Rights, there can be no exclusions, so gays had to be let back into the Boy Scouts. However, what most straight, naïve and blind-faith parents don't realise is that gay men are 44 times more predatory to under-16-year-olds than straight men, and lesbians (Guiding Girls to lesbianism) are 88 times more predatory to under-16-year-olds than heterosexuals.

> As sexually abused children, the Boy Scouts grew up to be polite-rosy-cheeked-two-faced-white-collar-criminals who were, by and large, sexually bent themselves and established a collusion of cover amongst equally 'respectable' child-sex abusers. They in turn joined such adult organisations as the Freemasons with their reputation as goat mounters – goats being adult kids.
> To this day, these sexual deviants dominate immigration (paedophiles) and public relations (child-sex abusers), with 'respectable' meaning "paedophile minder" and the Freemasons sexually abusing a third of their daughters and grandchildren.
> Former Boy Scouts, Girl Guides, Anglo/Catholics and Freemasons now control such paedophile organisations as the misnamed 'Family Court', which dedicates itself to the removal of fathers from families and exposing children to paedophiles, not just for the weekend, but full-time.
> The paedophile movement is full of respectable dissidents that we are just learning to disavow ourselves of. The new paedophile movement, the Family Court, is the national branch of the United Nations, which is the public front of the KGB, whose desire is social control over the Western world.
> Political Correctness is the primary sign of the KGB in the West and should be treated as such. Political Correctness (Moscow, May 1921) is also a major player in the paedophile movement, some suggesting that it stands for 'Paedophile Country'.

> PC has certainly made biological fathering illegal and biological fathers are the primary barrier against paedophilia, with 99.8% of all paedophilia occurring only when the biological father is absent (that's 998 out of 1000 cases).

The Nazis banned the Boy Scouts and absorbed them into the homo-erotic Hitler Youth movement led by the homosexual-paedophile von Schirach.

The Communists also banned Boy Scouts but gathered about themselves sexual deviants from around the world, supplied them with every sexual perversion, filmed this, and then assisted their promotions into local and national government positions in every Western nation. It was through exploiting the sexual perversion, somewhat based on the Boy Scout model, that Russia and China infiltrated all Western nations and won the Cold War.

The Nazis and the Communists suppressed Scouting for 50 years until 1989 when the Berlin Wall fell and communism supposedly collapsed, but in reality, had spread so insidiously throughout the Western world through sexual deviancy that the Wall became a symbolic leapfrog to success.

> The removal of the wall in November 1989 meant 'peace', and peace meant "no resistance to communism", which in turn meant that communism was 'dictating family, social and sexual policy in Western nations'. Even the sexually proud, socialistic and much-scammed French will tell you this is exactly what happened.

It is now up to parents to stop sending their children to Boy Scouts and Girl Guides, and to vet gay males (including teachers) so that they will not be around their sons without a dominant and ever-present heterosexual influence. The same goes for Girl Guides, whose leaders teach girls the lesbian method of birth control – have practice sex with girls. Parents also need to vet lesbian teachers out of schools, especially all-girls schools, and maintain a heterosexual female influence without the over-mothering mind control that creates unwanted dependency.

> The paedophile movement was helped enormously by the Boy Scouts and this was backed up by UNICEF, the United Nations Children's Fund which used Baden-Powell's paintings as greeting cards to commemorate the International Year of the Child in 1979.

Espavo Sozo - treasurer@platinumparty.org -7 March 2013

> UNICEF is of course a branch of the United Nations and the United Nations was gifted to Joseph Stalin for a seven days' war (9–15 August 1945). Stalin was the Mafia boss from October 1927–March 1953. He had Trotsky assassinated (21 August 1940), and Stalin was himself assassinated 13 years later by MAD. Both were willingly involved in mass murder.

Baden-Powell's family were big players in the enormous list of Livery companies called Mercers and they started many of the Guilds. His family history shows 32 Mercers and 8 Head Mercers (since 1794), more than any other family. The Mercers date back to Dick Whittington, the author and Mayor of London. The Mercers were the equivalent of the American Skull & Bones/Book & Snake (S&B/B&S) and gave immunity from prosecution from things like murder, sodomy, genocide and creating wars.

Incorporated by Royal Charter in 1394, the Mercers' Company is the premier Livery Company of the City of London. Over many centuries members of the Company and other benefactors have left money in trust for the Company to 'administer for charitable purposes'.

The Mercers run Guilds from Actuaries to World Traders, from Weavers (AD 1155) to Builders Merchants and Environmental Cleaners (2001). Currently there are 24,000 Liverymen, in 38 Companies that have their own Halls, with 85 that maintain day-to-day trade. In the Guilds, professionals and tradespeople pay a joining fee and an annual fee to be a certified member of their trade or profession.

Having control over a Guild means that you hold the licence as to whether or not a person can practise in their chosen profession, and therefore, whether they earn a respectable living, a highly respectable living with social support, or whether they scrape by doing odd-jobs and can never secure a mortgage. The Guilds gave the Mercers and the Baden-Powells huge complicity amongst the working public.

> You're either in or out with the Baden-Powells and therefore the commercial arm of Great Britain.

One of the Guilds is for the very influential Scriveners – writers of court letters and legal documents. No one would dare publish Baden-Powell's double murder-sodomy. So rather than be evicted from the Mercers for the double murders, 17 years later B-P was made the Master of the Company, one of the top secular positions in England. To this day, 18 years remains the standard delay from paedophilia/murder to elevation.

Espavo Sozo - treasurer@platinumparty.org -7 March 20

The 102 Livery Companies of the City of London give away over £38 million annually. This gifting, and the control over so many trades and professions, has given enough economic influence to place army generals in foreign countries and governors-generals in the British colonies –as well as telling them who to trust and how best to cover up.

Orders, knighthoods, lordships and governors-generalships collude in this way and are often bought, resulting in those with the worst histories attaining the top positions. If it's family – cover up, promote, make sure the perpetrators are seen to be involved in charity work, photograph them with famous others, paint them frequently in oils, hang their portraits in public galleries and libraries, place busts in front of courthouses and their statues in town squares. As such, Baden-Powell exhibited a bust of colonial pioneer John Smith at the Royal Academy in 1907 and started Boy Scouts the following year in 1908.

> 'Public Relations Practitioners' is currently a Guild and on its way to becoming a Company, City Company and then a Livery Company. When a PR company becomes a Livery Company, the truth is owned by a very small, select group bound up in all the troubles and history outlined above. As a result, paedophilia is tightly bound and never makes it through to the media. The Mercers control the Chartered Secretaries & Administrators, Information Technologists, Public Relations Practitioners, Scriveners, Stationers and Newspaper Makers. Paedophilia is a closed loop and it is the economic Stone Age if you challenge.

Essentially, Guilds are philanthropic Companies that began in medieval times as Guild fraternities to protect the interests and practitioners of particular trades. In 1878 a group of 16 Companies, together with the Corporation of the City of London, founded the City and Guilds of London Institute to promote and foster the teaching of technical trades. Baden-Powell (22) was elected a member the following year in 1879. In 1905 this merged with the Royal College of Mines to form the Imperial College. Both owe their financial support to City Livery Companies. Baden-Powell became Master of the Imperial College and Master of the Company in 1913 (just before the outbreak of WWI), the most powerful non-military position in Britain outside religion, the monarchy and outright wealth.

> The Guilds include: Air Pilots & Air Navigators, Apothecaries (medicine), Arbitrators, Armourers & Brasiers (armour-makers and workers in brass), Bakers, Barbers (also surgeons and dentists), Basketmakers, Blacksmiths, Bowyers (longbow makers), Brewers, Broderers (embroiderers), Builders Merchants, Butchers, Carmen, Carpenters, Chartered Accountants, Chartered Architects, Chartered Secretaries & Administrators, Chartered Surveyors, Clockmakers, Clothworkers, Coachmakers & Coach Harness Makers, Constructors, Cooks, Coopers (barrel makers), Cordwainers (workers in fine leather), Curriers (dressers of tanned leather), Cutlers, Distillers, Drapers, Dyers, Engineers, Environmental Cleaners, Fan Makers, Farmers, Farriers (shoers of horses/veterinary surgeons), Feltmakers (hats), Firefighters, Fishmongers, Fletchers (arrow makers), Founders, Framework Knitters, Fruiterers, Fuellers, Furniture Makers, Gardeners, Girdlers (girdles and belts as clothing), Glass Sellers, Glaziers, Glovers, Gold & Silver Wyre Drawers (gold and silver braid for uniforms), Goldsmiths, Grocers, Gunmakers, Haberdashers, Horners, Information Technologists, Innholders, Insurers, Ironmongers, Joiners and Ceilers, Launderers, Leathersellers, Lightmongers, Loriners (stirrups and other harness for horses), Makers of Playing Cards, Marketers, Masons, Master Mariners, Mercers (general merchants), Merchant Taylors (tailors), Musicians, Needlemakers, Painter Stainers, Patternmakers (makers of wooden clog-style footwear), Paviors (paving, highways), Pewterers, Plaisterers (plasterers), Plumbers, Poulters, Saddlers, Salters, Scientific Instrument Makers, Scriveners (writers of court letters and legal documents), Shipwrights, Skinners, Solicitors, Spectaclemakers, Stationers & Newspaper Makers, Tallowchandlers, Tinplate Workers, Tobacco Pipe Makers & Tobacco Blenders, Turners, Tylers & Bricklayers, Upholders (upholsterers), Vintners, Water Conservators, Wax Chandlers, Weavers, Wheelwrights, Woolmen (winders and packers of wool).
> City companies without livery include Parish Clerks, Watermen & Lightermen, Hackney Carriage Drivers, International Bankers, Management Consultants, Tax Advisors, Educators, Security Professionals and Public Relations Practitioners.

After completing his public (posh) schooling at Charterhouse, Baden-Powell entered the Army and was excused from all training due to brilliant test results (and connections). In 1888 he acted as an intelligence officer in the African campaigns against the Zulus. In 1890 he was placed under the care of his uncle, Sir H. A. Smyth, governor of the fortress in Malta. To avoid physical contact, both in battle and with the other soldiers, he was named Chief British Intelligence Officer for the Mediterranean and was required to determine the military strength of the Austrians and obtain all Balkan troop positions.

"Baden-Powell (32) practised espionage with inventive if not outlandish disguises. Assuming the disguise of a naturalist, he scouted the fortifications in Herzegovina, a province in the Austro-Hungarian Empire (later absorbed into Yugoslavia). Wearing spectacles with thick lenses, and carrying a butterfly net, Baden-Powell appeared to be a befuddled lepidopterist seeking rare butterfly specimens. In this pose, he wandered close to defense positions and was a source of amusement to the guards as he scurried about waving his net wildly in attempts to catch elusive butterflies. Baden-Powell was a talented artist who quickly drew sketches of the Austrian fortifications, cleverly concealing these drawings inside larger sketches of butterflies so that when they were inspected by Austrian censors they went undetected."[6] Baden-Powell's ability to make quick, accurate, pre-camera sketches, his tracking skills, his flair for amateur theatrics and his natural persona as a flamboyant non-threatening homosexual made him one of England's most eccentric and accomplished pre-WWI spies.

Horatio Herbert Kitchener commanded the Egyptian Cavalry (1882–1924) and served in the 1883–85 Sudan Campaign. In 1898 he massacred 27,000 Dervishes in Sudan and was then elevated to 1st Earl of Khartoum and Commander-in-Chief of India (1902), Chief-of-Staff, Viscount, Colonel Commandant Royal Engineers, Colonel of the Irish Guards, Secretary of State for War and KG, KP, GCB, OM, GCST, GCMG, GCIE. He died from a government-sanctioned assassination on 5 June 1916.

Admiral Sir John Jellicoe sunk the HMS Hampshire, killing 650 including Lord Kitchener. He was elevated within six months to First Sea Lord (1916) and Governor-General of New Zealand (1920–24), where he would stop a parade if a boy approached. He was made Earl in 1925 and died in 1935. He was buried in the same north-west tower of St Paul's Chapel as the (effigy of) Lord Kitchener that he murdered.

Baden-Powell committed a double-murder homosexual rape in Ashanti in 1896. He was then elevated to 'Sir' in London (1909), Baronet (1922), Baron (1929) and Lord the same year. He died in 1941. By 1950 there was a plan to replace the Boy Scouts (and the Church) with the Family Court, to maintain access to unfathered children. This occurred worldwide.

Gurdjieff teaches Stalin and Hitler

Georges Ivanovich Gurdjieff (1866–1949) was a Greek-Armenian who purported to be a mystic and spiritual teacher, when he was in fact a charlatan who trained warmongers to 'Be Prepared'. He established the 'Institute for the Harmonious Development of Man', but it turned out to be another eugenics society, drawing money from stupid socialites.

Gurdjieff was born in Alexandropol (now Gyumri, Armenia) and grew up across the border in nearby Kars, in Eastern Turkey. He travelled through nearby Central Asia, Egypt and Rome before teaching in Moscow and St Petersburg in 1913. During the 1917 Bolshevik Revolution he returned to his family home in Alexandropol.

Gurdjieff in Alexandropol with his dogs, cat and cigarette.

In January 1919 he moved to nearby Tbilisi and in May 1920 he moved to Istanbul, rented an apartment and watched the Whirling Dervishes. In August 1921 he travelled around Western Europe giving lectures in Berlin and London, and in October 1922 he established the 'Institute for the Harmonious Development of Man', just south of Paris.

In 1924 he was almost killed in a car crash and spent the next nine years writing two books, most of which made little sense. During WWII he lived in Paris (occupied by the Germans) and continued to teach.

Gurdjieff was closely involved with MI-6 throughout WWI.

Intelligence were clever enough to use agents and Cut Outs (someone who doesn't trace back) and put various questions to him. Because he was not stressed by the status of his contact, he answered off the top of his head. These were the answers the British sought and they contributed greatly to the development of agent training.

Gurdjieff was adept at pretending that nothing was happening when the agent was being put through a number of experiences. The time that was most valuable in an agent's training was supposedly recreation time. To Gurdjieff this was always sexual. He was the guru that introduced sex to the GRU and the KGB. He literally created the mythical Soviet Swallows who could root a hundred men and describe the length of their dicks in order as they entered. He was once asked by the British where the best prostitutes could be found. Matter-of-factly he said: "Go and see the police. They lock them up and fuck them, lock them up and fuck them, and it goes on and on ad infinitum."

When the Soviets started the first military training school for spies at Frunze in 1918, they used a lot of Gurdjieff's techniques, and it was virtually an updated copy of what they had at Tavistock prior to WWI. The only thing that changed from the beginning of the war to the end of the war was the British removal of all references to compulsion (threats of force and violence) from the syllabus. Every entrant to either the British or Soviet war academies believed it was an honour to be chosen and they were there solely for the best reasons.

The mistakes the Germans made during the war of asking agents to pop up to the Director's Office so that she, the director, could personally finish them off with a Luger were completely avoided. Executions usually took place in her office, but on rare occassions, when she got frustrated, the hallway was considered good enough, often just prior to graduation. If they didn't improve radically within a week, they were dead. It's no coincidence that the British are regarded as the gentlemen of the intelligence world. For all that, they are no less murderous. The funny thing with the British is that they paid for the care of the German female doctor (Dr Elizabeth S.) who ran the espionage school against them during WWI. This was not altruism. Anywhere groups of foreigners live, MI-6 swoops on them for their spy schools, or Tavistock. Contracts are usually for life and the training clinics are usually staffed by Catholic Nuns in non-Catholic countries, like Switzerland.

Spymaster: "Make of this what you will, but it indicates insider spy and intelligence training across borders and disregarding allegiance. How Intelligence is programmed during war is watered down and used to programme the masses during peacetime. Gurdijieff said, 'You have to work with people who want to do what they are doing. If all your prostitutes are sex addicts, or actually wish to be rooting like mink, then things will be a lot more pleasurable for all concerned. There is no need to resort to compulsion', and in the case of Lady Edwina Mountbatten, Gurdjieff was absolutely right.

"Gurdjieff was a maker of policy and an in-depth thinker on the subject of spy training, which is what made him so valuable to intelligence on both sides. He was not the first spymaster in history to cultivate the mental health fallback position – that he was insane [for painting birds]. Gurdjieff was watched and his watchers were German, so they were very thorough. All through the occupation of Paris he would ocassionally acquire a dead bird, knowing that this fact would be taken straight back to the Gestapo.

"Gurdjieff would often have lunch with the Chief of the Gestapo in Paris. These were often shared with high-ranking MI-6 officers and resistance men. Gurdjieff knew that espionage was a huge racket in which only the honourable suffer. The fact that the Chief of Gestapo in Paris escaped with the German Army, was brought back, tried, and suffered not the slightest problem from French justice, indicates that the British and French Gestapo came to an understanding that transcended all the deaths of their British and French agents – the psychological manipulation of the masses after the war.

"Pauline Koller relates in her book I Was Hitler's Maid that Hitler kept homosexual and heterosexual porn in his quarters at the Obersalzberg, in his bedroom and in the rooms he used, and how the doppelgängers would sit at a table and talk about their grandchildren and one by one, as the war approached, they met with accidents or got killed, or would just vanish, but they always talked about their grandchildren. Hitler never did. He had no topic of discussion in this area whatsoever. The other Hitlers had a camaraderie that if two or three were present they would instantly begin discussion, but if Hitler was present, no discussion took place."

Pauline Koller contracted tuberculosis from a friendly doctor by taking bacillus and was thus removed from Hitler's service. She moved to France and even encouraged her fiancé to come. Her book ends with her in the invidious position of being in Paris and happily waving her husband off to war. She never thought that the whole world would gang up on Hitler's side and he would be able to defeat the powers of the Western Alliance so easily and take over Paris like a walk in the park.

That Gurdjieff was kept alive in German-occupied Paris during WWII and was allowed to keep teaching, further placed him as a servant of war. His message was undirectional and his effect was also on the minds of lost socialite waifs. He died in an American hosptial in Neuilly-sur-Seine on 29 October 1949 and there are now over 60 'Harmonious Development of Man' centres in America, one in London, one in Paris and several more across Europe. If it is useless, people will flock to it. If it's ultimately about genocide, it will be funded.

In war, the major influences are the occult, the banks and politics. Politics ignores the occult until it has money. Socialites also ignore the occult until it is backed by money, and the occult is often backed by money once one or more of the socialites take an interest in the occult group. When an occultist is from a foreign country, they are all the more interesting to the socialites. It activates their imagination and saves getting dusty in exotic travel.

English Freemasonry was not short on cash. The men were boring and the wives were in need of exotic stimulus. In this way, English Freemasonry began to socially and financially support occult groups who then vied for power (patronage), doing so through various spooky tricks, not the least of which was the séance with inside social knowledge.

Britain's Golden Dawn and Germany's Thule (pron. 'too-lee') rose to the fore and these were backed by Madame Helena Petrovna Blavatsky's Theosophy and Aleister Crowley's Ordo Templi Orientis, both of whom were Freemasons. (Blavatsky qualified by supposedly having a male organ.) These occult organisations crossed financial and national boundaries and drew in double agents, ideologues and sexual deviants more effectively than a goat on heat, a llama on a Spanish sailing ship, or a prostitute in a nun's outfit. All of these occult organisations had homicidial intentions and all became well financed.

Hitler was part of the Thule Society and when he rose to power, the Russian occultist G. I. Gurdjieff and Aleister Crowley sought meetings with him. Hitler could only help with their desire for mass murder.

Stalin (Koba).

Gurdjieff had already initiated Stalin into Martinist Freemasonry, so he was an occult contact between Hitler and Stalin. Crowley, who later murdered his own son, assumed he was Hitler and even published that he had replaced Hitler for several years (although this probably says more about occultists than history).

Occultists generally want to be somebody else, as typified by middle-aged overweight women with brown curly hair, unable to get a joke. Being a medium is the only way they can get attention.

Gurdjieff taught people how to listen to themselves. The problem was, he taught masochists, who listened to themselves and became sadists. He said that people lived their lives in a form of waking sleep. There has been no better summary of the British upper class.

Gurdjieff succeeded in meeting with Stalin, Hitler, Lord Kitchener and Karl Ernst Haushofer and inititiated all of them, although the Hitler initiation is the least documented. These people were all sadistic killers and when the media got hold of Gurdjieff, they made a movie about him, Meetings with Remarkable Men (1979). Poor, he used to dive on birds in the market square, paint them in bright colours and sell the painted birds to tourists. This gave him enough money to travel and espouse his 'wisdom' to others.

How could the British media portray Kitchener's teacher as also being Stalin, Hitler and Haushofer's teacher?

Easy. They left it out of history.

Kitchener advanced Freemasonry in the orient and founded three Lodges in India, becoming Grand Master at Punjab, Egypt and Sudan. He also spread Freemasonry in Japan, Australia and New Zealand after the Boer War. The element of homosexual murderous paedophile has not left the Freemasons in these regions. New Zealand is controlled by murderous Freemasons to this day and they control the police and the judiciary, who give them blind cover, often at a great expense to the taxpayer. Here, Freemasonry specialises in providing cover for paedophiles as though it was one of their statutes, and Kitchener even commented about meeting a paedophile in Rotorua.

Kitchener was such a homo he kept storks that would stand between him and any female. They were trained to peck if a woman approached. He was a complete homosexual, a total sadist, an accomplished mass murderer, and a rampant paedophile, often murdering the children afterwards, or sodomising the child while shooting the parents, then killing the child once he was done.

While in India, Kitchener made many trips to Tibet, where he met Karl Haushofer, a Freemason, member of the Berlin Golden Dawn, inventor of Lebensraum and father of Albrecht Haushofer who became the Duke of Kent's lover and the father of his son, the second Duke of Kent. Kent is the old name for Egypt, as is 'kempt' and 'Ken'.

Espavo 3626 - treasurer@platinumparty.org -7 March 2013

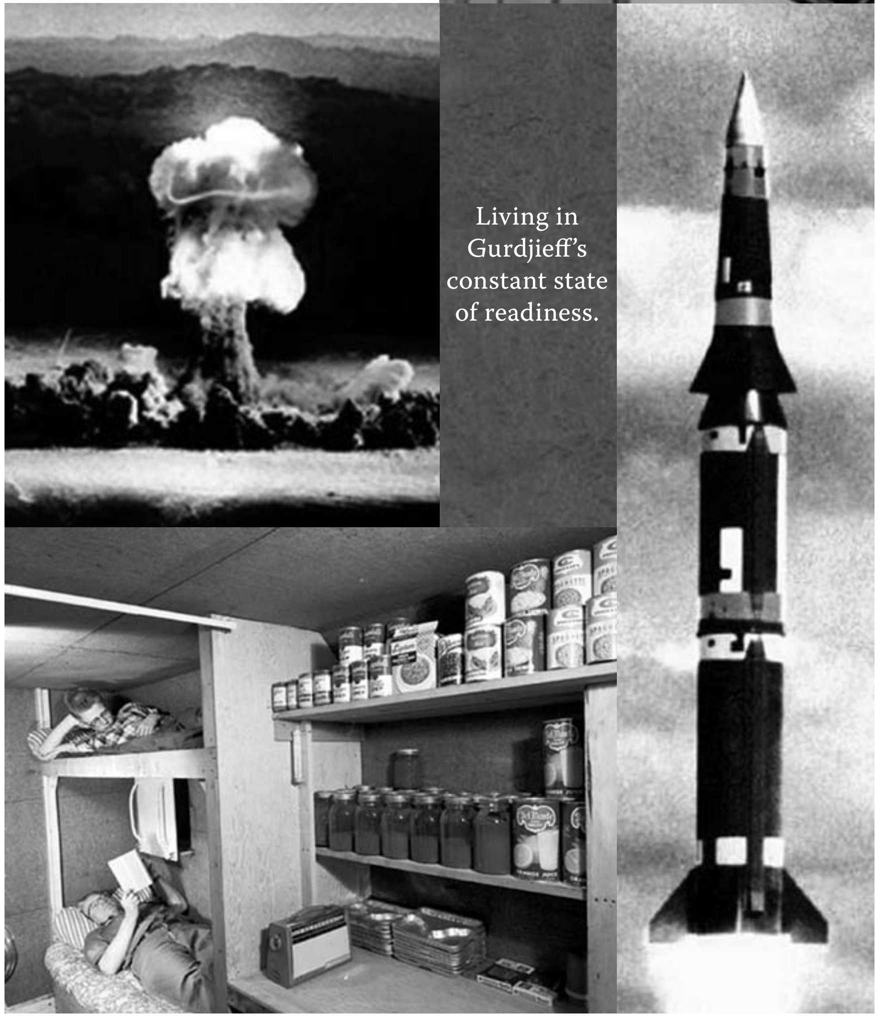
While in Tibet, the two experts in Russian mysticism, Kitchener and Gurdjieff, initiated Haushofer into Tibetan mysticism. This included the secret of supermen and the meaning of the swastika. In 1919, Haushofer joined Thule (just a step to the right of Golden Dawn) and introduced the reverse swastika symbolising black magic and destruction. This became the core of Naziism. Haushofer was then made a university professor and helped Hitler write Mein Kampf.

Gurdjieff's teaching have been continued through the Gurdjieff Foundations in New York, London, Paris and much of Europe. He founded the Institute for the Harmonious Development of Man, but then all eugenics institutions have nice names and nice fronts. Gurdjieff promoted simultaneous focus on what was going on outside and inside (action and response), remembering what one had done (keeping a diary) and living in a constant state of readiness (defence).

When Gurdjieff ran out of money, he became a fix-it man and his admirers would bring him their broken stuff (British Intelligence brought him typewriters with a screw loose and paid huge sums). He would then overcharge for not fixing it (or tightening up the screw). Gurdjieff was a charismatic without skills, a control freak, and adept at diverting attention and then claiming any benefits. As stupid as the world was at that time, this socially annoying trick made him famous. No doubt he bonked his students and any bad sex was blamed on "You've had enough. I'm coming. You're leaving. God has told me to stop."

Followers regarded him as charismatic. Critics asserted he was another charlatan with a large ego in constant need of glorification. He did suggest that people should always be ready, and this concept was used by Kitchener, Stalin and Hitler to create war-ready states over decades.

Gurdjieff disregarded morality, saying it varied from culture to culture, which his warring students interpreted as between cultures. His teachings attached almost no value to almost everything and everything happens by accident. Man is the result of external effects and is a transmitting station of forces. Man only differs from animals by being more complex and common man has no will.' Gurdjieff was the perfect spiritual teacher of anyone who wanted to go to war. As a result, Kitchener, Stalin and Hitler stuck to his occult teaching like shit to a blanket.



Living in Gurdjieff's constant state of readiness.

Gurdjieff had a strong influence on Timothy "Turn on, tune in, drop out" Leary, who colluded with the CIA and was a major protagonist of the Nazi-instigated New Age movement which helped a generation of Westerners take a generation to find out they were being made useless.

Leary was a New Age occultist, as well as former husband to Uma Thurman's mother and godfather to Uma Thurman (Pulp Fiction, Kill Bill 1, Kill Bill 2) and Winona Ryder (The Age of Innocence, Reality Bites, The Crucible, Celebrity).

The world would be a different place without Gurdjieff's influence and without his pupils – Kitchener (& Baden-Powell), Stalin, Hitler, Haushofer and the Dukes of Kent. Gurdjieff's most famous pupils were, by and large, homosexual occult mass murderers.

That Gurdjieff is considered a mystic puts the war-backed media in its place. The results of his work were the consummate evil of the late 19th and all of the 20th centuries. At best he achieved nothing. At worst, he trained warmongers to be ever more vicious warmongers.

G. I. Gurdjieff taught evil how to be evil and handed out licences. Close down the Institute for the Harmonious Development of Man. They are a eugenics society. Gudjieff was what we call today – an uberwanker.

Martinist Freemasonry

St Martin was a pagan who became a knight and then a bishop. He was the saint of travellers, the poor and thieves. The six degrees of Martinist initiation go from Associate to Mystic/Initiate, Superior, Philosopher, Unknown Philosopher, then Free Initiator.

Martinist Freemasonry teachings include Christian Mysticism, Theosophy, the Kabbalah and Hermeticism. It inspired classical Theosophy and the works of Madame Blavatsky and many of the better-known Mason and Rosicrucians in England, Europe and America.

Martinist Freemasonry was occult based and provided a link, rapport and comradeship across countries and political ideologies so that the Martinist Freemason Joseph Stalin could feel completely at home talking to the Druid and Freemason Winston Churchill and the Jew and Freemason President Roosevelt, and the occultist and fellow British agent Adolf Hitler.

The Martinist Order dates itself back to 316 AD (around the time of Constantine) and was recreated in Paris in 1888. The Grand Master was Papus (Gerard Encausse) until his death in 1916.

Martinist succession relies on being informally touched, thus transmitting the mantle from person to person. ("You're he.") Whenever there was a break in the link, the two next highest initiates would touch each other to consolidate the succession. With several splits in the order, Henri-Charles Dupont became the Grand Master from 1944 until he closed his order down on 14 December 1958. During WWII the Martinist Order was stronger in Paris than anywhere else in the world, and Martinist Freemasons were double agents throughout WWII.

The Traditional Martinist Order (TMO) is a mystical Rosicrucian order. The current worldwide Grand Master (from 12 April 1990) is Christian Bernard, based in Paris. He is not to be confused with the pioneering open heart surgeon Christian Barnard (also a French Freemason) whose son committed suicide. However, very often Freemason fathers neglect their children and suicide is one of the results.

Occult Freemasonry takes it members out of normal culture and places them in the realm of supermen. And what did those who studied the Tibetan 'supermen' create? – Naziism. Most often in history, grand titles are the titles uberwankers give to themselves, having the support of other admiring wankers and wannabe uberwankers.

Freemasons often say they do good in the community but they neglect to admit that they created WWI and WWII, trained Hitler, Stalin and Churchill, King Edward VII, King George V, King Edward VIII, King George VI, Lord Kitchener and Baden-Powell – all of them confused in their values, many of them mass killers, homosexual, bisexual and paedophiles.

Just imagine a world without these people. There could have been less forced emigration, genocide, One World Order social policy, One World Order Military Industrial Complex, CIA-controlled Christianity, KGB-controlled Islam, Israel-controlled Western governments through paedophilia . . . and no lesbian prime ministers taking a month's holiday for international fisting junkets (PM Helen Clark, KGB) . . . Oh, and no Cold War. This is what the Freemasons call "doing good in the world".

Just like Gurdjieff said, "Morality differs between cultures". Freemasonry is a cross-cultural organisation that ensures there is no morality in any culture. The rescuers are now the mouthpiece of the assassins. Their saying is now "Morality is for the masses".

Papus and the Tsar

Papus (Gerard Encausse) was a Spanish-born French physician and hypnotist who popularised occultism. In 1893 he was consecrated as a Bishop of the French Gnostic Church. Two years later he was in the top three and tried to revive the Cathar religion. During this period he briefly studied Theosophy under Madame Blavatsky, then joined the Golden Dawn in Paris. In 1888 he joined the Kabbalistic Order of the Rosicrucians.

Gerard Encausse drew on the Jewish Kabbalistic scriptures and wrote of the Jewish financial and media plans to take over the world. Some wrote this off as a hoax, but it appears to have happened in abundance, so much so that it is now the world we live in, and it is difficult to see otherwise.

Despite his heavy involvement in the occult, Gerard Encausse studied medicine at the University of Paris. He submitted a thesis on Philosophical Anatomy and got his Doctorate in Medicine in 1894 (Christ!), then opened a clinic in Rue Rodin, which was successful (stupid French). With this utterly crap medical degree (leeches and more leeches) but plenty of occult training (if I fail you will die, which isn't so bad), he visited Russia and served Tsar Nicholas II and his wife Alexandra as both doctor and occultist. Dr Gerard Encausse was unable to help their son Tsarevich Alexei with his haemophilia, but Rasputin could.

The Russians were even bigger suckers than the French and even relied on the occult when deciding government. This is not dissimilar to Britian's Prime Minister Tony Blair who uses astrology to make decisions. His involvement in the paedophilia and murder of 16 Scottish children allowed the FBI to bribe Britain into the Iraq war (2003–08^{+}) and Blair became known as "the Dunblane paedophile". In December 2007 it emerged that Blair was involved in Jonathan Hunt's paedophile circle and the New Zealand and British governments exchanged mutual cover.

When Dr Gerard Encausse conjured up the spirit of Alexander III he said the Tsar would survive as long as he was alive and would then meet his downfall at the hands of revolutionaries. This wasn't too hard to predict given his connections.

> Fellow Martinist Lord Kitchener died at 8 pm, 5 June 1916.
> Soon after, Papus/Gerard Encausse (51) contracted tuberculosis from administered bacillus while working in a French Army medical corp hosptial and died 141 days later on 25 October 1916.
> 65 days later Rasputin was murdered on 29 December 1916 with a bullet to the forehead when swimming for the banks of the river Neva, having already been poisoned and shot twice.
> 141 days after Papus died, Tsar Nicholas II was removed from the throne (15 March 1917) and disappeared to Yekaterinberg. He was presumed executed 488 days later at 2.33 am on 17 July 1918, exactly a year after the Germans ruling the British throne had renounced their German names and titles.

Only two bodies from the Russian Royal Family were found; the 13-year-old haemophiliac Alexei, and one of his sisters. Anastasia survived and claimed to be Anastasia. Prince Philip went to great lengths to discredit her using his uncle, the bisexual paedophile Lord Louis Mountbatten as his mouthpiece and naming Anastasia as 'Anna Anderson'. Prince Philip had a lot to lose, like the Tsar's inheritance and yet another European monarchy to destroy . . . again. Ho, hum, the labours of history.

Mountbatten had engineered his nephew Prince Philip as husband of Queen Elizabeth II, despite his foreknowledge that this would make the Queen of England the most cuckolded woman in Europe. Prince Philip had plenty of training and grew up amongst Europe's largest porn collection, second only to the Vatican. Elizabeth also had her training. By the age of 18, she was the least educated woman in Europe, having completed 7½ hours each week up to the age of 10, and 10 hours each week up to the age of 18. Despite this, the two of them managed to rule the world with their image baked onto biscuit tins.

Lord Kitchener and Stalin were both trained by Gurdjieff as Martinist Freemasons. Stalin went on to rule a third of the world and Kitchener colonised the world through his special brand of Freemasonry – incestuous paedophilia and sadistic ORDER OUT OF CHAOS.

Britain was the training ground for immigrant revolutionaries to destroy their own foreign countries. This saved the colonising British army from doing it.

Misinformation was always on the breakfast menu for the City of London and Metropolitan Police who regularly sabotaged each other's interrogations giving foreign terrorists any and every advantage.

Winston Churchill was King Edward VII's son. Once his father died, Winston needed to prove himself to his brother, the new King George V, so the 1911 Sidney Street Siege was held as a canned meat operation – a training exercise between Churchill and his protégé Stalin, who went on to decimate Russia.

Protecting the establishment by file theft is one of the main functions of a knight. A crime is committed, the case is botched and the files are stolen. Ipso facto, the stitch-up is all stitched up and official history contains generations of the most unbelieveable claptrap where nothing fits and most lose interest. This is the desired goal of establishment historians – most of whom are embedded into the occult. Jack the Ripper was an inside job that had the full support of occultist Freemasons and the British Royal Family.

Two of the most decorated men in British history were paedophiles who competed to commit the most heinous crimes in the British colonies. Understanding Queen Victoria and her children's illegitimacy, they operated with complete immunity, attained hero status, and medals were theirs for the asking.

Lord Kitchener and Stalin were both trained by Gurdjieff as Martinist Freemasons. Stalin went on to rule a third of the world and Kitchener colonised the world through his special brand of Freemasonry – incestuous paedophilia and sadistic ORDER OUT OF CHAOS.

Britain was the training ground for immigrant revolutionaries to destroy their own foreign countries. This saved the colonising British army from doing it.

Misinformation was always on the breakfast menu for the City of London and Metropolitan Police who regularly sabotaged each other's interrogations giving foreign terrorists any and every advantage.

Winston Churchill was King Edward VII's son. Once his father died, Winston needed to prove himself to his brother, the new King George V, so the 1911 Sidney Street Siege was held as a canned meat operation – a training exercise between Churchill and his protégé Stalin, who went on to decimate Russia.

Protecting the establishment by file theft is one of the main functions of a knight. A crime is committed, the case is botched and the files are stolen. Ipso facto, the stitch-up is all stitched up and official history contains generations of the most unbelieveable claptrap where nothing fits and most lose interest. This is the desired goal of establishment historians – most of whom are embedded into the occult. Jack the Ripper was an inside job that had the full support of occultist Freemasons and the British Royal Family.

Two of the most decorated men in British history were paedophiles who competed to commit the most heinous crimes in the British colonies. Understanding Queen Victoria and her children's illegitimacy, they operated with complete immunity, attained hero status, and medals were theirs for the asking.

SOLVING the 1897 AIRSHIP MYSTERY

By Michael Busby

> "Mr. Frank Nichols, a prominent farmer living about two miles east of here, and a man of unquestioned veracity, was awakened night before last near the hour of 12 by a whirring noise, similar to that made by machinery. Upon looking out he was startled upon beholding brilliant lights streaming from a ponderous vessel of strange proportions, which rested upon the ground in his corn field."
> —Houston Post, April 26, 1897

From November 1896 to May 1897, hundreds of newspapers across North America published similar accounts of strange objects in the night skies. Citizens from California to as far east as Michigan reported seeing mysterious "airships" moving high above the earth. Were these puzzling craft driven by visitors from another planet? By hostile foreigners? By American inventors subsidized by private investors, the government, or the military?

Solving the 1897 Airship Mystery represents six years of research and draws on more than 1,200 newspaper stories and other contemporary accounts. Author

INTRODUCTION

Although there was ample debate concerning the flying machines' origins in 1897, including the supposition that the machines were of extraterrestrial design, all of the 1896-97 newspaper accounts referred to the unidentified flying objects as airships. For the sake of continuity, I will continue the convention. The term UFO did not achieve widespread popularity until fifty years later.

About six years ago, Jim Hill suggested that a series of books on Texas UFO sightings would constitute an interesting writing project. Since Jim is a publisher (and a friend), I thought the idea possessed some merit. I rushed off to the library to research the documented UFO sightings in Texas and almost immediately came upon the great airship mystery of 1897, including the purported crash of an airship on April 17, 1897, in Aurora, Texas. After uncovering a wealth of period newspaper stories regarding the topic and reading other documented material on the subject, I discovered it was not just a Texas airship mystery but a California, Nevada, Utah, Nebraska, Iowa, Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Kansas, Missouri, New Mexico, Arizona, Oklahoma, and Louisiana airship mystery also.

The story of the 1897 airship mystery is embedded in thousands of newspaper accounts reporting what happened in the local skies over Western United States beginning in the fall of 1896 and proceeding through the spring of 1897. Initially, in late 1896, coastal areas of the western portion of the country were seized and held spellbound by the reports of numerous and mysterious airship sightings. First California was inundated with reports of airships seen in the night. Soon after the initial California sightings, the odd-looking machines were seen over numerous Western, Central, and Southern states. For a while during 1896 and 1897, people throughout the country west of the Mississippi and from all segments of society rubbernecked the skies every night to get a glimpse of the flying vessels of unknown origin. Occasionally, people reported hearing and glimpsing strange beings working the vessels' machinery.

Were the enigmatic occupants of these vessels the advance party of an extraterrestrial race of beings scouting the country looking for the best site to establish a sinister presence on our planet? Did they map our country and subsequently establish a base at a remote Nevada site later popularized as Area 54? Were the appearance of these strange flying vessels and the purported crash of an airship at Aurora, Texas, a prelude to the alleged events that occurred fifty years later near Roswell, New Mexico? Or, did an epidemic of mass hysteria sweep a good proportion of the country? Were the stories the product of newspaper writers' imaginations? Were the flying machines a secret government project (and was there a subsequent government cover-up)? Intriguing questions for inquiring minds, astounding answers await the interested reader.

In this book, the focus is primarily on the Texas sightings. The reasons for limiting the scope of the book are (1) the amount of material involving all sightings is just too voluminous for a single book, (2) the Aurora crash makes interesting reading, (3) the airshow's grand finale was in Texas, (4) and, for reasons that will become abundantly clear, the Texas sightings include clues that yield answers.

The method I have adopted to present this story consists of a chronological timeline with the actual Texas newspaper accounts presented with the more interesting and pertinent facts in bold italics within the body of each account. If warranted, additional commentary is placed at the end of the account. At the end of each chapter, a map of the chapter sightings is provided to easily visualize the various way points of the airships. Each map includes the applicable sighting information reported—such as time of day or night and direction of travel.

Using the tabulated information, also included at the end of each chapter, I estimate the airships' flight path and offer additional commentary on the nature of the sightings. Drawing upon supplementary newspaper accounts of sightings outside Texas, an amazing story never before told unfolds. The final chapters include supporting documentation, arguments, and conclusions regarding the nature of the airship sightings as supported by the evidence in the newspaper accounts, historical documentation, and other historical facts.

However, one cannot delve into the Texas sightings without providing some background information on the sightings in the other states. Several very pertinent California accounts are included in this analysis.

Initially, it is difficult to decide where to begin when confronted with an interesting and complicated story such as this one—sort of a chickenand-egg theory (which comes first?). Though the country observed the great airshow in 1897, the 1897 airship mystery may have actually began in 1840's New York and it may have ended in Houston in 1923 with the death of Charles A. A. Dellschau.

SOLVING THE 1897 AIRSHIP MYSTERY

AND THERE SHALL BE SIGNS

The spring of 1897 was a time of great excitement in the United States. Many inventions based upon recent physical science discoveries were making their way onto the marketplace and into the business and home environments. Electric lights were illuminating the world of darkness. Mr. Edison's phonograph was emitting tinny-sounding tunes out the doorway of America. Mark Twain wrote the first book on a typewriter, and now, the amazing machines were finding their way into almost every office and many homes in the country. High-speed passenger-train service made coast-to-coast travel an easy and comfortable three or four day journey. Great, steam-powered ships conquered the oceans. Skyscrapers were conquering the skies and changing the face of American cities. X-rays signaled a new paradigm in medicine. Quantum mechanics and relativity were just a couple of mathematical equations away in our evolving understanding of the universe. Using large, powerful telescopes recently assembled and directed toward the heavens, the world's astronomers were announcing new astronomical discoveries almost everyday, including the discovery of Martian "canals." And Charles H. Dow had just introduced his now-famous Dow (Jones) industrial stock-market averages to the country via the newspaper he edited, the Wall Street Journal. Western Indian depredations were finally a nightmare of the past and people slept easy at night knowing they and, especially, their children were reasonably safe in their beds. Automobiles were the newest threat to peace and prosperity, as the horseless carriages honked and careened their way down the mud-caked thoroughfares of America, scaring witless the horses pulling the carriages and wagons. People believed there was no limit to human, and especially American, ingenuity.

However, one frontier had not yielded to American ingenuity. Although great achievements were becoming commonplace on Earth, the heavens remained unconquered. Yet, many people thought it was just a small matter of time before the problem of aerial navigation would succumb to human invention. Newspapers and magazines devoted numerous columns of print to the subject and the seemingly slow progress in the state of the science. Famous scientists, including Samuel Pierpont Langley, head of the Smithsonian Museum, were vigorously failing to conquer the heavens. However, most people agreed that they, or their children, would live to see humans one day sailing the skies as easily as ships sailed the ocean.

Then suddenly, without any warning, a strange-looking object appeared in the early evening sky over Sacramento, California. On November 17,1896, between the hours of 6 and 7 P.M., people were startled to see an airship flying slowly across the city, from the northeast to the southwest, at a very low altitude (Sacramento Evening Bee, November 18, 1896, p. 1). Dumbfounded, people stood in the streets and gazed at the alien-looking airship with great amazement and some consternation. According to the Bee account, hundreds viewed the sight.

For the next seven months, airships were seen fairly often, flying at night over America's cities and towns. Newspapers printed airship stories as they came into their offices from stringers, also known as correspondents, who reported via telegraph from towns, villages, and cities the airship sightings when they occurred in their regions. Also, individuals breathlessly rushed into newspaper offices to tell tales of late-night encounters with strange flying machines. But not all airship stories were printed. In many cases, only after reputable men and women stepped forward with their tales of nocturnal visitors did some newspapers feel safe from public ridicule and begin to print airship stories. Even after publishing these stories, many newspaper publishers and editors remained skeptical of the sightings, evidenced by their editorials on the subject.

The great 1897 airship mystery was the result of numerous sightings of strange flying objects, most often seen at night. What was the cause of the aerial phenomenon? Too much rubbernecking and stargazing? Too much alcohol to drink? Mass hysteria? A widespread newspaper hoax? A great railroad hoax? Aliens from another planet? Aliens from this planet (let's not forget the Hollow Earth believers)? A secret government project? Perhaps, they were exactly what many respectable individuals who gave graphic accounts of firsthand encounters with the weird flying machines and their occupants described them to be.

Although the great airship mystery began in California with the initial Sacramento sighting on November 17,1896 (followed by numerous sightings over San Francisco and other northern California cities), within weeks, other regions around the country were reporting the presence of the strange airships. Using the numerous, dated newspaper accounts as a timeline, one can see that the airship sightings follow an easily identifiable path beginning in California, proceeding east to the Midwest (Illinois, Indiana, Michigan), then changing to a southerly course and traversing Missouri, Kansas, and Oklahoma before arriving in Texas and Louisiana in April 1897.

All along the course of the airship sightings, the reports of the airships' visitation followed the same general pattern. People saw the airship, or airship(s), at night, sometimes following a straight line, sometimes stopping then starting again then changing course before disappearing over the horizon. The descriptions of the size, shape, and sounds associated with the airship(s) are similar, regardless of the location and date of the sighting.

When the airships arrived in a region, the local newspapers and populace adopted various positions regarding the veracity of the airships' existence. Sometimes witnesses remained silent until some very respectable member of the community came forward with a report of an airship sighting. Then other observers who had kept silent for fear of censure poured out their stories. Some newspapers might print every airship story they received without regard to its truthfulness, while others printed only the airship stories of people it deemed reliable sources. The credibility of the newspaper was at stake and many editors were anxious to ensure it was well protected, while other editors were willing to risk their reputations for circulation gain. And occasionally, a paper would reprint another newspaper's airship story if it was especially interesting.

The airship sightings, documented in more than twelve hundred known U.S. newspaper accounts, began in November 1896 and ended in May 1897. (See appendix B for a list of the known newspapers carrying airship stories.) Today, some people believe the airship mystery was nothing more than the product of fertile imaginations diligently at work in the back offices of newspapers. Occasionally, some newspapers were willing to print hoaxes in order to entertain their readers. So why should we give credence to these stories? Although a few accounts appear to be fake, there are too many firsthand accounts that include the names of reputable witnesses. Such accounts give credibility to the large body of stories. The people reporting the stories were not fictional people or people with histories of mental illness, drug abuse, or perhaps, practical jokester natures, but they were the individuals who formed the foundation of their communities. They were farmers, clerks, train drivers, telegraph operators, newspaper correspondents, business owners, doctors, lawyers, current and former government officials, military officers, engineers, scientists, legislators, and professors. They were men and women, adults and children, brown, black, white, and all the shades in between.

The great body of airship accounts detail, in report after report, the nocturnal movements of the mysterious airships. However, not all sightings were reported and many reports were not printed. Why? How many thousands of people looked into the sky, saw the airship(s), and never mentioned the sighting to anyone? How many thousands of people notified a newspaper of a sighting, but the account was never printed? How many thousands of correspondent's telegrams were not sent to newspapers and how many unused columns of stories were eventually trashed is anyone's guess. At one point, as the nightly airship sightings became numerous about the Texas skies, the Dallas Morning News stated it had over five hundred columns of unpublished material relating to airship sightings. Unfortunately, this large collection of information is now lost to us. But, from the extensive evidence that does remain, we can discern an amazing story never before told in its entirety.

Reliable people reported seeing strange flying machines traveling at "meteor-like speed" through the dark heavens from the fall of 1896 into the spring of 1897. Tales of crashes and little (previously) green (but now burnt black) men—or women, the body seems to have been burnt too bad to recognize the sex—from Mars permeated the news of the day. Stories of airships that could easily outrace the high-speed passenger trains in service and fly three miles high—an unbelievable claim in 1897—were common during this exciting period of American invention.

The claims of the airships' altitude and speed seem especially unbelievable today, given our front-row seat watching the great revolution in technology upon the panoramic screen of American history and, especially, its impact on the science of aviation during the past century. In 1903, the Wright brothers succeeded in flying only a few hundred feet at an altitude not substantially more than rooftop height at a speed of less than fifty miles per hour. It would be many years before any human-made machine could fly two miles high and exceed 100 miles per hour! Yet, the reports from many eyewitnesses in 1897 make such claims concerning the airships!

The light bulb, the phonograph, the telephone, the electrical motor, and the automobile were just a few of the many useful inventions pouring out of creative American minds in the midst of the great Industrial Revolution at the dawn of a new millennium. Were alien visitors offering advice and help to our greatest inventors or to the government? Could the success of the incredible Industrial Revolution be attributed to an alien presence among us? Did aliens provide our government the secret of powered flight? Or, were imaginary airships pouring out of everyone's fertile imaginations?

Some people, including professors and other "learned men," believed the airships were from another world. The descriptions of the craft and their antics seemed to suggest an intelligence far beyond any on Earth. Supporting such a premise is the claim of a U.S. government signal officer of the recovery of an alien body after a purported crash. The similarity of the government official's account to an alien crash account of another time and place is striking. A U.S. Air Force major serving as base public-information officer made the exact same claim fifty years later at Roswell, New Mexico. Moreover, a published firsthand account of a personal encounter between an earthling and the unearthly visitors gave credence, at the time, to the supposition that the flying machines were from another world.

Several people then (and a few people today) believed the sightings were the result of something greater than a touch of collective madness, a great outpouring of mass hysteria from an easily fooled and stampeded population. According to this explanation, otherwise sane and sharp-eyed individuals, with and without telescopes and field or marine glasses, walked out their doorways, gazed into the heavens, and saw things that were really not there. Although these people could tell the difference between a cow and a horse or a chicken and a pig, they could not tell the difference between a star and a swiftly moving flying machine of suspicious origin—so say the masshysteria proponents. According to this explanation of the airships' origin, Venus (or Saturn or Mars or any other astronomical feature you care to name) was now accorded the status of a flying vessel. First traveling across the night sky in one direction, perhaps slowing down, then abruptly changing direction, before speeding off and flying over the horizon in a matter of minutes, the fast-moving, low-altitude, blinking-light, mechanical apparitions were confused with slow planetary motion. This explanation for the airships' existence requires one to believe the greater proportion of the American public residing west of the Mississippi River in 1896 and 1897 was overwhelmed by a pandemic of mass hysteria for seven long months.

According to at least one modern explanation of the airship(s')'s origin, their genesis is to be found in the smoke-filled, back rooms of saloons, in the midst of yarn-filled poker games. Several obviously fake airship stories, whose origins are undoubtedly to be found in the midst of late-night poker games, were printed. However, the fake stories' substance is such that they are easily identified and proved to be phonies. Why did people make up fake stories? Maybe after years of silently treading behind the plow, or standing morosely behind the store counter, some people just wanted to have a little fun and make up a few entertaining stories to amuse the townspeople and the newspaper folks. In any case, the fake stories are easily identified, when viewed within the context of all the airship stories.

When the airship sightings began, there were "wars and rumors of wars," as the United States rattled its sword at Spain over the Cuban war for independence. The gospel was preached around the world. Disease and famine were rampant. The nearness of a new century and the "signs of the times" seemed to signify the end of time to many people. Some people thought the airship sightings were biblical prophecy: "and there shall be signs from the heavens" fulfilled.

Were the airships a visitation from heaven, seeking out and identifying the righteous for deliverance when the end of times would be upon the land? The sum of the days' events added up to one logical conclusion for some people. Religious leaders proclaimed prophecy was realized and the end of time was now upon the land. Attendance at religious meetings and revivals increased in 1897. Churches experienced a surge of new converts—nothing like prophecy realized (as spelled out in Revelation and as evidenced by "winged messengers from heaven") to increase church attendance and revenues.

A few people today believe the airship stories were engineered by the railroads as a hoax for some obscure reason. They claim the number of airship sightings reported by railroad employees and train passengers is evidence that the airships were a hoax initiated and perpetuated by reprobate telegraphers. Such an explanation does not account for the fact that the telegraph and the railroads were the foundations of mass communication in 1897 America. Both the telegraph lines and the airships followed the clearly delineated rail lines from community to community, therefore it should not surprise anyone that railroad employees and train passengers were usually the first to see the airships when they arrived near a community. Since there was a telegrapher in every rail station, news of an airship sighting quickly spread up and down the communities along the railroad line.

What do others say about the airship mystery? A survey of previously published works on this topic, of which there are just a couple, does not produce any book with a valid and believable explanation of the airship sightings. The couple of books (UFO-types) that include a reference to this topic offer only a mass-hysteria solution, a "great newspaper or railroad hoax" answer, a vague extraterrestrial explanation, or a "you decide" choice. The reader of these books is left with the general impression that the seven-month airship mystery was a great hoax perpetrated by miscreant newspaper reporters in a widespread conspiracy to drum up news, get their names on bylines, and sell more newspapers.

Widely reported in numerous newspapers, the airships were regarded as various manifestations of both natural and supernatural events. Some believed the end of time was near and the ships had come to collect the just. Some believed the airships were visitors from Mars, Jupiter, or any place but Earth. Some believed the airships were a great hoax engineered by either the newspapers or the railroads. But most people at the time believed American ingenuity (perhaps, with some alien assistance?) had solved the problem of aerial navigation, or flight, and the successful inventor(s) would soon step forward, announce their amazing machine(s) to the world, and claim their deserved reward.

If the majority's supposition was correct, why didn't the inventors step forward, publicly announce their success, and celebrate the initiation of a new technological age with the rest of the world? If the airships were of human invention, why wasn't the technology pursued to a logical conclusion, the initiation of mass air transportation, by 1900? These and other questions naturally come to mind as one begins to ponder the newspaper reports of the sightings. Only in reading the story of the great airship mystery will the reader discover the interesting and even amazing answers to these and many other baffling questions.

IN THE ATTIC

In a large Texas town, a lonely figure bends over his worktable in the dim light cast by a single bulb piercing the attic's inky black darkness. Charles A. A. Dellschau laboriously draws his final watercolor at the age of ninety-three. Soon, he will draw no more, as 1923 and his life arrive at the crossroads of their final reckoning. Why has he labored in seclusion for twenty-three years to draw twelve volumes of mixed-media pictographs of flying machines? Flying machines that apparently only he has seen (or imagined)? Why does he describe his creations and the men and women who flew them in short scripts written in a symbolic or coded language? Was Charles Dellschau a victim of alien abduction documenting for posterity the details of his abduction? Or was he a dreamer, an amateur artist?

In 1899, Dellschau retired as a butcher and began to paint pictures of strange, fantastic-looking airships using mixed media. The colorful works include intricate montages presenting airships as the central theme. The airships, some possessing shiplike decks slung beneath balloon pontoons, are manned by crews of gentlemen. Occasionally, a cat is depicted accompanying the crew. Included in the numerous notebooks, juxtaposed among the airship drawings, are stories of flying that seem impossible for anyone to just make up—only someone who has lived the tale could write about it in such glorious detail.

Among the pages of his notebooks, Dellschau identifies the Sonora Aero Club as the umbrella organization he and the other aeronauts worked for in the 1850s. He also identifies an unknown organization (the NYMZA) as the provider of the financial backing for the design and build of the airships he documented. According to Dellschau, the Sonora Aero Club had over forty members building and flying airships in the early 1850s. Many of these club members, most with Germansounding names, are listed by name in his notebooks.

Why does Dellschau spend the few precious remaining hours of his life filling page after page with interesting drawings and descriptive information of long-ago flights and fatal crashes? And why does he make the cryptic statement that "wonder weavers" will decipher his drawings and coded statements one day and discern "what was true all along"?

Charles August Albert Dellschau was born June 4, 1830, in Brandenburg, Prussia. As a young man, he is said to have had an intense fascination with flight and aerodynamics. Dellschau arrived in the United States from Hamburg, Germany, in 1853. On his immigration record, he incorrectly listed his age as that of twenty-five years old. His occupation is listed as a farmer. Dellschau's letter of citizenship places him in Harris County, Texas, in 1856 and Fort Bend County, Texas, in 1860. Dellschau's whereabouts and profession between 1853 and 1856 are unknown in the historical records. According to his notebooks, he was employed as a draftsman for the Sonora Aero Club during the period of 1853 to 1856.

In 1861, while living in Fort Bend County, Dellschau married Antonia Hilt. By 1865 he and Antonia were living in Richmond, Texas. Antonia soon died, leaving Dellschau a sickly daughter and a healthy older stepdaughter. By 1886 he was living in Houston with his stepdaughter and her husband, Anton Stelzig. When Dellschau retired in 1899, he continued to live in the home of his stepdaughter and her husband, turning the attic of the home into a studio of sorts. Then he began to fill notebooks with over five thousand pictures of flying machines and over two hundred pages of coded text. After he died in 1923, his voluminous works languished in the Houston attic.

In 1963, forty years after Charles A. A. Dellschau died, twelve volumes of illustrated work—characterized as "fantasy flight"—were removed from the attic where he painted in secluded retirement. Found by a helpful nurse who was cleaning out the attic, the material was unceremoniously dumped on the curb to be collected as garbage. A trashman picked up the collection and sold the volumes to a Houston junk dealer, who placed them, covered with a dirty tarp, on the floor of his Washington Avenue junk store. There the works rested for another six years before an art-history student at the University of St. Thomas came across the material. Her patron, the Houston Menil Foundation, bought five volumes for S500 in 1969. The remaining volumes were purchased by a UFO researcher in 1993, with some of them eventually coming to rest in a New York art gallery.

What do others have to say about Dellschau and his work? The New York Times ("A Spiritual Energy in Fanciful Realms," Art Review, January 22, 1999) characterized Dellschau's art as "thousands of wonderfully fanciful pictures of Jules Verne-style flying machines." How fanciful were his pictures? Perhaps, they were less fanciful and more realistic than the New York Times reviewer could imagine.

When Jules Verne wrote Five Weeks in a Balloon in 1863, he was thirty-five years old and Charles Dellschau was thirty-three. While Jules Verne was just starting to write about flying, Charles Dellschau seems, according to his notebooks, to have already been an experienced aviator of some ten years. Was Dellschau a dreamer or was he mad? Was he a victim of alien abduction, or was he, in his own crude way, documenting for posterity UFO sightings of the 1850s? Why didn't Dellschau write his stories in a straightforward and readily understandable manner? And where was Dellschau between 1853 and 1856? The answers to these questions may lie in the amazing story of the great 1897 airship mystery.

THE BEGINNING

April 6-April 14,1897

We are now ready to embark on our journey through the newspaper accounts documenting the inexplicable airship sightings of 1897. The accounts are interesting not only for the light they shed on the airship mystery, but also for their humor and quaint insight into the culture of the period.

In this chapter is a discussion of the initial sightings in the Indian Territory and north Texas, focusing on the reliable newspaper accounts. Each newspaper account of a reported sighting is given with important clues and details outlined in bold italics, and corresponding author comments immediately follow the article. Explanatory material, identified by the use of brackets, may be included in the body of the article. There are five airship sightings during this period. Compared to the wealth of airship sightings over the next few weeks, five sightings seem hardly worth mentioning. But, it is readily apparent when viewed in the context of the whole airship story that these initial sightings, perhaps of a single airship, were the forerunners for sightings of a fleet of airships soon to arrive in the Lone Star State. And now, let the participants tell their stories.

DENISON MAN'S FIND

He Sees a Brilliantly Illuminated Airship Sailing Northward

South McAlester, I. T., April 5.—A gentleman who came in from Denison last night says that at 3 o'clock this morning (April 5), when he was returning to his room he saw a large airship going in a northern direction. It was brilliantly illuminated, and was going at the rate, he supposed, of about fifty miles per hour. There was a peculiar swishing sound to it, and as near as he could judge it was a quarter of a mile up from the earth.

> His attention was first directed toward the stars by the peculiar sound from the ship, or whatever it may be called, and he watched until it passed over the hills to the north.
> The gentleman is a Mason and a K of P. and his reputation for truth is beyond question {Dallas Morning News, April 6,1897, p. 4).

Reporters of the era were fond of identifying events with such terms as "yesterday," "last night," etc., when writing their articles. However, there was no guarantee the editor would include the article in "tomorrow's" edition, especially if the paper was not printed on a daily schedule. Wherever possible, I have identified by date such terms as "last night."

/. T. is an abbreviation meaning Indian Territory. Indian Territory was not admitted into the Union as the state of Oklahoma until 1907. Indian Territory sightings are included in this book, as they were widely reported in Texas newspapers and probably caused many Texas heads to turn skyward with the owner hoping to catch a glimpse of the mysterious travelers. Since Indian Territory shares a border (delineated primarily by the Red River) with north Texas, it seems reasonable to believe that its close proximity would engender a desire in north Texans to witness the great spectacle of a flying machine in the heavens. And from such sky-gazing came the following numerous Texas reports.

Denison, Texas, is just a couple of miles south of the Red River, and South McAlester is north of Denison. Apparently, this man was traveling from Denison to South McAlester and had just arrived at his destination when he saw the airship. The observer reported that he heard a peculiar swishing sound, which he associated with the airship. The reported speed and altitude, 50 miles per hour and iA mile, would not elicit any unusual comment today—except that the 50-miles-per-hour speed is awfully slow by today's (airplane) measuring stick. But then, anything other than birds flying in the air, regardless of speed or altitude, was cause for great comment in 1897.

STRANGE OBJECT SEEN

"And There Shall Be Signs from the Heavens."

> Gutherie, I. T., April 7.—About 11 o'clock last night [April 6] the attention of landlord Trumball of the Arlington Hotel was attracted by a dark-looking object moving through the air above the city.
> Soon a bright light was seen at the front of the object, which seemed to be thrown in different directions. Mr. Trumball called a number of people, who watched the strange shadow object for a long time, and are confident it is the mysterious airship seen at so many places during the past few weeks.
> Its outlines were indistinct, but a light was thrown out from the front, and at times there were flashes of light along the sides. It moved swiftly backward' and forward, sank almostto the groundjust north of the city, and then rose straight into the air at great speed and disappeared in the darkness of the night (Dallas Morning News, April 8, 1897, p. 3; Galveston News, April 8; Terrell Times-Star, April 19,1897).

Gutherie and South McAlester are about 118 miles apart.

The flashes of light could be sparks from electrical motors or, perhaps, communication signals intended for other airships. Communicating from one location to another using signal lights was a common practice in 1897. Military organizations have used signal lights as far back in history as the Roman empire.

Did you ever see any meteors, comets, or planets move swiftly backward and forward, sink toward the ground, then rise swiftly before speeding off over the horizon? No? I didn't think so. Ever see a helicopter perform such a maneuver? No? Well, obviously you've never served in the United States Marines. Yes? Congratulations, you have passed the United States Marine Corps Advanced-Infantry Training course.

MCKNIGHT'S AIRSHIP

Paris, Texas, April 9.—For several days The News has contained specials from different points stating that parties had an airship in the night. A man named McKnight has been working on an airship at U. S. Marshal Williams' ranch for some time and it is claimed he has been traveling around by night in his ship. While McKnight will not corroborate the statement, many who are in a position to know say his aerial navigation has at last become a success (Dallas Morning News, April 10, 1897, p. 4).

Unfortunately, the 1890s census was destroyed in a fire. Therefore, we cannot officially place a McKnight in or near Paris in the 1890s. However, a Charles McKnight is listed as residing in Sherman in the 1870 federal-population census. (See "Looking for McKnight" section in chapter 20.)

THE AIR SHIP AGAIN

Lady and Gentleman See It at Different Localities and Describe It Minutely.

Denton, Denton Co., Tex., April 14.—That Denton is not to be behind the other towns and cities in north Texas is shown by the fact that the mysterious airship, of which so much has been said and written in the past few days, has been seen here by at least two credible persons, one a gentleman, the other a lady, whose reputation for truthfulness can not be assailed.

The gentleman who saw the ship says he was standing in his yard watching with the aid of a pair of powerful marine glasses, the stars, when a shadow fell athwart the moon, obscuring it for the moment. The sky being cloudless, he looked up to examine the cause.

"I at first thought it was a meteor," said he, "but upon closer examination discovered the unknown object to be almost stationary and focusing my glasses on it, discovered that it was moving slowly in a southeasterly direction. At this slow rate of speed the ship continued its courses for a few minutes and then with almost a jump started off at a terrific rate and disappeared in the southeast, remaining in the range of my vision about twenty minutes"

When I first ascertained the character of the object it floated about half a mile above the earth and seemed to be about fifty feet long, of a cigar shape with two great mugs thrust out from each side; a broad tail or steering saill behind and a long beak or blade resembling a cut water on a ship in front. At the point where the beak joined the main body a powerful searchlight threw its rays far into the night ahead beside which even the luminosity of the moon paled. A row of windows along the side gave out smaller lights the source of which must have been stored electricity as there was no smoke, as well as I could see very plainly, coming from the ship, not was there even a sign of a smoke stack. I do not doubt that it was an airship.

> The lady above mentioned is a member of the Ariel Society, is one of the most widely read of all the ladies in town and is not one upon whom credulity anything of a hoax-like nature could be imposed. Her description, although much less explicit than the gentleman's as she was unaided by any glasses, tallies almost exactly with the account. When she saw it, the ship was bounding along through space like a balloon.
> These two descriptions are better than any of their predecessors, as one of them was with the aid of powerful glasses and both of them are from people widely read and much of their readings, too of a scientific nature (Dallas Morning News, April 15,1897).

The exact date of the above sighting is unknown. The report from the news correspondent is dated April 14; therefore it is given in this chapter. Most likely, the sighting occurred between April 10 and April 13, with April 13 being the most likely date.

The observer's statement that he "discovered the unknown object to be almost stationary" rules out the possibility that the object could be a meteor. He further "discovered that it was moving slowly in a southeasterly direction," which could identify the object as a comet or even a planet. However, since the object "with almost a jump started off at a terrific rate," that rules out any natural phenomena such as planets, stars, comets, etc. The only heavenly bodies known to move with such languid movements and sudden changes of direction are found only in the celestial realm of Hollywood.

"... and focusing my glasses on it" refers to the observers use of field, or marine, glasses. The description and the details of this sighting are all the more accurate since the eyes had help (in the form of glasses, or binoculars as we call them today).

The gentleman's statement "remaining in the range of my vision about twenty minutes" is consistent with a modern jetliner s speed upon final approach to an airport. If you observe a modern jetliner on final approach, you can determine that it is in your range of vision for about ten minutes. The speed of a jetliner on final approach is about 140 miles per hour. The observed altitude, speed, and time of visibility all correspond with a jetliner traveling around 140 miles per hour. An airship of human design that can fly at a speed of about 140 miles per hour seems incredible for 1897.

Note that the observer pointedly refers to the absence of smoke and smokestacks. Steam was the typical locomotive power of the day. Steam supplied sufficient power to move hundreds of tons of goods and people across miles of rail at speeds in excess of 90 miles per hour. But, steam engines were very heavy and consumed prodigious amounts of water and coal fuel. The absence of smoke and a smokestack rules out steam as the source of the airships' motive power. What methods are left to provide the airships' motive power? We will determine in the next few chapters the methods available to provide sufficient motive power to propel the airships about the Texas sky.

The sightings at this point were sporadic. Since the airships were just appearing over the Texas skies, there seems to be no fake sightings yet. Later, as the sightings become more commonplace, a few tricksters attempt to outwit townspeople by launching small balloons with fires attached to confound the populace and amuse themselves. However, the "fire balloons" were easily identifiable and few people confused them with the light from the real airships.

The initial airship sightings in Indian Territory and north Texas are too few and spread over too many days to gain anything by plotting and analyzing the route of the airship(s). However, the sightings are significant in that the initial stories galvanized people's interests in the airships and more heads were now rubbernecking in the moonlight, hoping to gain at least a glimpse of the aerial wonder. With the attention of the populace now gained by the initial Texas newspaper stories, it seems reasonable to believe more sightings were reported in the following days as more people lifted their eyes skyward for a look.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 14, 1897

There were seven airship sightings on the night of April 14. "Night" is defined as the time between the hours of noon one day and noon the next—that is the convention I have used to plot sightings. The reason for adopting such a convention is the propensity of the airship pilots to begin a nightly sojourn after the dinner hour and to return to their daytime hiding place before the sun rose the next morning. However, the plans of the pilots were sometimes foiled by busted machinery that required them to fly back to the daytime hiding place after daylight. We are interested in plotting the circuit of the airship—that is, its journey from start to finish—in the hope of locating its daytime hiding lair. Hence, the logic for adopting the "noon to noon" definition of a "night." The number of April 14 sightings is sufficient for us to determine the general area of the airship(s')'s daytime hiding place. The story continues.

SIGHTING THE AIRSHIP

A Mysterious Traveler of the Skies Seen at Weatherford, Corsicana and Cresson

LOOKS LIKE A PASSENGER COACH

Powerful Search Lights Fore and Aft—Has Monstrous Wings That Fan the Breeze.

Weatherford, Tex., April 15—Last night [April 14] at 9 o'clock the airship that has been mentioned in the News from Oklahoma and other points was seen here. It passed over the city in the southwesterly direction and lights were thrown out from the front resembling the headlight on an engine. The machine was seen by many people, The News Correspondent included (Dallas Morning News, April 16, 1897; "Watch for the Airship," Austin American Statesman, April 16, 1897).

The identification of the light as "resembling the headlight of an engine" is a very common characteristic of the sightings. In a metropolitan area where the local airport lands big jets, called heavies by their drivers (pilots), one can watch a big jet on final approach in the night sky and see a "light thrown out from the front resembling the headlight of an engine."

A modern jet has two of these lights, called "landing lights," one on each side of the fuselage. The first time this author saw these landing lights (as a very young man), it was a black night and I was somewhat distant from them. I was momentarily puzzled because I could not figure out how automobiles had gained the ability to fly in congested metropolitan areas. Only upon close proximity to the jet did I realize the true nature of the lights. Perhaps, you were also puzzled by your first encounter with the landing lights of a modern jetliner. Imagine how puzzled people who never saw anything previously flying in the air except birds—and an occasional witch (especially if they lived in Massachusetts)—might become.

Today, if you fly on a modern jetliner, you will see the wings flap to some degree, if the jetliner strikes turbulent air. The wings are designed to flex in this manner. Rigid wings will quite easily snap off if the wind turbulence is of any moderate amount. The 1897 airship inventors probably encountered this design issue early on and added flexibility to their ship's wings. This may be the reason people were willing to state the wings "fanned the breeze" or "flapped to give motive power." The flapping was intended to keep the wings intact and had nothing to do with motive power. But the uninitiated, which was everyone, misunderstood the flapping. Still, there may be an additional explanation for "wingflapping," which we will explore in chapters 19 and 20.

But, why were wings necessary, anyway? Well, to provide an aerodynamic force called lift and to provide stability in an atmosphere. Would alien spaceships, presumably manned—or womanned—by beings with intelligence far superior to that of humans (how else could they fly the void of space) fly around the empty air space of planet Earth with pedestrian wings? Well, I don't know, but it seems reasonable to believe any life forms capable of traveling millions, billions, or trillions of miles through space would have a sufficient understanding of physical systems and, especially, mechanical control systems to design a wingless airship. But, the foregoing is just conjecture. You certainly do not need wings to fly the void of space. Black holes are an entirely different matter (pun intended).

It has been proposed that little green (or pink or blue, etc.) men (and presumably women and children) might live beneath the poles of the earth in the nether regions of the underground, generally in close proximity too and cozy neighbors with the devil. However entertaining such a thought may be for some, if such a place existed, it seems reasonable that modern exploration would have uncovered such a civilization. But, in 1897, some people did believe such a place and people existed. In their minds, the airships' existence was a result of the underground denizens deciding the planet's surface was now worth exploring. In which case, they, the underground dwellers, would probably design airships with wings, since they would be familiar with the surface winds of the planet.

Another possible explanation for the existence of flying machines with wings in 1897 is the transfer of technology from some advanced life form to human minds and hands. A transfer of technology from aliens to humans would be an incremental step function, as the human recipients of such a transfer would not want to be overwhelmed with technology that was incomprehensible. So, it seems reasonable that an alien would advise a human to design something using the technology of the period and incorporating wings, which would represent an intermediate and comprehensible step on the road to conquering the atmosphere and, eventually, outer space. So, how could alien life forms accomplish such a technology transfer without exposing themselves to the public? Perhaps, secret government programs?

The general population was certainly well accustomed to the idea that wings were necessary for flight. The writings of all the great, but unsuccessful, aeronauts of the time, such as Sir Hiram Maxim and Samuel Langley, made pointed reference to the need for wings to fly in an atmosphere. The evidence that wings were necessary for successful flight near Earth was visible outside the kitchen window of anyone who cared to watch the swifts darting around the neighbor's chimney.

An oft-repeated description of the airship includes details of the light as "thrown out from the front" and "resembling the headlight of an engine." Sounds very much like nineteenth-century technology.

Numerous newspaper accounts might refer to an airship sighting as "seen by many people." A few accounts list every witness by their names and their positions in the community. Such a way of listing the witnesses seems to be an attempt to convince doubting editors, and perhaps doubting readers, of the sincerity and truthfulness of the report. And when the list of individuals claiming to see the airship includes many of the community's respected individuals, it is cavalier to dismiss their testimony as anything other than what it is. While two or three individuals in a particular community may successfully hoax the newspaper, it is difficult to imagine hundreds of newspapers and communities being hoaxed by each community's elite.

THE AIRSHIP AGAIN

> Corsicana, Tex., April 15—Various and truthful citizens of Corsicana today declare that the airship, which has received not a little mention in the press this week, passed over the city last night [April 14].
> It was described by one who is emphatic in the statement that he saw it, as being a bright light a long distance from the earth and was moving at rather a fast speed across the firmament. It was said to have been seen at about 8:30 o'clock, came from the north and was moving in a southerly direction when first noticed. The light was described as being about the size of a water bucket and gradually assumed smaller proportions until it vanished and was not observable to the eye. It remained visible about ten minutes. No messages were left behind by the aerial tourists.
> The object or whatever it might have been was viewed by a party of eight or ten persons at the home of Judge Sam H. Frost on West Third Avenue. Dr. Wills had his attention called to it and says that it was certainly not a meteor, for the reason that the light was intermittent, appearing to come and go, but that the object was too far from the earth for him to be able to see anything as to its form or shape. The light, he says, was the only visible part of the strange flyer ("Sighting the Airship," Dallas Morning News, April 16,1897).

Water buckets were about eighteen inches across the top. It is somewhat hard to tell the difference between an eighteen-inch light and a star, according to the mass-hysteria advocates, but not to anyone else with an interest in solving this one-hundred-year-old mystery. To which theory of the airships' origin do you think you might subscribe? Newspaper hoax? Railroad hoax? Mass hysteria? Aliens? God? Government cover-up?

Here is a fun test: wait until it is very dark, take a penlight, turn it on, and hold it about twenty feet to the side of an illuminated automobile headlight. (Let's make this tough—leave the headlight beam on low). Determine, from a distance of about fifty feet, if you can tell the difference between the headlight and the penlight. If you cannot, you must—that is, you absolutely have no choice—subscribe to the mass-hysteria solution, and therefore, you need not read any further. If you can tell the difference, then you are free to continue reading and, ultimately, discern your own solution. For those individuals who are sight-impaired, you may skip this test. For those who are thinking-impaired, you may skip the remainder of the book < Smile. >

The sighting occurred during a party "at the home of Judge Sam H. Frost." If this party was at the home of some wayward drunk, the account would never be published by the paper. Since the party was at the home of a judge, the sighting has credibility. However, notice the article does not actually claim the judge saw the airship, only that the sighting occurred at his home.

This sighting was witnessed by "a party of eight or ten persons." Many of the sightings had multiple witnesses. Dr. Wills is willing to state that the light is not a meteor. Although we do not know what kind of doctor Wills was, it seems the fact that he is a doctor lends credence to his identification of the sighting as an airship and not a meteor, comet, planet, star, or "fire balloon." Let us assume he was not a doctor of proctology, therefore lending greater weight to his identification of the aerial phenomenon as an airship. <Smile.>

SEEN NEAR WHITNEY

Hillsboro, Hill Co., Tex. April 17—The publication in The Dallas News yesterday and today relative to the airships that has been seen in different portions of the state has been the sole topic of conversation on the streets and elsewhere in this city today.

Since the reliability of the witnesses that have seen it is unimpeachable many persons now come forward and admit having seen it. John Ford of Whitney, brother-in-law of O. H. Young of this city, president of the county Christian Endeavor, was in the city yesterday and Mr. Young said to The News reporter:

"John Ford was here yesterday and told me that he saw the airship Wednesday night [April 14] as he was returning from Hillsboro to Whitney. He was near Peoria and looking up saw a black object that looked very much like a passenger coach going in a southwesterly direction. He described it as having an immense headlight—and as being brilliantly lighted within and as traveling at a very rapid rate. He watched it until it completely disappeared. He would not say anything about it for several days because he was afraid somebody would think he was trying to get off a gag."

> Other parties in various sections of the county report having seen the ship. Several parties are going to set up here tonight and watch the heavens for the mysterious visitor that rarely shows itself except at night ("High in the Heavens," Dallas Morning News, April 18,1897, p. 4).

Focus your attention on the statement "Since the reliability of the witnesses that have seen it is unimpeachable many persons now come forward and admit having seen it." The fear of ridicule for reporting a sighting seemed to lessen as more "reliable" people confessed to having seen the airship. For us to believe all the sightings across the state and even the country were a hoax, we must believe all the "reliable" people were willing to be represented as liars by the newspaper. It is not a likely scenario.

John Ford "saw a black object." Recall the description of the helicopter-like movements in the account "Strange Object Seen" (in chapter three). Is this the original, the first "black helicopter"? Did the government conspiracy to shield us from that which we are too weak to understand begin not at Roswell, New Mexico, in 1952 but much earlier? Much fodder to ponder for the conspiracy buffs among us. But, there are reasonable and believable explanations forthcoming.

In this account we have our first good description of the airship— other than a description of the light. The black object looked very much like a passenger coach—perhaps a train passenger coach. Notice how descriptions of the airship are given in terms of the day's technology. As the number of printed accounts of the sightings grew, more people watched the sky. Airship-watching parties suddenly become fashionable.

SEEN TWICE ABOUT TEXARKANA

Texarkana, Bowie Co. Tex. April 17—The mysterious bright light that has been visible in the heavens for the past fortnight has been seen from this point. Wednesday night [April 14] it was spied by the telegraph operator at Hope, Ark., who claims to have experienced a full ray of the headlight upon himself about 11 o'clock p.m.; that it was zigzagging its courses in a northwesterly direction and was sailing about a mile high; that he plainly discerned the shape of a large dark object with one light which he though could be nothing but an airship.

> Thursday night [April 15] many truthful citizens in Texarkana viewed a light of monster proportions sailing away to the northwest. It was described as too large and too near the earth to be a star ("High in the Heavens," Dallas Morning News, April 18,1897, p. 4).

Correspondents were sensitive to the need to frame their airship stories in a context that would be believable, else they might become an object of ridicule. "Many truthful citizens" interpreted means a large number of common, everyday, hard-working folks saw the mysterious visitor.

THE SIGHT AT ORANGE.

> Orange., Tex., April 19.—Orange was not left out by the airship that has recently enjoyed such wide advertisement. Mrs. Ed. M. Davis, wife of the city marshal, saw a luminous object passing over the western portion of this county last Wednesday night [April 14] which, from the position she occupied, appeared to be a very large comet with bright lights at the fore and a train of paler light several hundred feet long trailing behind. Its course was from the SW to NE and it kept a straight course as long as she watched it. Others saw it, and all agree that it did not descend while they were looking at it. Mrs. Davis has kept her eyes on the papers, expecting to read of an aerolite landing in one of the upper counties ("Airship Spoken," Galveston Daily News, April 22, 1897, p. 4).

This is the first and only description of the airship as carrying a "train of paler light several hundred feet long trailing behind." I do not think this is a genuine airship sighting. What Mrs. Davis saw is anyone's guess. Cocaine and morphine were easily available in this era of few written drug laws. Perhaps, she had too much laudanum, a morphinebased medicine, to drink. Or, perhaps, she did see the airship as it was performing some experiment that we do not understand at the moment.

April 14, 1897, sightings

Enough airship sightings occurred on April 14, 1897, to plot their locations and determine the location of the daytime hiding lair. This map shows the localities where the airship was seen on the night of April 14. The thin lines with an arrow on the end depict the direction that the airship was said by the observer to be traveling. If the time of the sighting is given in the newspaper account, it is listed. The approximate distance between localities is shown. Connect the dots and see if you can determine the possible flight path of the airship(s) based upon the stated direction of flight and time of sighting.

The dashed lines represent the supposed flight path of the airship, assuming it traveled in a straight line. Such triangulation methods are used in various disciplines to determine the origination of an event. As an example, triangulating the path of a missile will provide the location of the missile-launch site. From such measures, we can pinpoint the location of the airship(s) daytime hiding lair in the area somewhat north of Sherman. The ability to accurately pinpoint the daytime hiding place of the airship(s) will be the "icing on the cake." Pay attention!

Almost all airship flights originated in the late evening and terminated the following morning. To get a clearer picture of the destinations, when appropriate, the sightings from the following morning are included as a "sub-table." These sightings are clearly identified on the sighting plot.

WIND AND THE FLIGHT OF THE AIRSHIP

From an April 14 sighting, I made the following comments: "The speed of the airship seems to be related to the direction of travel. Notice the time to fly from Corsicana to Weatherford, a distance of roughly 99 miles, is 30 minutes, an incredible 198 miles per hour. Yet, the time to travel from Weatherford, Texas, to Hope, Arkansas, a distance of 247 miles, is 2 hours, a slow 126 miles per hour." Why the difference in speed for each direction? Did the airship begin experiencing some mechanical difficulty, or was it intentionally flying slowly to plot the lay of the land for future reference? Or, maybe it landed in a remote section of the region for some unknown purpose, with a resulting reduced average speed from Weatherford to Hope? What could have happened to yield two greatly differing average velocities? The explanation is wind resistance.

When an airship or airplane is flying into the wind, called a headwind, its speed is reduced proportionally to the speed of the wind. When an airship or airplane is flying away from the wind, called a tailwind, its speed is increased proportionally. Since a mathematician can solve for two unknown quantities (wind speed and airship speed), if there are two equations, we can determine the airship and wind speed from the information we have.

Note:The following two equations give the averages of the two quantities of concern: air speed and wind speed. There is no way we can determine the maximum, or instantaneous, speed for these two quantities given the information available.

air speed + wind speed =198 mph (the headwind equation)
air speed - wind speed = 126 mph (the tailwind equation)

If we add the two equations simultaneously, we get:

2 * average air speed = 324 mph

or

average air speed = 162 mph

Now, we place the value of the average air speed back into one of the original equations and solve for average wind speed:

air speed + wind speed = 198 mph (original headwind equation)
162 mph + wind speed = 198 mph
average wind speed = 36 mph

Substituting the air speed into the original equation for the tailwind also yields an air speed of 36 miles per hour. So, with a great degree of certainty we can predict, using the sighting data we have from the newspaper accounts, the average wind speed was 36 miles per hour on the evening of April 14, 1897. To confirm this prediction, and in some way validate the observations in the newspaper accounts as highly accurate, I researched old newspapers along the line of flight for a weather report for April 14, 1897.I was unsuccessful in finding a definitive account of the wind speed for April 14. I did, however, find a report that on the evening of April 14, a severe thunderstorm passed through Sherman, Texas (Dallas Morning News, April 15, 1897, p. 4). Sherman is located just a couple of miles north of the flight path of the airship. Every spring thunderstorm in Texas is accompanied by high winds from the northwest. So, we have at least circumstantial evidence of high winds occurring during the evening in question. But, just how high were the winds?

Continuing to search for evidence of high winds on April 14,I looked through the Report of the Chief of the Weather Bureau, 1897-1898 (U.S. Department of Agriculture, Weather Bureau, Washington, Government Printing Office, 1899). Unfortunately, the Weather Bureau reports were not given by day, but were summarized by month and only for the locations possessing a Weather Bureau station. The closest station to the flight path of the airship was at Abilene, Texas, which is some 50 miles west of the nearest point on the airship's flight path. The Weather Bureau reported that the highest sustained wind for Abilene in the month of April was 36 miles per hour.

Living in the north Texas area for many years, I have weathered numerous spring thunderstorms. The thunderstorms roll out of the northwest and tumble down the Red River valley into the Mississippi valley. If a weatherman predicts the thunderstorm's ascension between 8:00 P.M. and 10:00 P.M., he will be right much more than he will be wrong. The severe thunderstorms are always accompanied by high winds. In this age, the sustained wind speed of these tornado-producing storms is around 35 miles per hour, with gusts up to 60 miles an hour a common attribute of the sometimes-lethal storms. It is difficult to imagine the wind habits of these dangerous storms have changed over the last one hundred years. A severe thunderstorm rolling down the valley today will have the same physical characteristics as a thunderstorm one hundred years ago. Additionally, literature from the early days of Texas describing the storms endured by the pioneers is identical to the descriptions of thunderstorms today. Armed with this knowledge of spring thunderstorm behavior and the fact that Sherman experienced a severe thunderstorm on the night in question, and knowing the highest sustained wind in April in the general area was 36 miles per hour, it is entirely reasonable for us to believe that the reported accounts of the airship sightings correspond with the known weather patterns that existed on the night of interest. That is, a northwesterly wind was blowing during the evening of April 14, and the wind impacted the flight of the airship.

Although the northwesterly wind was not a headwind for the Weatherford-Hope leg of the trip, but actually a sidewind, the airship would experience a force proportional (36 miles per hour) to the velocity of the wind pushing it to the southeast, off its intended path. Keeping the math simple, we can estimate that in the two hours the airship was flying to Hope, the northwesterly wind would push the airship about 72 miles southeast of its destination. Seventy-two miles represent about one-third of the distance between Weatherford and Hope. So, the average speed of the airship to get from Weatherford to Hope when calculated on a straight-line path would be reduced accordingly, or about one-third. One-third of 198 mph is 66 miles per hour. Subtract 66 from 198 and we have 132 miles per hour, which is in very close agreement to the calculated speed of 126 miles per hour on a straight-line path between Weatherford and Hope.

Notice that the airship, if experiencing a 36-miles-per-hour wind from the northwest, pushing it off course, would wind up flying over Dallas on its way from Weatherford to Hope. Since the Dallas report of the sighting does not give a time, we cannot say for sure that the airship passed over Dallas on its way to Hope. But, from the analysis, it sure does look like it may have.

A discerning observer may note that if a northwest wind was blowing for all of the time the airship was airborne, then the airship would experience a similar sidewind (Corsicana to Peoria) and even a headwind (Peoria to Weatherford) effect as it traversed the portion of its flight path from Corsicana to Weatherford. If such a case existed, then the average speed between the two legs of the journey would be approximately the same. Since the average speed of the two legs of the path are not the same we are left to conclude the wind was not blowing from the northwest during the first leg of the journey. The explanation, a late-evening spring storm blew in on April 14,1897, just as spring storms do today.

In the spring in north Texas, the wind usually blows out of the southeast until a cool front moves through from the west-northwest. A cool front can trigger a spring thunderstorm any time of the day or night. Also, spring thunderstorms in north Texas arise during the late evening hours as the result of the cooling effect from the sun going over the horizon. When this occurs, violent thunderstorms rush in from the westnorthwest with accompanying strong winds.

On April 14, it is possible that the wind was initially from the southeast, giving the airship a good tailwind in the early evening hours, or the wind may have been only very light or even still. As the airship made its way past Weatherford and began the second leg of the journey, a thunderstorm may have rolled into the region and began pushing the airship off course with its strong northwesterly winds.

Finally, another possibility is that the crew of the airship, sometime in the flight between Weatherford and Hope, encountered the thunderstorm and set the airship down on the ground to wait out the storm. This scenario is only likely if the thunderstorm was off in the distance, as an unprotected airship of this design would be blown to pieces sitting unsheltered and unprotected on the ground. The crew, by now, would realize the best chances of surviving the thunderstorm would be to remain aloft and ride the winds. If the airships were truly capable of flying 200 miles per hour then riding out a storm with 50- to 80-milesper-hour gusts would not present any major difficulty. Of course, getting struck by lightning while aloft would present another set of issues. However, in these spring storms, the wind precedes the storm by such a distance that it is entirely possible for the airship to safely traverse the distance between Weatherford and Hope without encountering any serious threat from lightning.

My personal feeling is the airship was trying to reach its daytime hiding lair near Sherman as it left Weatherford. The spring thunderstorm brewed up about the time it neared Weatherford and blew it off course, causing it to fly over Dallas, a community it preferred to avoid, as it continued to get blown off course in its eastward travel. At night, the crew would only know they had left Texas when they crossed the Red River. Remember this was a time of no radio beacons. Navigation was strictly by visual reference to known ground objects. By the time they could turn the ship to a westerly heading after crossing the Red, sufficient time and distance passed, allowing them to pass near Hope. Hope is about ten miles north of the Red River.

If we seek "proof" of the veracity of these newspaper accounts, we have such "proof" in our hands. On the night of April 14, 1897, one airship, of unknown origin, flew across the night skies of Texas. Mass hysteria and prank calls to the newspaper do not admit of systematic events that yield the type of results just demonstrated by a thorough analysis of the evidence. Such behavior, that is hysteria and pranks, in humankind is random, and any analysis of such behavior yields random, usually nonsensical, results that do not produce reasonable conclusions from the analysis. Only casual systems, that is, systems that are systematic, which have times and events associated with them, yield the kind of results just demonstrated. One or more people flying a machine around the night sky of Texas represents a casual system. In other words, if it didn't really happen, the above analysis would not yield any meaningful results. But, the analysis did yield meaningful results; therefore it did happen.

But, the great skeptics among us will say, "Yea, right. It was planned all along by the newspapers just to sell more newsprint. The newspaper people conspired to print these stories and made up the dates and times to be 'casual.'" Okay, that may be a valid argument. So, please explain how all the hundreds of newspapers that reported airship sightings across the country in the spring of 1897 (see appendix B for a long list of newspapers known to print airship stories) could conspire to report such sightings and keep their conspiracy secret? Conspiracies of more than one person are difficult to keep secret and are seldom successful. And just how could all of these far-flung newspapers coordinate such a conspiracy? It seems improbable that newspaper editors and reporters conspired to report anything about airships other than what was actually seen and reported in their locale.

THURSDAY, APRIL 15, 1897

There are twelve airship sightings on the night of April 15. As the story continues and the number of sightings increases, the airships' construction is revealed in greater detail. The analysis of the reported sightings for this night lays the foundation for the belief that there is more than one airship flying the skies of Texas. The story continues ...

SEEN AT CRESSON

Fort Worth, Tex. April 15—Night Chief Operator Dunlap of the Texas and Pacific Union depot relay office in this city, hands the News correspondent the following:

The operator at Cresson on the Rio Grande railway claims he has seen the mysterious and much talked of airship. He describes it as resembling the top of a passenger coach in shape, long and pointed at the ends, with powerful searchlight in the front end, with several smaller ones on the sides. The ship appeared to the operator to be about sixty feet in length, and when first sighted was making a terrific rate of speed in a southwestern direction. It had wings on it, he said, something like that of a bat. After passing the station about two miles he saw the ship suddenly alter its courses and turn to the southeast and disappeared within a few minutes behind a cloud. He says this is no optical illusion nor after touch of an extensive jag—but the truth, pure and simple.

Continuing, Mr. Dunlap said:

"This is dead straight. I am now convinced that there is something in this airship business for several prominent citizens of this locality also saw the ship."

Cresson is thirteen miles southwest of Fort Worth ("Sighting the Airship," Dallas Morning News, April 16,1897).

This account gives us greater detail of the airship. The interesting details are highlighted. The passenger-coach reference must be something similar to a train coach and not a stagecoach. The "long and pointed" ends suggest an aerodynamic shape. "... wings on it" is pretty much self-explanatory. Wings are needed for stability in an atmosphere. ". . . suddenly alter its courses" rules out the possibility of it being a comet, planet, or star and implies the airship was maneuverable. Naturally occurring objects do not "suddenly alter their courses" unless they are involved in a collision with another heavenly body. The smaller lights on the side suggest the existence of portholes alongside the body, or coach, of the airship.

The above account is dated April 15. It seems likely that the date of the sighting was that night. The observer is the Cresson telegraph operator who telegraphed the Fort Worth operator the story of his sighting. The statement that the Fort Worth operator handed the correspondent the telegraph from the Cresson operator lends weight to the judgment that the sighting was on the evening of April 15.

A jag is a period term meaning "a state of being drunk." People were thought to imagine all manner of nonexistent things when in a drunken state. A comparable situation today might be the suspicion that someone reporting weird things is high on some drug such as cocaine.

A few people, typically ufologists, have read some of the sighting accounts and have reached the conclusion that the whole episode was a great farce initiated and perpetuated by railroad telegraphers. According to their explanation, bored telegraphers sat around in the early morning hours and made up these accounts as a means of having some fun. What these people do not realize is that telegraphers were accountable to their railroad employers for what they transmitted. Logs were kept and reviewed daily. It is really unimaginable that such a widespread conspiracy could be started and maintained for six months by members of such an esteemed profession while sanctioned by their employers. Telegraphers of the day commanded much respect and admiration. A telegrapher was hardly the type of individual to go around making up stories.

El Paso, April 16. (Special.)—The "airship fever" seems to have struck this vicinity. Mr. Robert Hitch and family, living north of town, say they saw a bright light in the heavens between 8 and 9 o'clock last night [April 15] and supposed it to be the much talked of airship. The light seemed to be headed for the northwest and was going at a good rate of speed. Several others also saw it. The character and truthfulness of those who claim to have seen the airship are unquestionable and it is likely, if there is anything in this airship business, the object seen last night was the flying ship {Bloomington (Illinois) Daily Pantagraph, April 17, 1897, p. 5).

AT AND NEAR MARSHALL

> Marshall, Harrison Co., Tex. April 16, Conductor Virgil Brown and his brakeman James Murphy saw the much described airship at Jewella, La., a station on the Texas and Pacific railway, thirtytwo miles east of here last night [April 15]. There seemed to be a huge searchlight that attached to the aerial machine and the light was thrown in several different directions. The speed of the ship was far faster than a railroad train. The ship appeared to be going in the direction of Marshall.
> Dick Weatherby, a night watchman at the Texas and Pacific railway car shops (in Marshall) said he saw this unusual aerial visitor at 10:30 o'clock last night. A number of other reputable persons claims to have had a view of this unknown visitor at about the same time.
> Last night the sky was perfectly clear. Many people have provided themselves with powerful glasses and will scan the heavens tonight to get a view of this strange object ("Flight of the Airship," Dallas Morning News, April 17, 1897, p. 8).

By now, the reader can see that the "huge searchlight" is a common attribute in many sightings. From now on the phrase will be highlighted only to show the consistency of the descriptions.

Railroad trains of the period could go as fast as 90 miles per hour, but the typical speed of passenger trains was 70 miles per hour. The phrase "far faster than a railroad train" could mean just about any speed. But, let's think about the statement for a moment. Today, if we were to see a car pass us on the freeway and observe that it was going far faster than the vehicle in which we were riding, its speed might be about double ours. If so, then the airship could have been traveling around 140 to 180 miles per hour. Although this speed still sounds incredibly fast for anything flying in the skies in 1897, it is still in close agreement with the speed calculated at the end of chapter four, where the airship was seen traveling from Corsicana to Weatherford to Hope.

Chartered by Congress in 1871, the Texas and Pacific Railroad maintained a maintenance facility at Marshall. The maintenance complex was built in 1873.

The citation of "a number of other reputable persons" gives great weight to the story's truthfulness—at least the editor hoped it did. After seeing this phrase or similar ones repeated again and again in the accounts of the airship sightings, a thinking person begins to wonder how many persons who were not reputable saw the airships. Of course, one must have some idea of the number of unreputable people versus the number of people who where considered reputable in any particular community to even begin to guess at the number of those unreputable individuals who might have seen the airship.

Or, maybe, only reputable people's visions were good enough to see the airship. Perhaps, the unreputable were to bleary-eyed from drinking to see much of anything, or they were too hung over to report the sighting the following morning. But, more likely, correspondents just would not write an airship story unless they could believe the individual telling the story.

In that day and age, pretty much like now, such discerning censorship ruled out any stories getting into print based on unreliable individuals' accounts. Too bad, at least they might have made for very entertaining reading. But, I believe we can "take to the bank" the truthfulness of many of the accounts that follow. Editors and newspaper correspondents just had too much to lose—such as their credibility and subsequently their jobs and, perhaps, even their profession—if they printed false accounts of airships. They would ensure the truthfulness of what they printed to the maximum extent practicable and then hedge their bet by editorializing against the existence of the airship. Remember, the age of marginal reporting was not yet upon the land.

As for hoaxes, newspapers of the period did engage in some amount of fake storytelling. Such stories were designed to be represented as factual, yet the yarn was totally fabricated. Usually, such a story was presented to the public in installments. When newspapers engaged in this sort of serialized storytelling, they typically informed their readers the yarn was a hoax at the end of the final installment. The airship accounts do not fit the mold of a typical newspaper hoax. However, we cannot completely rule out the possibility that any particular story may be a hoax, as there are several known stories, not included in this book and not of Texas origin, that are known to be hoaxes.

Those airship stories known to be false were generated by some member of the community, usually with the help of a friend who supplied corroborating testimony to the truthfulness of the account. The primary reason we know they are false is because the individual or individuals perpetuating the hoax came forward at some later date and admitted to hoaxing the community. A common attribute of these hoaxes was the inclusion of some outrageous claim, such as the abduction of a cow from a farmer's field. Other than the purported speed of the airship, which in some accounts seems outrageous for 1897 America, all airship stories in this book stand the test of reasonable and realistic events unless otherwise identified.

SEEN NEAR HILLSBORO

A Lawyer had a good view and gives a graphic description

Hillsboro, Hill Co., Tex., April 16—Last evening [April 15] Hon J. Spence Bounds of this city was called out into the southwestern section of the country near Osceola to write the will of William H. Gathings, an old settler, who is quite sick and is not expected to recover. It was dusk when Mr. Bounds got there and as the will was lengthy with complications in it, it was nearly 9 o'clock when he got through and started home. What occurred on his homeward drive is best related in his own language to the News reporter in the presence of Judge J. M. Hall of the eighteenth judicial district and Hon. W. E. Spell, attorney for the Missouri, Kansas, and Texas railway. Said Mr. Bounds:

"I want to relate a little thing that I witnessed last night. I had been up to old Uncle Billy Gathings to write his will and was driving homeward thinking of the old man and his useful career and the reward that doubtless awaited him in the good hereafter when I was astonished by a brilliant flash from an electric search light which passed directly over my buggy. I want to tell you also that I was almost frightened to death by it for it made the space around me as light as day. My horse was also frightened and came near overturning the buggy. He snorted, reared, and plunged madly trembling meantime like a leaf. My hair stood straight up and I was almost too exercised to pay attention to the horse. Fortunately the light rested on us scarcely a second, but glided along over the fields and the country till it was suddenly turned upward toward the heavens. Then following it with my eyes I beheld about 1000 feet above me. I judge a huge black monster from which the light emanated. It was in shape something like a cigar, but underneath there appeared to be a body similar to the body of a ship, which was attached to the object and from which the light originated. The search light was presently shut off and a number incandescent lights flashed around the lower edge of the body of the vessel or whatever it was. When I first saw it was going very slowly in a southerly direction. The lights were soon entirely extinguished and it glided along like a small black cloud in the air. When some miles further south the search light again appeared and guided along the timbers of Aquilla creek and rested on a hill about three miles this side of the town of Aquilla. The vessel or ship steered for the hull and as it approached it all the lights were again extinguished and the ship disappeared from my sight. I think it must have stopped on the hill.

"I never had anything to so thoroughly work me up and I resumed my journey home, considering in my mind the strange adventure of the night. I have read and heard much of the airships, but I never expected to see one. I had never seriously thought of them as possible but in a few minutes I recalled the many stories I have recently seen in the papers about airships and decided that what I had seen was an airship. When I was within a mile of Hillsboro, about an hour later, I saw the same object rise from the locality where it disappeared. It ascended till it looked like a mere dark cloud in the skies when it started in a northeasterly direction and went at a terrific rate of speed. It must have gone at the rate of 100 miles an hour or more. It was headed as near as I can judge toward Dallas or near there. Every few seconds it would send out brilliant flashes and sparkles but it traveled most of the time in darkness.

"Now gentlemen, I am not prepared by my profession to believe everything I see and hear, but I saw that object and my horse saw it. It almost made both of us frantic. So there is no denying the fact of its existence. The question is what is it? Man has conquered the ocean, but we are told that the devil is the prince of the air. Again, the scriptures say the devil shall be turned loose for a season. Who knows but what the scripture is being fulfilled right here before our very eye. It is possible I admit for man to get up a flying machine, but still for all that I have seen I feel curious as to what it was and can't help it."

> Judge Hall and Mr. Spell were such interested in the narrative. The former commenting on it said:
> "There is no end to the invention of man and I place fully as much confidence in what my friend Bounds saw as the accounts I read in the papers about airships everyday."
> "Yes," added Mr. Spell, "when Bounds in on the opposite side of a case that I am I think he is the most imaginative man in Texas, but when he descends from the bar and says on his honor as a gentleman that a thing is so I deal very gently with him and always give him the benefit of the doubt" ("Flight of the Airship," Dallas Morning News, April 17, 1897, p. 8).

The description "underneath there appeared to be a body similar to the body of a ship" would be a gondola or the coach mentioned in previous accounts.

"Brilliant flashes and sparkles" are evidence of electrical motors in use on the airship. Electrical motors generate a great deal of sparking where the commutator brushes rub against the commutator as it spins around. We typically do not see the sparks they generate today because the sparking has been much reduced due to better-quality materials for commutator brushes and because most electrical motors have that portion of the motor in a tight or sealed portion of the apparatus to prevent accidental fires or explosions.

Explosions and fires from open commutator brushes were an everyday threat and reality in the early days of electrical motors. Today, any electrical motor on an airplane must meet stringent FAA and industry regulations regarding its safety. However, to get an idea of what people might be seeing, except on a much smaller scale, look into the air intake of a hand-held hair dryer while it is running. Don't look to closely, though, as we do not want you to stick anything in your eyes. You should see some sparking going on. Now imagine such sparking magnified, perhaps a hundred-thousandfold.

This is the first account that places a high number on the speed of the airship. Previous accounts just stated the airship was going "very fast" or "faster than a railroad train," etc. From such comments we will attempt to gauge the speed of the airship. A vehicle that could ascend the skies and fly up, down, forward, and backward does not seem too incredible for 1897 technology. What does seem so incredible is a machine that could fly so fast (100 mile per hour plus) in 1897. The Wright brothers are still six years away from making their first successful flight from Kittyhawk, and Count Ferdinand von Zeppelin is three years away from flying his first 30 miles per hour airship. Could only alien life-forms possess the technology to fly 100 miles per hour? If so, they must be humanoid as Truthful Scully did not remark on any unusual physical features of the crewmember he saw repairing the ship at Hawkins Tank.

SEEN AT PARIS?

An Accurate Description by One Who Observed It Closely

Paris, Tex., April 16.—Several parties claim to have witnessed the flight of the mysterious airship that has attracted so much attention the last few days, as it passed over this city at an early hour yesterday morning [April 15]. The most accurate account is gleamed from Mr. J. A. Black, the night watchman for the Paris oil and cotton company's plant. He said to The News man:

"I was engaged in making my usual rounds at the mill yesterday morning about 2 o'clock when I observed a faint, but luminous object in the northeast sky which attracted my attention. It had the appearance of being enveloped in a luminous, hazy cloud. I first thought it to be a meteor of gigantic proportions and its speed appeared equal to such a planetary tramp. As it came nearer this idea was quickly dispelled. I ran to the cabin of a colored man by the name of Jim Smith, just across the road, and awoke him and together we viewed the aerial monster as it approached nearer. From what appeared to be at first a luminous cloud there was now clearly outlined a monster airship. Myself and the negro Smith were held spellbound by the sight. We had a perfect view of the ship for the night was clear and the moon was shinning bright at the time. The ship had sails or wings outstretched on both sides of its cigar-shaped body and on both ends there were large rotating fans projecting from the sails at an angle of about 45 degrees, the one in front being elevated, while the one at the rear was depressed, somewhat resembling the tail of a bird. We could only gain a faint idea of its accurate size, but think it must have been 200 feet long, the sails or wings constituting nine-tenths of the whole. The cigar-shaped cabin was apparently suspended in the midst of the sails, and it was evident that the fans were propelled by some power or force located in the cabin. The noise of the propelling machinery was plainly heard as the ship sailed swiftly over us. My dog was with me when it was first discovered, and he set up an unearthly moaning, which he continued until the curious visitor was completely lost to view. The negro was visibly affected, and being naturally superstitious lost no time in falling to his knees and offering up a prayer for the safety of himself and family. The negro even now claims that the airship was none other than the return of Noah's ark with wing-like attachments on its way toward the Mississippi bottoms, its mission being to save the colored folks from the perils of the overflow in that section. I am sure for my part that what I saw was a veritable airship and that it had lights radiatingfrom the various openings on its sides, but whether originating from the power of illuminating machinery or not I am unable to say. I would judge that it was traveling at about the same rate of speed as the passenger trains do in Texas, although from the time I first observed it in the far northeast sky until it disappeared from view in the northwest, was not over ten minutes, I think" Mr. Black says that he is willing to make affidavit as to the truthfulness of the assertions above ("Flight of the Airship," Dallas Morning News, April 17,1897, p. 8).

So far, the descriptions of the airship are pretty consistent, with the length of the airships being the only inconsistent feature in the newspaper reports. Several accounts place the length of the span from wing tip to wing tip as 150 to 200 feet and other accounts judge the length to be 50 or 60 feet. The ship is cigar-shaped with two canvas-covered wings, a rudder, a searchlight, and other lights visible from the side of it.

The account says the wings made up nine-tenths of the whole. The remaining one-tenth is the width of the "cabin . . . suspended in the midst of the sails." That is, the width of the cabin would then be onetenth of 200—or about 20 feet.

"Same speed as the passenger trains," and being in sight "not over ten minutes" place the speed of the airship between 70 miles per hour and 150 miles per hour. High-speed passenger trains of the day traveled the open road between 70 and 90 miles per hour, depending upon the terrain, the condition of the tracks, and the type of service. Probably 100 to 120 miles per hour is a good estimate of the ship's speed and is in close agreement with previous estimates of the airship's speed.

RAILROAD MAN SAW IT

Sherman, Texas. April 16.—W. B. Hellyer, brakeman of the Missouri, Kansas and Texas railway in this city, last night [April 15] saw a dark oval shaped object apparently six times its diameter in length pass across the moon. It moved slowly and apparently toward the southeast. At the hour Mr. Hellyer saw what he thinks may be the airship there was not a cloud in the sky ("Flight of the Airship," Dallas Morning News, April 17, 1897, p. 8).

If the diameter is 25 feet, then the length is 150 feet (6 x 25 = 150), still consistent with previous descriptions of the airship's length and width.

SEEN AT FORT WORTH

Ennis, Ellis Co., Tex., April 16.—Conductor W. W. Hanney of the Fort Worth branch, said today that while sitting on his front porch with his wife and mother at Fort Worth last night [April 15] their attention was attracted to a strange object moving over the city. He says it was a large dark object, bearing a bright light in front, but he did not see any wings or sails. The object was moving in a southwest direction and soon passed out of his sight ("Flight of the Airship," Dallas Morning News, April 17, 1897, p. 8).

QUALITY OF LIQUOR INTERFERES.

Waxahachie, Ellis Co., Tex April 16—The people of Waxahachie have been looking skyward today in hopes of getting a glimpse of the much talked of airship. A certain gentleman remarked to the News reporter that the whiskey sold in Waxahachie was very good, and he didn't think any airship would be discovered from this reservation. This remark will not keep many from viewing the skies diligently to night ("Flight of the Airship," Dallas Morning News, April 17,1897, p. 8).

LESS SKEPTICAL NOW

Denton, Denton Co., Tex., April 16—Since other dispatches in the News report the presence of an airship in Texas, other observers here have been bolder thereby report that they too have seen the mysterious vessel, and less doubt is attached to the report from this place in The News yesterday [April 15] relative thereto ("Flight of the Airship," Dallas Morning News, April 17,1897, p. 8).

When a few creditable people confess to viewing some phenomenon, other, perhaps less creditable, people will step forward and admit to witnessing the same event. No one wants to be accused of seeing things that don't exist. However, many of those individuals who feel safe and secure in their worldly positions will quite readily admit to witnessing something unusual, as they do not fear ridicule. Other, less secure individuals, who depend upon the goodwill of their neighbors to survive a less forgiving society, fear ridicule greatly and will not admit to anything out of the ordinary unless the path was previously trod by the fearless and respected. It is to be expected that the number of reported sightings would be few until the newspapers printed accounts of sightings by respected individuals. Then the leak becomes a flood, as we will see.

THE AIRSHIP'S "WATCHMAN, WHAT OF THE NIGHT?"

> And now come deponents and make affidavit that the airship has been seen sailing over Texas. The story comes this time from concurrent and cumulative, reliable testimony. It was seen near Weatherford night before last [April 15], sailing over the city, by a number of persons, and last, but not least, by The Statesman correspondence, which puts the fact beyond doubt. All these intelligent people can hardly have been deluded and deceived by their optics. If they were not, and if the stories coming from different sections of the country are true that airships are frequently seen during the night. What does it mean?

> It must be remembered that this thing has been going on for several months. These ships have been seen at Kansas City, Leavenworth, Kan., over Oklahoma, and, lately, over Weatherford, Tex. The sea serpent was for many years considered a myth, or an apparition to the deceived, excited optics of sailors, but it has finally been established upon reliable testimony that sea monsters have been seen and captured. Now is it possible that any man or set of men have invented and secretly constructed an airship, in which they make voyages through the air at night, and have succeeded in concealing all the facts connected with the airship such a length of time? If the evidence from remote sections of the country is correct and conclusive, then we must take it that some one or some parties of men have invented and are successfully working airships, or that there is some supernatural power that has come to the aid of the mortals and is taking observations along the earth's surface from floating airships. As impossible as it would seem that such an experiment could be successfully concealed from the public, of course it can more readily be believed that these ships are sailed by supernatural crews.

> Yet it is not impossible to believe the latter theory. Many Biblical scholars believe that prophecy is about to be fulfilled. They are in doubt only upon the date to begin their calculation, whether at the birth of Christ or at the beginning or ending of His ministry. There is a doubt of about thirty-three years in their calculations, but many of the best scholars in the church believe that it is the only ground of doubt. If that is true, it is time that we begin to look for wonders in the heavens. We have had the fulfillment of prophecy of the extraordinary events that were to take place on earth, floods, famines, earthquakes, wars and rumors of wars, and religious persecutions, one sect murdering another sect wholesale and believing they were doing God's service. We have even had healers coming to see us saying they possessed all the powers of Christ, and claiming substantially that they were Christ. All the predictions of prophecy concerning what would happen on the face of the earth have been verified, and if these airships are supernatural the heavens are about to declare the fulfillment of prophecy.

> But, as difficult as it is to believe that these airships have been invented and are operated by men of the earth, even that is more easily believed than to believe that these ships are manned and sailed by celestial crews and portend the beginning of another dispensation pointed out by the inspired writers (Austin American Statesman, April 17,1897, p. 4).

". . . and now come deponents and make affidavit" was pretty much the ultimate in attempting to convince someone you were telling the truth. Making affidavits in the glorious age of steam engines was no small matter. Affidavits were taken very seriously and anyone falsely swearing to an affidavit was punished severely by the judicial system. Yet, with the threat of confinement in prison for falsely swearing, people were willing to legally swear they saw this mysterious flying machine.

Preachers, biblical scholars, and their followers tend to look at any unknown and unfamiliar event as originating from or otherwise serving heaven's purpose. This is especially true when a date supposed to be of special significance is near, such as the beginning of a new century or millennium. Today, we can appreciate the latter case, having passed from the twentieth century to the twenty-first century. I do not recall any inexplicable events during the intervening years from 1999 and now that might be interpreted as God or God's messengers collecting the righteous (regardless of the Heaven's Gate cult advocating otherwise). However, the righteous may in fact have been collected. So, perhaps, the Heaven's Gate crowd was right, and that could explain the social decay we perceive in postmodern society. So, if this is the case, I guess you and I will not be seeing much of the real heaven's gate beyond St. Peter and the outside of the pearly portal prior to our departure to other, less agreeable abodes. < Smile.>

As hard as it is to imagine that someone had actually overcome the forces of nature and was merrily flying around the unpopulated skies of Texas at speeds of over 100 miles per hour, it is even harder to imagine God, or God's messengers, flying around in a relatively slow and small airship while identifying or collecting the righteous. For some reason, I imagine God will be just a little more creative if and when the final call comes.

SEEN PLAINLY AT GARLAND

Garland, Tex., April 17—The airship which created so much excitement Thursday night [April 15], was seen in Garland by several among the number being J. N. Floyd, Agent N. B. Newland of the Katy and Mr. Cody. It was reported by them as traveling in a southerly direction at a surprising velocity passing a few miles to the west of Garland. Mr. Floyd got a good look at the ship and says he could see the engineer operating the machine.

Mr. Newland says the ship was in the shape of a cigar and had two sets of wings on each side and one wing on the rear end.

These gentlemen are reliable and their accounts of the noted air traveler have created no little excitement in Garland ("High in the Heavens, Dallas Morning News, April 18, 1897, p. 4.

QUESTION SETTLED

Davis, I.T. April 16.- The stories about the famous and much heard-of airship were satisfactorily proven to the people of this vicinity. Last night [April 15] shortly after dark A. M. Mitchner coming from his residence to town saw the strange and mysterious object flying through the air about 500 feet from the ground. It was headed directly west when first seen but changed its courses toward the south and did not come nearer the town than half a mile ("High in the Heavens, Dallas Morning News, April 18,1897, p. 4).

OBSERVED AT GREENVILLE

> Greenville, Hunt Co., Texas April 17—Several persons say they saw the mysterious aerial visitor the night of April 15. It was seen in the northwest, going southward. The sky was clear and bright moon light. The different colored lights from the ship could be distinctly noticed from any other lights in the sky ("High in the Heavens," Dallas Morning News, April 18, 1897, p. 4).

OFT SEEN AIR SHIP

CAPT. PAT C. BYRNES,

Telegraph Line Repairer,

Examined the Machine and Talked with Its Manager and Crew— Bound for Cuba to Deal Death to the Spaniards— A Description

Mr. Patrick C. Byrnes, a repairer in the telegraph department of the Texas and Pacific between Fort Worth and Baird, came in from the west last evening, and to a Register reporter told a story which a great many will doubt, and were it not for his reputation as a truthful man, The Register would hardly care to repeat it. Mr. Byrnes has been employed on the Texas and Pacific for the past twenty years, and has always been a truthful and honest employee.

As he told the story, Thursday afternoon and evening [April 15] he was engaged in making some repairs near Putnam station [Putnam is 12 miles west of Cisco], which occupied his time till it became dark on account of the clouds obscuring the moon, he was unable to proceed with his work, when he turned his attention to supper and a place to sleep. He started toward Cisco on his velocipede, and when near Delmar siding, about seven miles west of Cisco, he saw a light some little distance from the track on the south side. Knowing full well there was no farmhouse in the neighborhood, his curiosity was aroused, and, dismounting from his velocipede he proceeded to investigate.

Imagine, if you can, his surprise when he found that he had stumbled on to the airship which has attracted so much attention and been the occasion of a great deal of speculation of late as to what it really was. A number of men were moving about the ship, or machine, and seemed considerably surprised when Mr. Byrnes appeared. Nevertheless, they were nothing loath to talk when he had explained how he came to be there. Something had gone wrong with the search light of the ship, and not daring to proceed in darkness, the ship had been brought to the ground.

It is cigar-shaped, about 200 feet long, and fifty feet across at the widest point, gradually narrowing to a point at both ends. Mr. Byrnes was allowed to examine as much as he pleased and all his questions were answered.

At each end of the ship is a large steel snail-shell device. This, he was informed, was the apparatus by which the strange machine was propelled. Large gasoline engines caused which ever of these are in use to revolve rapidly, and to bore into the air, dragging or pulling the ship along at a wonderful rate of speed.

Two more of these devices are attached to each side and near the ends of the ship and are used for steering. When it is desired to turn the ship to the right or left the propeller on that side is set in motion. To raise the machine a like apparatus on top is set in motion.

The craft is loaded with several tons of dynamite and is bound for Cuba. The captain said the Spanish troops are being massed in the cities for transportation to the Philippine Islands, and it is to proceed to sail over these cities and drop dynamite into the camps of the soldiers and on the transportation ships. It is proposed to destroy the Spanish navy. This will enable filibustering ships to land arms and ammunitions for the Cuban soldiers, who, thus supplied, can easily dispose of such of the Spaniards as escape the dynamite dropped by the airships.

> About 1 o'clock Friday morning the search light was in good shape, and the ship started for the wilds of the Ozark Mountains, where, the captain informed Mr. Byrnes, they spend the days, experimenting at night with the ship.

> They expected to sail, or fly, for Cuba by Sunday, and hoped to reach there by Wednesday. When they do Spain is likely to hear something drop (Fort Worth Register, April 18,1897, p. 11).

In 1895 Cuban nationalists, lead by Jose Marti, Antonio Maceo, and Maximo Gomez, rebelled against Spanish rule. In 1896 Spain sent Gen. Valeriano Weyler to Cuba to put down the rebellion. Weyler became known as the Butcher of Havana. He ordered all villagers and farmers to move to concentration camps set up near the cities. Anyone who did not relocate was considered a rebel and fair game for Spanish soldiers. Weyler's troops practiced a scorched-earth policy. (Weyler was a student of Sherman's Civil War tactics.) Weyler relocated over 300,000 Cubans to his concentration camps. It is estimated half of those Cubans who were relocated died in the camps, mainly from yellow fever.

The newspapers of William Randolph Hearst and Joseph Pulitzer ranted about the cruelty of the Spanish soldiers and the abuses of Weyler's policies, stirring American sentiment against Weyler and Spain. (It is interesting to note that Pulitzer and Hearst each owned a major New York daily newspaper, and the rebel leaders' political party, the Cuban Revolutionary Party, was headquartered in New York City.) The rebel leader Jose Marti hated the United States, but that did not stop him from seeking and accepting American financial contributions for the rebellion. With most of the country's newspapers following the New York papers lead and railing against Weyler and Spain, it is unremarkable that people would openly discuss bombing Havana.

I have found no convincing evidence that any airships dynamited Cuba but then I have not looked very hard for any evidence, either. However, I have found some evidence that the U.S. government was pursuing the idea. This seems remarkable, considering the country was still nine months away from declaring war on Spain.

Captain Byrnes had sufficient time to observe the crewmembers in some detail since he was with the airship from about 7:30 P.M. until 1:00 A.M. In the seventh paragraph, "the captain said" indicates that Captain Byrnes spoke directly to the airship pilot. Since Captain Byrnes does not remark on the pilot's appearance, we can conclude it was not remarkable. That is, the pilot looked American, spoke English, and otherwise looked and behaved in all respects like a member of the human species. We can then conclude the crewmembers were not aliens, unless aliens had assumed the form of human beings.

Captain Byrnes gives us quite an interesting description of the vessel. The steel snail-shell device at each end on the wings, used for propulsion, is reminiscent of how an unfamiliar person might describe a modern-day jet engine—latter-day twentieth-century technology provided by an alien presence in 1897 or earlier?

The stated length of the vessel, 200 feet in this account, agrees with the "Seen at Paris" account and is probably the length from end to end of the "cigar-shaped" portion of the airship. The 50 feet across at the widest dimension probably refers to the length of the wings.

THAT MYSTERIOUS AIRSHIP

Reliable Persons at Garland Declare They Saw It

Garland, Tex., April 17—The airship which created so much excitement Thursday night [April 15], was seen in Garland by several among the number being J. N. Floyd, Agent N. B. Newland of the Katy and Mr. Cody. These gentlemen are reliable and their accounts of the noted air traveler have created no little excitement in Garland. (Austin Daily Statesman, April 19, 1897, p. 7, condensed version of the story that appeared in the Dallas Morning News and in the Galveston News, April 18, 1897).

THE AIRSHIP WAS SEEN

Childress, Texas, April 17. - The much-talked of airship was seen here last night [April 16] about 1:16 o'clock Rev. J. W. Smith was the first to discover the curious aerial monster. He thought at first that it was a star shooting, but after watching it a moment or tow, saw that it was not. He then called to his brother-in-law, Mr. Charley Norris, and also called to Mr. Bates and wife, near neighbors, who were up at the time. Charley Norris ran over to his mother's and called out several members of the family, who saw the ship. It soon disappeared, traveling in a westerly direction. Rev. Smith thinks it must have been 2,000 feet high and traveling very fast (Houston Post, April 22,1897; and Terrell Times-Star, April 30,1897).

April 15, 1897, sightings

The place and time of day of the sightings for April 15 are shown above. There is no scale. El Paso is actually much further west of Cisco than is depicted in the graph. However, the miles between points of interest are shown adjacent to the connecting line between the points. That is, it is 84 miles from Davis to Sherman.

The most logical flight path of an airship, based on the reported time of the sighting and direction of flight, is shown using a dashed line. Although Cisco is only 75 miles west of Weatherford, the path of the airship that passed through Weatherford could not have been the same airship that passed through Cisco because of the timing of the two sightings. The Cisco airship was known to be on the ground (see the "Oft Seen Air Ship" account), while another airship was seen passing through Cresson, Hillsboro, and other East Texas communities. We have two different descriptions of the airship(s')'s length, one of 75 feet and another of 150 to 200 feet. The difference between 75 and 200 feet is sufficiently large to think the difference is not an error of estimation. So, a likely scenario is the existence of at least two airships.

Was there another ship further west that was sighted in El Paso before flying east and perhaps breaking down near Cisco? To answer that question we must look at the account of Captain Byrnes in "Oft Seen Airship," near Cisco.

The sighting at Cisco was somewhat earlier than 1:00 A.M. According to Captain Byrnes, he first came upon the airship sometime just after dark. Can we determine more accurately what time he first saw the airship? Using an old American Nautical Almanac, we can perhaps fix the time of darkness on April 15, 1897.

On April 15 sunset occurred at about 6:31 P.M. and end-of-evening nautical twilight (E.E.N.T.) or darkness was 7:38 P.M. However, since the sky was overcast according to the captain's account, E.E.N.T. would have been earlier, let us say 7:00 P.M.

Captain Byrnes states that he started toward Cisco on his velocipede when it became too dark for him to work. So we are certain the time he started for Cisco was around 7:00 P.M. He had proceeded about 5 miles (12 miles from Putnam to Cisco minus "7 miles west of Cisco at Delmar siding") when he observed the light upon the ground nearby. So, we can be confident that he first saw the airship between 7:00 P.M. and 7:30 P.M.

Since this ship remained upon the ground while undergoing repairs until 1:00 A.M., the ship he saw could not have been the same ship flying around East Texas (seen at Hillsboro between 9:00 and 10:00 P.M.). Nor could it have been the same ship seen in El Paso between 8:00 and 9:00 P.M. We are left to conclude that either some or all of the reports are fake or there were at least three airships flying around Texas on April 15. One airship was making the East Texas circuit as depicted on the map, one airship was broken down near Cisco, and the third airship was flying near El Paso. Incredible! Stay tuned for the rest of the story.

FRIDAY, APRIL 16, 1897

There are thirty-four airship sightings reported for the night of April 16. Among the remarkable aspects of the sightings for this night are the clearly delineated flight paths of three different airships. The number of sightings has increased from the previous night (twenty-three sightings). More and more people are rubbernecking the skies to get a glimpse of the strange visitors. The story continues . . .

FLIGHT OF THE AIRSHIP

A Mississippi traveler saw it in the heavens last night [April 16]. Mr. Griffin's Strange Story

He saw the aerial traveler from the top of the court house—was overjoyed.

Sensation in Railroad Circles
Freight Conductor J. E. Scully caught a glimpse of the ship and its pilot near Hawkins Tank.

Ghost hunters, quail eaters and high divers and high jumpers have been relegated to the rear and the biggest man in the country today is the pilot of the airship, that mysterious aerial plunger seen in the heavens for the past ten days by sober citizens from the lakes to the Gulf of Mexico. The airship was the sole topic of conversation in all circles in this city. From the banker to the bootblack all were interested. "Have you seen the airship" was the question sprung at least 1,000,000 times. A News reporter found a good Adventist brother who was positive that the millennium was at hand and that the messenger was coming. "Don't mention my name," he said, "but I had a vision the other night and I am convinced that we are upon the eve of a great upheaval." Men of the world pronounced it a raw joke and a few crusty old chaps intimated that the quality of whiskey sold in the small towns was enough to make the average toper see anything from a boa constrictor to a full rigged ship in the heavens. On his rounds yesterday, a News reporter found two men who had actually fastened their eyes on this "flying Dutchman" of the clouds. One of these parties saw the airship sailing along like a magnificent bird of passage. The other saw the ship resting on the ground, its pilot in his shirt sleeves working like a beaver, making repairs. Mr. M. E. Griffin at the courthouse, saw the ship gliding through space like a thing of life, and "Truthful" Scully, a freight conductor on the Texas and Pacific railroad was the man who witnessed the pilot scrapping the barnacles from the keel of the airship. Mr. Griffin was found at the courthouse yesterday afternoon. Mr. Griffin is a churchy man and has lived in Dallas for many years. He broke the ice himself when The News representative halted. "Well, I saw the airship and I could scarcely believe my own eyes. It was this way. I have been reading the stories of the airship on its travels in The News everyday. At first I regarded it as a huge hoax. Next I saw I was in error because it was next to impossible for good men all over the country to be deceived. Says I to myself, 'They are seeing it everywhere. What's the matter with taking a peep from the top of the courthouse, Griffin?' Well I borrowed a powerful glass and climbed to the top of the courthouse. From my position I could sweep the heavens in all directions. I had been there say ten minutes when to my great delight, I saw the airship going in a southeasterly direction with the velocity of the wind. It was shaped like a Mexican cigar, large in the middle and small at both ends, with great wings that made it look like an enormous butterfly. It was brilliantly illuminated by the rays of two great search lights. I shall never forget the magnificent spectacle. Finally the airship disappeared in the distance and I very reluctantly descended to earth. And it was a sublime scene."

Mr. Griffin did not weep after this recital but the moisture stood in his eyes. He is positive that the airship has two searchlights and is a swift traveler.

There was a great commotion in railroad circles just after the shadows began to gather last evening [April 16]. It was rumored that Freight conductor J. E. Scully and his crew had surprised the airship and its pilot in a lonely spot by the side of the track somewhere in East Texas. A News reporter hurried out to the union depot at 8 P.M. and caught the cannon ball when it rolled in from Texarkana. The knight of the punch, good-natured, Conductor Foster was buttonholed before the soles of his patent leathers touched the platform.

"Have you seen the airship?" queried the reporter.

"The devil no," he replied. "I saw the picture in the News and read the specials from different places and that's all. See Mahoney. He will be down in the morning. Mahoney is a bird. He sees everything and the chances are that he has seen this airship. He never misses a good thing. See Mahoney," and then the jolly conductor boarded the train and was off.

Across the tracks from the union depot is the dispatchers office. Mr. M. Patton is the dispatcher. He composed that beautiful song, "And the Wind Blew Through His Whiskers," while stationed at St. Joe, Mo. a number of years ago. That is, Mr. Patton was once arraigned before the bar of public opinion on the charge and he entered a plea of guilty.

"Mr. Patton did you notice an airship sailing about in this neighborhood this evening?" asked the representative of The News.

"An airship? No, see here, forty men have poked their noses in here and fired that question at me this evening. I am busy. I haven't lost any airship and I am not hauling airships." It's been months since he tasted liquor, and then he whistled "The Wind Blew Through His Whiskers."

"Where is conductor Scully?"

"Scully? You mean Truthful Scully. He is out on the road and is due here in a few minutes. Has Scully seen this airship? Well he's a jolly good sort who loves the truth for truth's sake and his word is as good as a gold mine. Yes sir, Scully is all right. Sit down and he'll pull in here directly."

It was 10 o'clock when conductor Scully train came to a standstill opposite the office of the dispatcher and that individual rushed in to register introduced the conductor and the scribe and the latter fired away.

"Mr. Scully, it is rumored that you saw the famous airship at a point east of here today [April 16]."

"I did."

"Was it sailing or resting?"

"Resting."

"What did it look like?"

"The descriptions already given in the News. Its bow was towards us and its pilot was using a hammer and chisel as near as I could make out evidently making slight repairs."

"Could you furnish a description of the individual in charge of the ship?"

"Well, there is a clearing about midway between Hawkins and Hawkins tank and the airship man had selected this place to make repairs necessary and to be far away from the vulgar eyes of curiosity seekers. There isn't a house anywhere near the spot. The conductor of the ship was 100 yards from the track. He was tall and spare and looked like a scientist or an inventor. He had that tired far away expression as near as I could ascertain, and he was plugging away for dear life on necessary repairs."

"At what hour did you witness this singular individual and his marvelous airship."

"Well, we left Big Sandy at 2:30 P.M. It was close on to 3:00 o'clock when we reached Hawkins. We were making good time and all at once in the clearing I saw this ship on the ground with its bow towards the track. The airship has wings and must be well equipped. Of courses we passed it in a jiffy but I saw all that was necessary to convince me that the airship conductor had selected a quiet spot for resting purposes and repairs. Well, when we got to Hawkins I mentioned the facts of our discovery in the clearing in the woods and it spread like wildfire. I am sorry now that I mentioned it to any one and I wish you would just leave my name out of the papers."

And then the conductor stepped out of the office, swung his lantern a few rounds boarded his train and was off.

Mr. Patton shot an admiring glance at the querry-voiced conductor as he sped away and addressing The News representative said:

"Truthful Scully knows an airship when he meets one in the woods. I am satisfied that his story is gospel truth. Hawkins is midway between Mineola and Longview. Truthful Scully is a lucky chap. I might have passed that clearing in the woods a hundred times and never laid eyes on an airship. Some men are born lucky. Others are born in Missouri."

Conductor Scully, before his train pulled out for the West, said to a friend: "In my opinion, the airship man has his place well arranged. He is skipping about the United States creating intense excitement. When it gets too warm he'll set sail for Europe. The chances are when I saw him today he was getting ready for an ocean voyage preparatory to making a tour of Europe. The airship is the greatest invention of the age, or my name isn't J. E. Scully."

Col. W. A. Robertson of Mississippi walked into the News office last night and in a tone of deep satisfaction remarked:

"I have seen it."

The whole force rushed at Col. Robertson with one bound. "Yes gentlemen," he continued complacently, "I have looked at the airship with my own eyes."

"How big was it?" asked one.

"About 150 or 200 feet long I suppose."

"Have any lights aboard?"

"Yes sir, and they were big ones."

"Which way was she going?"

"Southwest."

"Going pretty fast?'

"Yes it looked to me like the fellow had an engagement to eat breakfast in the city of Mexico and was afraid he might be late."

"Sure it was not a meteor?"

"I guess that when I see a thing I know it."

"It was this way," continued the Mississippian, "I was a passenger on the Missouri, Kansas, and Texas southbound train. I was sitting on the east side of the coach looking out of the window. Just after we passed Garland I saw a blaze of light in the sky quite a ways ahead of us. I made up my mind in a second that it was the airship, and I poked my head out of the window to get a good view of it but the thing was moving faster than we were and in about two minutes was lost in the fleecy clouds. I could not distinguish the shape of the aerial traveler, but I saw its search lights as it sped along" ("Flight of the Airship," Dallas Morning News, April 17,1897, p. 8).

Note that "quail eaters" were considered an oddity in 1897. People who ate quail are lumped into the same category as "ghost hunters." Our appreciation of what our environment offers us in terms of sustenance is an evolving process. The tasty birds have been a favored delicacy in the state all of my life.

One of the observers in this account is named Truthful Scully. The title of the account includes the name "J. E. Scully," so we can assume "Truthful" is a nickname. We are left in the dark concerning the origin of Scully's nickname. Was he really truthful, or was the nickname chosen to emphasize he was not always truthful? From the information provided in the account, we cannot make any judgment concerning the reason for calling him "Truthful." However, the tone of the account is a trusting tone. Mr. Patton, the dispatcher, goes to some length to acquaint the newspaper correspondent with how truthful Truthful Scully is. Or, maybe the dispatcher was setting the correspondent up. We will never know, but from the tone and Scully's details, which match many other descriptions, I am inclined to believe the account. It certainly has a great ring of truth to it. (Trivia question: Did the writers of the popular television show X-Files name the female character "Scully" after this real life Scully?)

Could only alien life forms possess the technology to fly 100 miles per hour? If so, they must be "humanoid," as Truthful Scully did not remark on an unusual features of the crew member he saw repairing the ship at Hawkins Tank. This is the first account given where an individual is closely associated with the airship. Truthful Scully saw someone making "slight" repairs to a ship in the clearing near Hawkins Tank. While Truthful Scully does not mention outright that the individual is a human, it is inferred. If the individual did not look human, it seems reasonable that Scully would mention the salient attributes of the nonhuman-appearing creature.

Scully believed the airship to be about 150 feet long. His estimate of the airship's length does not differ dramatically from the airship length given in other accounts. I think the description of this ship marks it as the same ship identified in the "Seen at Paris" account in chapter 5. Remember, the length of the airship in that account was given as 200 feet.

Scully is a conductor. He must concern himself with such mundane day-to-day issues as the number of people on his train. He is not a professional surveyor, so estimating lengths is not his area of expertise. However, he could quite easily compare the length of the airship with the length of one of his coaches and come to a fairly accurate estimate of its length. Could Scully be mistaken about the length? Possibly, but keep in mind that no one was going about with a measuring rod to physically measure the airship. All the stated lengths are estimates. Therefore, we can comfortably state the length of the airship was between 150 and 200 feet.

Note the fact that this sighting occurs near Hawkins Tank. Do you know what is found at Hawkins Tank? (Hint: This is the age of steam.) Have the answer? Water? Of course. Railroads had water tanks strategically placed along the length of the tracks, so a train engine's water reservoir could be replenished regularly. What else is found near railroad tracks? Give up? Telegraph wires carrying electricity. With water and electricity, a scientist in 1897 could produce hydrogen, a lifting gas.

THE AIRSHIP

Sighted Last Night by Two Citizens of Oak Cliff

> Prof. Laird of Patton's Seminary in Oak Cliff, states that at about 10 o'clock last night [April 16] he saw a coppery red light apparently about a mile high sailing across the heavens in a southeasterly direction. The light was about ten minutes in passing out of the professor's visual range. He avers that attached to the light there was an object which was so dim that he could not discern its shape or outline. Whether this was the airship the professor is not prepared to say, nor does he attempt to account for the phenomenon on any other hypothesis; he merely reports the fact.

> Mr. Sam Hurlock, of Oak Cliff, reports that he sat up last night reading the Duke of Argyle's interesting brochure on the difficulties to be overcome in order to make levitation as simple a matter as gravitation, and stepped out in the yard to get a breath of fresh air before retiring. The subject he had been reading about, or something else caused him to take a survey of the heavens when he saw a light, evidently the same described by Prof. Laird. Mr. Hurlock says there was a dim object to which the red light appeared to be attached. He has no doubt that this is what so many other persons have been seeing for the last several nights and reporting as an airship, which, for all he knows to the contrary, it may be {Dallas Times Herald, April 17,1897, p. 1).

This is the latest of several accounts that mention the airship was "ten minutes in passing across the heavens." Meteors never take such a long time to pass across the night skies. Planets and stars never take such a short time to pass across the Texas sky. Comets usually take much longer than ten minutes. So, what these people are seeing are not naturally occurring phenomena but something man-made or alien-made.

Unfortunately, we do not know in what discipline Professor Laird was trained. However, the fact that he is a professor should lend some weight to the idea he saw an airship and not a planet passing through the atmosphere. Let's hope he was not a professor of basket weaving.

Regarding the "coppery red light," note that nitrogen gas gives off red- and green-colored "lights" under certain conditions. For what purpose nitrogen might be used in an airship escapes me, but the fact is noted for others to contemplate.

THE AIRSHIP

It Passes Over Dallas and Is Seen by Several—Preachers Theories

> Dallas, Texas, April 16.,—Special. It may have been an optical illusion, but Dallas to-night is wavering between science and revelations over the airship. It passed north of this city tonight [April 16] at 8 o'clock going East to West and was witnessed by hundreds; including such men as Judge A. T Watte, formerly of the High Court and Dr. R. C. Kopesh, who describe it as being only about 300 feet from the ground and in appearance similar to the airship seen in different parts of the country. Preachers say it is from the other world and is the advent courier of the second coming of Christ. They say if it was an earthly device, it would be seen by day as well as night (San Antonio Express, April 17, p. 2).

Judges and doctors were coming forth with admissions of seeing the, by now, familiar airship. Respectable, creditable people were now willing to admit to having observed the airship, which fueled the willingness of other people to come forth with similar admissions.

The fact that the airship is seen only at night causes some people to attach a significant meaning to the ship's presence in the atmosphere. However, I cannot imagine God coming to collect the righteous in such a slow and small vessel, unless there were just a few righteous left among us. The date of interest to biblical scholars, the new millennium, or 1900, was still three years off. But, perhaps, in that earlier time there were so many righteous, it was going to take three years to pick them all up. The reluctance of the airship to be seen in the daytime does have a special meaning, but the preachers misunderstood the significance, which will be discussed in the final chapters.

Since the following account is long, pertinent comments have been italicized in brackets and are included within the body.

Messrs. Williamson and Ventas Given a Free Show— The Views of John L. Ward

The story of "Truthful" Scully of Fort Worth, clinched by the thrilling tale unfolded to a News reporter by Col. Robertson of Mississippi, contained in the News of yesterday, created a great sensation in scientific, political, and aerial navigation circles. The airship was the sole topic of conversation, the talk of the town, yesterday. Mr. William J. Shed, who is a crony of "Truthful" Scully, said to a news reporter:

"I believe it. Mr. Scully would not utter an untruth. The Mississippi colonel is not on my visiting list, but no Mississippian was ever known to mistake a shooting star for a full rigged airship with a searchlight in front and a torchlight in the rear. The evidence is conclusive."

John L. Ward of Fort Worth, ex-manager of the Panthers, was seen yesterday morning at the Windsor. He said: "I read the story of the airship at Hawkins Tank and was deeply impressed with it. Joe Scully is a friend of mine—a citizen of Fort Worth. We are proud of him. Hundreds have seen the airship in the heavens. Joe saw it on the ground. I believe in omens—good and bad. The Scully incident is a good one. Today McCloskey's Haughty Hibernians will be numbed by the Fort Worth Invincibles and McCloskey will weep." [The Haughty Hibernians and Fort Worth Invincibles were baseball teams.]

Col. Robert H. Gaston of the Texas militia read The News story of yesterday morning and at once hunted up a representative of the paper. "Tom Camp is just in from the Gaston ranch in Kaufman county," he said, "and Tom saw the airship. He had been on a hunt and was very successful. About 9 o'clock Friday night [April 16] he saw a peculiar object overhead. It resembled a Chinese flying dragon in appearance and was a monster breathing red fire through its nostrils. Its body was dragon shaped [same as cigar shaped?] and its fore legs and hind legs were pin shaped, its legs were the propellers, he thought. This dragon airship was brilliantly lighted and swifter than the Empire State Express. It was going south, Tom said. He watched the singular object until it grew as small as the gleam of a hotel clerk's diamond. Finally it disappeared altogether, and Tom made a bee line for the house, almost overpowered by the weird scene he had witnessed in the heavens. I think myself that the problem of aerial navigation has been solved. [Tom Camp seems to give a very graphic description of the airship, but in terms of a Chinese dragon, for effect I suppose. I do not know what to make of the statement "breathing red fire from its nose." I discount this account as either a fake or an exaggeration.]

It was rumored about the streets that Hon. A. T Watts had caught a glimpse of the airship in the heavens on Friday night [April 16]. A News reporter visited his office. "It is a mistake," he said, "but I have a theory. I firmly believe that the forty-three Greeks in Texas have clubbed together, purchased an aerial war ship from Edison or some other fellow and are experimenting before starting for Europe. They want to be sure that they are safe before they set sail. I am not interested in aerial navigation. This afternoon I must attend the ball game at the park and am studying up on the new rules and curves. The Defenseless, not the Defenders should win out, don't you think?"

Mrs. Bina George is a colored cook in the home of Mr. C. W. Middleton. She saw the airship Friday night. Yesterday morning she told the story to Mr. Middleton. That gentleman said to a News reporter yesterday: "Bina is truthful and intelligent. At 9 o'clock Friday night she was gazing into the heavens and saw a bright object a few hundred yards above her head. At first she suspected that it was a cloud of fire but it wasn't. It was a ship shaped affair, well lighted and traveled faster than any train of cars Bina ever saw. She said it was headed in a northeasterly direction and that she watched the ship until it was out of sight. She kept it to herself until this morning, as she did not care to be joked about it. Finally the secret grew too large for her to control and she fessed up."

Hon. Ed C. Smith, the populist leader was standing by. His face brightened. *"The airship is manned by McKinley's advance agent of prosperity,"*said Mr. Smith. "He has been due in these parts since last November and perhaps the president has employed an aerial messenger to scatter broadcast the glad tidings."

[The McKinley referred to here is Pres. William McKinley of the United States. Some folks foolishly attempted to capitalize on the airship sightings and further their own personal agendas by making what are now obviously incredulous claims. Does attempted political gain at the expense of credibility sound familiar in today's political arena?]

This was a frost and the scientists dispersed. Messrs. William J. Smith and Albert Webber were found at room 13, the Gaston building. Mr. Smith is familiar with all phases of aerial navigation, it is said, and agrees with the Scientific American that the problem has been solved. [I cannotfind issues o/"Scientific American_/ro/« this time period to ascertain the nature of the aerial navigation solution] At 1 o'clock this morning on Lamar street I met an individual who appeared to be unduly excited. I stopped and questioned him. He pointed skyward and said:

"It has just passed by."

"What has passed foolish man?"

"The airship," he replied.

"I did not ask him his name or his street number, but he certainly acted like a man who seen something. Aerial navigation is an easy thing now. We have compressed air and electricity. Airships are sure to come. In fact, according to the News correspondents the ships are here. The Scientific American concedes this much." [Scientific American was a much-respected publication in 1897.]

Mr. Smith subsided and Mr. Webber began. "On Wednesday night my wife saw a peculiar object in the heavens. At first she thought it was an illuminated balloon. But soon discovered that is was not balloon-shaped and sailed like a bird. It had two great lights and was traveling southward. It wasn't a meteor, it wasn't a balloon, it wasn't a ball of fire—I guess it must have been an airship."

Ex-Alderman Patrick O'Keafe who is deeply versed in aerial navigation topics and astronomical lore was found playing the horses. "Have I seen the airship? I have not. I don't drink and I never come downtown after dark."

Prof. James A. Laird of the Patton Seminary, Oak Cliff, it is reported, saw the airship plunging about Friday night. His description of it tallies in the main with the bird's-eye view of it obtained by "Truthful" Scully, in the vicinity of Hawkins tank, except Mr. Scully saw it on the ground with its wings folded and Prof. Laird saw it in the sky skimming along like a swallow homeward bound after a hard days flying. It was a mile high and going in a southeasterly direction when Prof. Laird first discovered it in the heavens. One A. M. Bruner traced its flight across the state in the following verses:

There's a wild, weird something, that sails in the air,
with wings like the Plasa bird.
You'll see since April third.

The people of Elgin declare it has eyes as red as the sun in the fall.
Two Evanston lovers (who always are wise) declare it has no eyes at all.

The wise ones at Rockford have seen it arise like a cloud from the West and they tell How the mayor and the council with wide open eyes
Stood breathless as bound with a spell.

It races with the engine that hauls the first mail
Down the Burlington track yesterday the engineer stared with his deathly pale
Watched the thing vanish away.

At Althon perched high on the "Plaza" hill
Last night there was seen a huge form
It screamed like a panther with voice strange and shrill
That rose high above the wild storm

Its headed for Washington now I am told,
And I doubt not, like dashes of a churn;
It will hasten reports of affairs growing cold,
Awaiting the Dingley bill turn.

And then let us hope it will take a deep breath,
And sail out to Cuba and Greece,
To Frighten the Spaniards and Turks half to death,
Establishing honorable peace.

We need such a fool, with a nest full of eggs,
To hatch out a brood that will fly,
And cause lawless people to take to their legs
When they catch the strange bird's warning cry.

Hundreds watched for the reappearance of the airship last night. They argued that it isn't far from the Scully dry docks [an attempt at humor] near Hawkins to Dallas and that most likely the pilot might fire up his boilers [A figure of speech used in railroad circles, meaning "to get underway." There are numerous accounts that discount the use of steam and steam boilers in the airship.] and sail this way in order to ascertain the fate of the Haughty Hibernians on the opening today of the Texas league games. It panned out just as they surmised. The pilot of the airship is a fan, for his ship was seen hovering over Dallas last night perhaps signaling to manager McCloskey [a fanciful liberty taken by the correspondent regarding the popular Dallas baseball team manager]. Mr. S. J. Williams, who clerks in a McKinney Avenue drug store, is positive that he saw the airship. In addition to the two searchlights the pilot displayed colored lights last night [April 17]. It is not known whether they were danger signals or tips to McCloskey's men to keep off the grass. Mr. Williams says that the airship sailed away in full view going in a southeasterly direction. Later a gentleman named Vantes on a Fairland car in North Dallas saw the airship according to advices received at a late hour last night. Not only Mr. Vantes, but his fellow passengers were given a free show. They glued their eyes on the queer ship with its fantastic lights and never once batted an eyebrow until the aerial visitor had disappeared behind a dark cloud in the northern sky. "There are others," but News representatives failed to locate them owing to the lateness of the hour the news was received at this office ("High in the Heavens," Dallas Morning News, April 18,1897, p. 4).

"Truthful" Scully never mentioned any "folded" wings. This statement must have been taken at liberty or was an assumption made by the editor or correspondent to make an allusion to the characteristics of birds—spread wings in flight, folded wings on ground. Or there may be another explanation, yet to be discovered.

The latter part of this account is a mix of fact and the writer's allegorical allusions to various topical issues, such as the win/loss record of the local baseball team in the phrase "perhaps signaling to manager McCloskey"

SEVERAL SEE IT AT BONHAM

Bonham, Fannin Co., Tex. April 17—The mysterious airship passed over the northern part of this city last night [April 16] at 8:15.

John German, night watchman on the electric line was returning to the city on his regular run. The car had slowed up as it was rounding the sharp curve just beyond Russle Heights when Mr. German noticed a light moving rapidly from the southeast toward the northwest. At first he thought it was a shooting star and called the attention of several young men in the car to the phenomenon. All parties peered to the front of the car and seeing that the light lingered longer than any shooting star they had ever seen they brought the car to a standstill and all alighted to the ground in order to get a better view of the wonderful sight. The moving light approached rapidly and as it passed north of them the light streamed out brightly looking as large as the bottom of a half-bushel measure piercing the dark other with the brilliancy of the headlight of a railroad engine. Mr. German had not read of the mysterious airship and was gazing upon it with wonder and awe. He could hear a whizzing, whirling sound as it passed. It looked like it was about a quarter of a mile high. For about four minutes they watched the wondering sight, when it disappeared in the southwest going toward Denton.

Mr. Oscar Lusk was the only one in the crowd who had read of the wonderful airship, and he explained all he had read about it in The News and the mystery was cleared up satisfactorily to all, everyone agreeing that it was the wonderful aerial navigator. Messrs. Oscar Lusk, Will Pope and Sherwood Sports were present with Mr. German and will vouch for the truthfulness of this statement ("High in the Heavens," Dallas Morning News, April 18, 1897, p. 4).

SEEN AT CLEBURNE

> Cleburne, Johnson Co. Tex. April 17.—The much advertised airship seen by so many was seen here last night [April 16] by two gentlemen of undoubted integrity.
> Mr. O. M. Duncan while returning from a moonlight picnic saw it and described it as others have done and says it had two white lights in front and a green light in the rear, which later, it is said, indicates in railroad circles that no other train immediately follows. In other words, Mr. Duncan understood it to mean in street parlance that it was "the only turtle in the tank."
> Mr. J. F. Wade was the other gentleman who saw the aerial monster and he says it was scudding along just above the tops of houses and going at only a moderate rate of speed. Mr. Wade was returning to his room from uptown and says that he had not touched a drop of anything exceptwater during the evening. Mr. Duncan can make the above statement as to imbibing and says he surely saw it.
> Both gentlemen say it was going in a southwesterly direction. Mr. Wade says that it was so low that he could see one of the passengers and as it sped by the passenger gave him the go ahead sign that brakeman give on the railroad ("High in the Heaven," Dallas Morning News, April 18, 1897, p. 4).

The "green light" and "go ahead sign that brakeman give on the railroad" are interesting observations that will be discussed in the last chapters.

Signal lights were commonly used on the railroads to inform trains of the presence of other trains. Such signaling was especially useful for safety considerations on single-track roads. Elsewhere, the green light is seen on the sides of the airship and a red light is seen on the rear.

SEEN AT TIOGA

> Tioga, Grayson Co., Tex., April 17—James Daugherty, a young farmer living near town saw the airship at 11:30 last night [April 16]. His description tallies with that of others who have seen it. He said it made a whirring sound and passed rapidly to the southwest. Jim is a truthful boy, and as the town affords nothing stronger to drink than mineral water, he evidently saw the ship. ("High in the Heavens," Dallas Morning News, April 18,1897, p. 4).

The "whirring sound" is intriguing. What could possibly make a whirring sound? In all my experiences, the only devices I have ever heard "whir" were many-bladed propellers. Propellers containing numerous blades, say six or eight, make a peculiar "whirring" sound. Could the airships have been propeller driven?

ANOTHER MAN SAW IT

> Denison, Tex., April 17—Jack Farley was in Fort Worth last night [April 16] and swears by all that is good and holy that he saw the airship sailing over the town. It was a way up in the west and had a big headlight. It looked like a big bird with its wings out stretched and attracted a great deal of attention ("High in the Heavens," Dallas Morning News, April 18, 1897, p. 4).

EXCITEMENT AT MANSFIELD

> Mansfield, Tex. April 17—(To The News). Great excitement prevails here. An airship or something of the kind made its appearance above the city about 9:45 o'clock last night [April 16]. When first seen it was about 500 feet high but dipped down within 300 feet of the earth, then suddenly arose high and darted off"in a southeasterly direction. It appeared about as large as a box car, main part of the vessel cigar shaped with wings or sails extended on either side. Front end of vessel had a light something like the headlight of an engine while the side lights were green with bright red light in the rear. This airship was viewed by Capt. J. H. Wright, C. P. Witherspoon, W. H. Howard and many others. W. O. Rivers, telegraph operator ("High in the Heavens," Dallas Morning News, April 18,1897, p. 4).

An observer stated in a previous account that a green light was seen at the rear. I think the green light in that account was really on the side, as stated in this and other accounts. But, what is the significance of green and red lights in unoccupied 1897 American air space? A discussion of the significance will be found in the final chapters.

TWO GENTLEMEN VIEW IT

Ladonia, Tex., April 17—There seems to be no more doubt in the minds of some regarding the airship. Attorney E. M. Rowland says this morning that about 9 o'clock [April 16], having had to go for the doctor for his child, as he left his home he noticed a strange object far upon and at a great distance in the southeast. It seemed to be surrounded by a dim, misty light, but as it approached the light became brighter. It was moving very rapidly in a southwest direction and lowering somewhat as it progressed. When it reached a point nearly overhead one could readily see the light shining out of the cabin windows. The headlight was very bright, leaving the impression that it was made by electricity. The wings were huge in appearance; the sides were oval like a large bay window; it had a long sail like tail and disappeared very rapidly in a southwest direction.

Col. R. N. Burt, assistant cashier of the Weldon National Bank of this place, it is said by a reliable person, also saw this ship last night [April 16] about the same time Mr. Rowland saw it, having been aroused by some unusual noise in his poultry yards. His description varies very little from that of others, only that it seemed much larger to him, as he says that it seemed to be about 500 feet long, the wings being enormous and looking like huge sails and the lights on both the bow and the stern being of a dazzling brightness. It seemed to hover for a short space of time over the city and then rise and go rapidly in a southwest direction.

Mr. Burt seems to think it strange that any one would doubt the reality of the airship. He is a gentleman who is unimpeachable and his word not to be doubted, is a strict member of the Baptist church and a leader in the Loyal League ("High in the Heavens," Dallas Morning News, April 18, 1897, p. 4).

The consistency of the airship's description is the same in this account as in previous accounts.

LADY THINKS SHE SAW IT

> Forney, Kaufman Co., Tex., April 17—Mrs. G. W. Vbiers, wife of Charlie Voiers, states that she is of the opinion she viewed the airship last night [April 16]. It was too far off to discern its shape, but the lights were plainly visible ("High in the Heavens," Dallas Morning News, April 18, 1897, p. 4).

STRANGE AND STARTLING . A "WHAT IS IT!" SERENELY SAILING OVER THE BLESSED LONE STAR STATE

WILL BE SIGNS AND WONDERS

A Big Airship or Something Else Seen in the Heavens at Various North Texas Points Keep a Watch Out Here

Of late strange sights have been witnessed in the heavens and some days ago The Statesman contained a dispatch saying that an airship or something of that sort had been seen sailing over Oklahoma.

Now the mysterious aerial craft has been seen at various points in Texas and from all accounts it is a fast sailor.

Friday night [April 16] at Sherman, Mr. W. S. Rellyer, cashier of the Missouri, Kansas, and Texas Railroad, saw a mysterious oval shaped object of large proportions pass over the moon.

On the same night, Conductor W. M. Honney of Fort Worth, his wife and mother, saw a strange object pass over the city.

On the same night [April 16] Hon. J. S. Bourdo of Hillsboro, on his way to visit a sick friend, had an experience he will not forget soon.

He was jogging along quietly when suddenly his horse whirled around and came near overturning the buggy. There was a brilliant light as if coming from an arc light. This light, he says, rested on him less than a minute and then he saw it gliding over a field near by. It then turned upward and he watched it until he says it must have been 1,000 feet up in the air. The light appeared to him to be the headlight of some kind of a ship. While he watched the light went out and small ones such as incandescent lights, appeared all around the body of the vessel, or whatever it was. The strange craft sailed along in a southerly direction and while Mr. Bounds watched it all the lights were extinguished and then it disappeared.

On the same night [April 16 or early April 15 A.M.}] about 2 o'clock J. A. Black of Paris, Tex. night watchman at the Paris Oil and Cotton company's plant observed a faint but luminous body in the northeast heavens. It looked at first like a luminous cloud but as it drew nearer he saw it was some huge monster. He hurried over to the cabin of a negro named Jim Smith and woke him up and when Jim caught sight of the heavenly visitor his wool promptly straightened out and Jim went to praying. Mr. Black watched the object carefully, and to a Dallas News reporter he said its body was shaped something like a cigar and appeared to be 200feet long. It carried sails and attachments that looked like great fans. It finally disappeared going in the direction of the Mississippi River. Mr. Black's dog was with him when he first discovered the monster and he was greatly agitated and moaned until the thing disappeared.

On the same night [April 16] Conductor Virgil Brown and his brakeman on the Texas and Pacific Railroad saw the curious monster near Jewella, La. about thirty miles east of Marshall. It appeared to have a search light attached to it that threw out rays in several directions. It appeared to be going in the direction of Marshall and traveled faster than his train.

On the same night [April 16] at Marshall, Marshal Dick Weatherly, night watchman at the Pacific Railroad shops, saw the monster pass over.

From Jewella to Hillsboro is some 300 or 400 miles, [actually it is about 200 air miles] and the ship being seen at both places only a few hours apart shows it is a traveler.

Whence is it? What is it and whither is it going, anyhow?

Are we living in the days when strange sights are to appear in the heavens (Austin American Statesman, April 18,1897, p. 7)?

SEEN AT RHOME

Special to The Register

Rhome, Tex., April 17.—H.A. Hambright, B. Hambright, A.J. Jones, Nute Rivers, Elmer Helm and numerous other creditable witnesses inform The Register man that they saw an airship pass over Rhome last evening [April 16] about 8:30 o'clock. It is alleged that it was running westward at an estimated velocity of about 150 miles per hour. It was visible about five minutes. It was about the size of a small passenger coach. A white search light in front, and had five lighted windows on the side. It was apparently very near the earth, though it didn't halt at Rhome, but kept its occidental courses, as though we were as dead as Rome of old.

To consider this in the most normal light of deliberation it seems at first absurd, but in face of the testimony of the above witnesses it is entitled to credence (Fort Worth Register, April 18, 1897, p. 1).

C. G. WILLIAMS SAW IT.

It Was on the Ground and He Interviewed the Captain.

Greenville, Hunt Co., Tex., April 17.- (To The News.)—I have surely seen the airship. I saw it last night [April 16] about 12 o'clock. I was walking across a field two miles south of town. I was in a meditative mood, and suddenly I was aroused by a brilliant light in front of me. I was dazzled by the light and frightened almost out of my senses. I should have left the place at once but my legs refused to move.

As soon as I could recover a little I noticed that the lights had gone out and by the light of the moon I saw an immense cigar shaped vessel resting on the ground in front of me. I saw three men walk out of the vessel. Two of them went to work about the rigging of the ship. The other called to me and asked if I would mail some letters for him. This gave me courage to approach and talk to him. Having been at one time connected with a daily paper and by mere reporting instinct I took out my pencil and paper. Seeing this the strange visitor said:

"See here, young man, don't give this thing away We are experimenting with this vessel. So far it is a success. We expect to revolutionize travel and transportation. We have seen a few copies of the daily newspapers and are very much amused and entertained at the accounts of the appearance of our ship. If you will promise on the square not to reveal what I tell you I will give you a little history of our adventures.

"At a little town in the interior of New York state I have worked for many years on my ship. About two weeks ago I started accompanied by these two assistants to make a trial trip. We started in the night to avoid being seen. Everything worked so well that I decided to keep going, and I soon found myself passing over the state of Indiania. (There are hundreds of newspaper accounts of the airship being seen over the Midwest, but publishing constraints prevent the inclusion of those accounts in this book.]

"We stopped in a secluded spot near a small railway station. I went into the town and procured a daily paper, which gave an account of my ship being seen. Since that time we have been passing from place to place at a rapid rate of speed. Occasionally we stopped near a town to get the newspapers. I am going home in a few days to improve my ship. I find some improvement necessary to perfect it. This trip has been most satisfactory. You will hear from me again in a short while and then it will not be vague reports, but a full description of the modern wonder, the airship."

I had a good opportunity to look at the exterior of the monster while its occupant was talking. It is much the shape of a cigar. The main body appeared to be about 30feet long. Great wing shaped fans spread out on either side. At the front end was a large wheel much like the side wheel on a steamboat but made of very light material [aluminum?]. At the end was a fan-like projection like the tail of a fish. The whole was about 75 feet long. I asked my visitor to explain the ship, how it was propelled, etc. He simply replied:

"Electricity. Within are electrical machines, which furnish the motive power and the lights. When once in motion the wind operating on the large wheel in front like a windmill, keeps the ship in motion and but little electricity is needed. Now, young man, I can't tell you any more. Just wait and you will learn all about it. If you will mail these letters and not disclose the names and address and keep this all quiet for awhile, and will give me your name I will return soon and take you with me on a trip to Mexico and South America."

I promised not to give him away. He and his assistants went inside, there was a flash of light, a sizzling noise, the monster rose gracefully and flew away in a northeast direction.

> I am honor bound not to disclose the names and post office address of the letters. I deposited them in the Greenville post office that night.
> When my visitor returns and I leave with him for Mexico and South America I will write the News regularly.
> It is a grand invention, and I am fully convinced that in a short while we shall discard slow railroad trains and ocean steamers. C. G. Williams (Dallas Morning News, April 19, 1897; Galveston Daily News, April 18,1897)

This is an entertaining interview with the supposed inventor of the airship. The account gives many interesting details concerning what the ship is, where it came from, and the purpose of the crew. Of particular interest is the statement that motive power is supplied by electric motors. More on this subject will be discussed in the final chapters.

This account identifies the inventor as coming from "a little town in the interior of New York state." This important statement is also explored and discussed in the latter chapters.

The description of the airship in this account differs dramatically from other accounts in regards to its size. All other accounts offering such a detail describes the length of the airship as being between 150 and 200 feet long, while this one gives 75 feet. The differing amount, being too great to be dismissed as ineffectual guessing, points to the existence of more than one airship.

IN TEXAS

The strange craft seen at many points in North and East Texas Friday night [April 16] has thrown those parts of the state into a whirl of excitement.

Col. R. N. Burt, cashier of the National Bank of Ladonia, Texas, saw the craft, or whatever it is, last Friday night. His description varies very little from that of others, only that it appeared much larger to him, as he says that it seemed to be about 300feet long. Its wings being enormous and looking like huge sails. It seemed to hover for a short time over the city and then rise and go rapidly in a southwesterly direction.

At Farmersville, Texas Friday night [April16], as reported in the Dallas News [see note below], about 9 o'clock a dim light was seen in the northwest, apparently slowly to the south or southwest. When first seen it did not look larger than an ordinary 50-cent piece. Those watching it soon discovered that the objective was approaching the city. It traveled at the rate of sixty or eighty miles an hour. Some thought it to be a cloudless tornado, and those who had storm houses lost no time in getting into them, while the more unfortunate waited and watched the result of the approach of the queer object. In a very short time fully two-thirds of the citizens of the city out looking at what they then supposed to be a large planet or meteor approaching the earth. In a few moments, in fact, in less time than one can tell it, the queer thing was almost hanging over the city. City Marshal Brown was in the western part of the city making his rounds before going home and says the ship or balloon passed over him about 200feet from the ground. Mr. Brown says he could see two men in the ship and something resembling a large Newfoundland dog. Mr. Brown says he was close enough to hear them talking but could not understand one word of their language.

> Mr. Walter L. Norwood, an undertaker at Galveston, had a professional call about 3 o'clock Saturday morning [April 17], and he says he and his driver, Bob Tevis, saw the airship. He said to a Galveston News reporter:
> "The moon was shinning brightly, and we could see almost as plainly as in daylight. There was not a cloud in the sky. When we were out on the beach not far from our destination I happened to look up and saw the thing. It moved to the eastward down the beach, following the line of the beach as closely as one would do in a driving buggy. We stopped and watched it. When down about the end of the island it turned and followed the bay front until about Tremont street, when it turned and went south out over the gulf, disappearing in the distance."
> It was pointed at both ends, according to Mr. Norwood's description, and the headlight was directly in front. It looked like a great big bird, with wings flapping regularly, and it traveled swiftly ("The Heavenly mystery," Austin American Statesman, April 20,1897, p. 3).

The Dallas Morning News did not report the Farmersville sighting as occurring on Friday night [April 16] but as happening "last night" [April 17?]. (See the account titled "At Farmersville," in chapter 7. The Austin American Statesman account of Marshal Brown's sighting gives a date of April 16. Since the Austin American Statesman specifically mentions "Friday night," which is unambiguous, I am inclined to believe that publication's date of the sighting, or April 16.

Mr. Brown was "close enough to hear them talking" when they flew over him at an altitude of about 200 feet. The crew must have been shouting to each other over the whirling and whizzing of their machinery.

The image of a dog accompanying those on the airship as a member of the crew certainly fits in with the image of the late-nineteenth-century rich playboys out for a lark.

Regarding the "wings flapping regularly": recall the previous comments concerning why wings are designed to "flap." But also take into consideration the previous account, which comments about the "folded wings." Later, we document the factual existence of an airship designed by Marcellus McGary that is propelled by wing-flapping.

Col. R. N. Burt denies, in a letter to the editor, having seen the airship. Apparently, someone gave a false report to the newspaper of him having seen the airship. His denial follows:

HE DID NOT SEETHE SHIP.

> Ladonia, Fannin Co., Tex. April 18.—(To The News)—Will you do me the kindness to say through your columns that the gentleman who informed you that I had seen the so-called "air ship" was certainly very much off his base, and did me quite an injustice when he said that I was among the number who had seen it. If such thing is in existence to-day I confess that I would be glad to see it, but so far have seen nothing of the kind, and have never made any such statement to anyone. I know your informant and really think that he did this as a joke, but in justice to myself think that he did very wrong. R.N. Burt ("Airship Tales?" Dallas Morning News, April 20, 1897)

Did newspaper correspondents deliberately make up stories about the airship just to fill column space? This vignette demonstrates that people and newspapers would own up when they were mistaken about an airship report. Not every individual or news correspondent was looking for glory and column space. This is an extremely important point. The basis for this whole story concerns the credibility of the reporters, newspapers, and people who poured out their stories to the reporters. It is also intriguing that Colonel Burt is from Ladonia, a place important to the airship story (as we shall see).

STATESMAN'S MYSTERY MAN.

The mystery man of The Statesman heard yesterday that Mr. R. H. Cousins had caught a glimpse of the mysterious ship Friday night [April 16], and Mr. Cousins was seen about it.

"No, I saw no ship," he said, "I stepped out into my yard and my attention was attracted by a moving light, which appeared to be some distance above the earth not far from the residence of Mr. J. W. Graham. I at first thought it was a meteor, but I soon discovered it moved too slow for a meteor. The light was not very large. I think, possibly, I watched it as it moved and it passed over and down in the direction of Shoal Creek. I saw no dark object nor anything but the light, and at the time thought nothing about it."

The story, as reported, was that Mr. Cousins had seen a large ship-like shape with the light attached to it.

To The Statesman's gang last night the mystery man, to the utter consternation of the boys, gave it as his unalterable opinion that there was something in this airship business.

"Where there's so much smoke there must be some fire," he said. "So many reports, from so many different points, can not be fabrications. People may say what they will, but there's something in it."

The gang was visibly moved.

"It is my opinion," continued the mystery man, "that the airship, so-called, is nothing more nor less than a reconnoitering aerial war car from war like Mars, investigating the conditions of the United States to see what reinforcements we'll need when the country is invaded by the allied armies of Europe, the Mars soldiers having no confidence whatever in the American jingoes as real fighters."

"With these soldiers of Mars cavorting around over our heads, do you think there is any danger to us of the earth?" asked the gang in concert.

"I most emphatically do. Last Thursday night one of their aerial boats exploded and scraps of steel and pieces of electric wire were found on a school house, the roof of which workmen were repairing. [The airship explosion referenced here occurred in Michigan and was widely reported in that states newspapers.] They heard an explosion during the night and just before it took place the aerial vehicle was seen sailing through the air. There is great danger in venturing out these nights. What if one of these fellows from Mars should tumble out and fall on you?"

> The city editor and telegraph man were profoundly impressed and last night they slept under a table in the editorial rooms ("The Heavenly mystery," Austin American Statesman, April 20,1897, p. 3).

This article is a tongue-in-cheek account with a lighthearted look at the airship mystery. However, the explosion mentioned in the article was reported in numerous Illinois and Michigan newspapers. Here is the account of the explosion as it appeared in a Detroit newspaper.

WENT TO SMASH

Airship Said to be Scattered Over Kalamazoo County

Callsburg, Mich., April 13—If reports from Pavillion Township are true, then the much talked of airship was not only a reality but is now a thing of the past.

George W. Somers and William Chadburn, old soldiers, claim to have seen the airship on Sunday evening [April 11] when they remained up until a late hour, in attendance upon a sick horse. The descriptions given by the patriots are somewhat at variance but agree in the assertion that the apparition was illuminated at both ends and plowed through space with wonderful rapidity. They had scarcely time for the above observation when a dull explosion was heard and the object disappeared. They declare the report to have been like that of heavy ordinance and to have been immediately succeeded by a distant sound of projectilesflying through the air.

Wondering neatly, they proceeded to the house where they passed an excited and sleepless night. While these two men are the only ones who claim to have witnessed the phenomenon there are many corroborating circumstances, as follows:

Mr. and Mrs. Wallace say they heard the explosion distinctly, but thought it was thunder. But the discoveries of the morning were sufficient to establish the veracity of the two actual observers (the two old soldiers). In one place, two miles from Scotts, there was found part of some electric appliance. At another point, a propeller blade of some very light material [(aluminum?)'was found, in a partially fused condition.

> Three men engaged in shingling a barn in Comstock Township affirm that, upon resuming work on the morning following the occurrence, they found their completed work strewn with minute fragments which had in some instances penetrated the shingles and entered the boards beneath.
> Whatever may be the theories, there is scarcely a doubt that the aerial stranger is gone forever and that its origin and the experiences of its crew are to remain forever a mystery (Detroit Evening News, April 13,1897, p. 4).

This account has a good ring of truth to it. Old soldiers, who were probably of Civil War vintage, would know the sound of "distant ordnance" and "projectiles flying through the air." The shrapnel found buried in the building's roofing shingles is consistent with an explosion and the sound of flying projectiles.

The physical evidence of "part of some electric appliance" and "a propeller blade" agrees with the description of the airship given by Mr. Williams in the account "C. G. Williams Saw It." You may recall in that account the airship captain informed Mr. Williams that it was powered by electrical motors.

I believe this to be only a minor accident, not the catastrophic and lifetaking tragedy portrayed by the editor in the last paragraph of the account. There are no other accounts of any additional wreckage found anywhere in the vicinity of the explosion. And there are no reports of any bodies found nearby. If shrapnel was buried in the shingles, then there is a good chance the crew members suffered some injuries in the explosion. A survey of hospital records, if any still exist, in the vicinity of the explosion may yield fruitful information concerning the names of the crew.

LADONIANS SEE IT.

Ladonia, Fannin Co., Tex April 18.—The airship seen here night before last [April 16 or early morning April 17] was the occasion of several parties keeping watch last night.

Col. R N. Burt, his wife and son-in-law, John Fulgham, saw a large light appear in the southwest and come nearly overhead and then take a westerly course, but it was so bright that they could not see what accompanied the light. [See Colonel Burt's earlier denial of this story —"He Did Not See the Ship.")

A. B. Ewing, also as he was going home from his store, says he was startled by a strange buzzing noise overhead. Looking up he saw what seemed to him to be a mammoth alligator with wings outstretched and when nearly overhead the lights went out and only a glimmer could be seen all along the side of the long body. It came from the northeast and changed its courses while he looked, and went in a northwesterly direction. He says the object must have been nearly three miles high (Dallas Morning News, April 19, 1897, p. 5) {Galveston News, April 19,1897).

A BANK CASHIER SEES IT

Granbury, Hood, Co., Tex., April 17.—(To The News.) Newt Gresham last night [April 16] at 9:10 o'clock, while drilling the Riddle Rifles, discovered that mysterious flying jenny of which we have heard so much. Newt is a very warsome young man being a populist, but he could not stand the sight of the air machine so he ordered the company to open fire on the object, which it did, and the whole town was soon aroused. Every back yard was filled with spectators and still the animal hung quietly in the sky over the city.

The opinions of various responsible parties are:

Hon. Lee Riddle said, "Its an airship run by electricity."

Frank Gaston said: "It is a cloud of some mysterious substance with phosphorescent properties."

Newt Gresham, captain of the Riddle Rifles and editor of the Hood County Truth, says it was a huge fish with wings, but the general opinion is that it is an airship, which I think it is, having had a better opportunity to observe it than the majority. It disappeared quickly southward over Comanche peak."

> I think the above might be of interest to News readers and you may publish same with my name affixed (E. B. Hilburn, Dallas Morning News, April 19,1897, p. 5; Galveston News, April 19,1897).

With most of the male population of Texas over the age of twelve armed, it is remarkable that there were no serious casualties as a result of people popping away at the strange objects in the night sky. If an explanation is required for the appearance of the airship only during the night, this is perhaps one of the best—to keep from getting killed by the marksmanship of the testosterone-totin', gun-slingin' portion of the populace. Daytime flying would have immensely encouraged a great deal more of the same incorrigible behavior on the part of anyone owning or otherwise possessing a pistol or rifle and one or more bullets.

SEEN AT MANOR

Austin, Tex., April 18.—Mr. John Eva, a well known business man at Manor, twelve miles east of here, says he saw the mysterious aerial ship that has created a commotion all over north Texas. His little girl first discovered it and called him out and he saw it as it passed over the town going south, carrying a large headlight (Dallas Morning News, April 19,1897, p. 5; Galveston News, April 19,1897; San Antonio Express, April 19, 1897).

THE MYSTERIOUS BALLOON THE STRANGE MYSTERIOUS CRAFT PASSED OVER MANOR LAST FRIDAY NIGHT.

IT IS A WAR BALLOON F'ROM SPAIN

So Says The mystery Man of the Statesman Force More About the Craft From North Texas Points.

Mr. John Eva, formerly a clerk in the furniture store of the late Mr. Boak, and well known in town, was in the city yesterday from Manor, where he is now living.

He told, while here, of seeing the aerial monster that has thrown all north Texas into a state of intense excitement. His little daughter happened to go out into the yard Friday night [April 16] and, noticing a strange light in the heavens, she ran back into the house and notified her father. Mr. Eva hurried into the yard and saw the mysterious craft as it sailed over Manor and disappeared.

It was also reported in town last afternoon that persons out on the state drill grounds saw the ghostly airship Friday night.

The Dallas News of yesterday contained many telegrams from north Texas points confirming the stories of the strange visitor.

It looked to one man in the Indian Territory as if it was about 500 feet long.

It was at Cleburne, Garland, Tioga, Texarkana, Newland, and many other Texas points Friday night. One of the mysteries about it is that no one has seen it in the day time.

All persons who have had a good view of it gave about the same description, and all testify as to its carrying a large light, and a few say at times it has many.

One man reported to the Dallas News says it was only about 200 feet above him moving slowly, and he saw three men aboard and something he said he took for a large Newfoundland dog. He could hear the men talking, but could not understand what they said. From the tone of voice he took them to be Spaniards or Mexicans.

At one place in north Texas Friday night the whole population turned out to see the monster, and about half of them took to their storm cellars believing it a cyclone that was about to hurl itself upon them.

This whole matter was solemnly referred to the Statesman's "mystery man" last night and he gave it his unqualified and unbiased opinion that the man who heard the conversation of the two men on the craft and took them to be Spaniards was correct in his suspicions.

"It is nothing more," said the mystery man, "than a Spanish aerial war balloon sailing over Texas to find out the strength of the militia, and incidentally to see if there are any populists." "You see," continued the mystery man, "the aerial telegraph and telephones carried on the craft have conveyed to its officers the arrangements made in the legislature on the ice and other bills , and the aforesaid officers have become confused and bewildered , and that accounts for their being seen at so many different places. I'm satisfied, too, that if they get a sight of the old brass cannon in the capital yard they will die of sheer astonishment and will never reach home."

The explanation of the mystery man greatly stayed the fears of the city editor and telegraph man, and last night they screwed up courage enough to venture out and 90 home to bed at their usual bed time, which is along in the wee small hours.

The telegraph man, who is very loquacious, asked many questions about the mysterious visitor, while endeavoring to conceal his dread and fear. Both he and the city editor went home last night with their hats hard down over their eyes and never once did they look heavenward (Austin American Statesman, April 19,1897, p. 8).

The 500-foot-long estimate of the airship's length seems to be an exaggeration, as all other reliable estimates place the length at 150 to 200 feet. Or, could this be another ship entirely?

This account is a summary of previous accounts reported by the Dallas Morning News. It is interesting that the account of the sighting involving the Newfoundland dog did not mention anything about how the men on board the airship sounded, other than that their words were indistinguishable. The Statesman prints that the observer said, "From the tone of voice he took them to be Spaniards or Mexicans." Yet, in the Dallas Morning News account ("In Texas"), no such statement is made. Also, in all previous first-hand encounters between an individual and the airship crew, no mention is made of their accents, language, or nationality. One cannot help but believe the crew members were indistinguishable from other Americans in language, dress, and manner. I wonder about this portion of this account and suspect it to be an embellishment to satisfy Austin readers. Yet another possible explanation lies in the function of the individual crew members and/or the ultimate objective of the airships. In another account ("Was Aboard an Airship," chapter 9), the airship's cook was identified as a Mexican. Also, many people thought the airships were going to be used to bomb Havana, a belief that fueled rumors that the airship crews were either Mexican or Spaniard.

WAS SEEN IN FARMERSVILLE

Farmersville, Texas, April 17.—(Special.) The airship was seen here last night [April 16] at 9 o'clock. City Marshall Brown was in the western part of the city making his rounds before going home and says the ship or balloon passed over him about 200 feet of the ground. Brown says he could see two men in the ship [A condensed version of the story that appeared in the Dallas Morning News and the Galveston News, April 18,1897] (Austin Daily Statesman, April 19,1897, p. 7).

AIRSHIP TALES?

A Number of Dallas Citizens Are Their Authors

Cooper Nott returned from Longview yesterday. He said to a News reporter: At Longview on Friday night [April 16], "I saw the airship. It's no fake. I saw it with these eyes. Charlie Foster, the station agent at Longview, and Col. Thomas Kingsley were eyewitnesses and will corroborate what I have said."

Joseph A. McMurray of Mineola was in the city yesterday. "This airship business is a fake," he said. "Why Tom Breen, our new postmaster, sleeps with one eye open and he has not caught a glimpse of this airship. I don't take any stock in the stories published . Neither does Tom Breen."

Maurice Kahn, clerk of the police court, is authority for the statement that Messrs. William Noll, Jr., B. O. Marshall and A. Nussbaumer claim to have seen the airship on the ground about nine miles west of Dallas Sunday afternoon [April 18] about 2 o'clock while out hunting. They will, he says, make affidavit to this if necessary.

Manton Carrick and a number of friends sent up three small balloons lashed together with lanterns attached from the corner of Olive and Live Oak streets last night. The balloon floated over North Dallas. The boys paraded the streets in that section of the city yelling at the top of their voices, "There's the airship!" All the inhabitants turned out and viewed the fights in the sky with exclamations of wonder.

At 9 o'clock last night Mr. J. W. Bruit phoned The News from the corner of Allen and Juliet streets: "I've seen the airship. It was out near the McKinney Avenue schoolhouse and going toward Oak Cliff. I was in my buggy and whipped up my horse in a vain effort to get closer to it. It was very bulky."

An hour later George Saunderson, fireman at the waterworks, phoned The News as follows: "The airship passed over us ten minutes ago. I got a good look at the ship. It has three large windows and was making very fast time" ("Airship Tales?" Dallas Morning News, April 20,1897).

MONSTROUS VARMIT

Richmond, Fort Bend Co., Tex., April 19.—An old negro man named Mose Fletcher, living near Stafford, was in town to-day and from his description of what he termed a "monstrous varmint" it is believed he has seen the airship. He says that about 10 o'clock last Friday night [April 16] he had occasion to go out to his horse lot to quiet a great commotion among the stock and he saw a "varmint" about 100 yards in the air going southwest. He says it shone like a firefly and he became so terrified he ran to the house. When he came out with his wife it was gone. Mose is an innocent and illiterate old negro and appears to be very earnest in what he says ("The Latest Airship Jokes," Galveston News, April 20,1897).

WAXAHACHIE KEPT AWAKE

Waxahachie, Ellis Co., Tex., April 17.—Many people sat up the major part of last night [April 16] looking for the airship. At 12 o'clock possibly half of the vigilant committee retired for the night. At 1 o'clock a few more dropped off, and at 3 the number had dwindled down to a few faithful who were kept up through faith in the truthfulness of the airship reports in the Dallas News.

This morning The News reporter made a grand round hoping that at least one man could be found who would testify to the reality of the flying will o' the wisp, which has been defying gravity and causing the wreckage of a certain clause in the ten commandments, but there was not one who had seen anything bigger than a hat or larger than a snake, with residence at Waxahachie. At a certain hotel there was a man who gave his name as W. H. Patterson, who said he had discovered the battle ship while on watch with Mr. John Phillips of Waxahachie; in fact, he said he would give Mr. Phillips as reference, and he was certain that Mr. Phillips never told a lie in his life.

It was about 1 o'clock [April 17] when the battleship came along; the whole earth was ruminated with a star-like brightness. The battle ship seemed to be about 400 feet from the ground and was going toward Dallas. The machinery seemed to be worked by a woman who was running a patent resembling a sewing machine. [This is the first account given of a woman on board the airship.] When the sails were at a certain angle a searchlight shot its light in the direction of the hotel and caused the observers to flee. Mr. Patterson says it may be funny to look at this strange aerial monster at a long distance but that a degree of uneasiness overtakes one when the thing comes at close range. He thinks his satanic majesty or Beelzebub has something to do with this traveler in the lower stratum of ether ("High in the Heavens," Dallas Morning News, April 18,1897, p. 4).

The most remarkable attributes of the graph of the April 16 sightings are the three times the ship(s) was seen in Dallas. One sighting occurred at 8 P.M., another at 9, and still another at 10. Airships were seen at Kaufman (9:00 P.M.), Granbury (9:10 P.M.), and Farmersville (9:00 P.M.) at about the same time. Since the distance between these communities rules out the possibility of all three towns viewing the same airship, we are left to conclude there were three airships flying about the skies on the night of April 16. Or, all of the stories are fake.

April 16, 1897, sightings

The three-airship hypothesis seems reasonable. Remember the previous chapter and the conclusion that three airships were about on the night of the April 15? The sightings on the sixteenth confirm the threeship hypothesis. Looks like the crews were having some fun by flying over, or buzzing, Dallas at one-hour intervals—shows a certain sense of humor.

The three ships seem to have merrily flown through Dallas, then they made their way back to their daytime lair north of Sherman. Then two ships, probably the first two that passed over Dallas (8 and 9 P.M.), seem to have taken off for new destinations. One appears to have headed west, which accounts for the late-night Tioga and Childress sightings and the other seems to have headed east, which accounts for the late-night Greenville sighting. The fact that an airship was seen after midnight near Beaumont (1 A.M. on April 17) and Galveston (3 A.M. on April 17) reinforces the supposition that an airship passed over Greenville at midnight, traveling eastward toward Beaumont.

I have arbitrarily named these three ships the Nina, Pina, and Colada.

The next three figures plot the individual travels of the three airships on the night of April 16.

CHAPTER 7

SATURDAY, APRIL 17, 1897

There are seventeen sightings reported for the night of April 17. This night is remarkable in the airship story because in the early morning of April 18 an airship experiencing mechanical difficulties reportedly crashed and burned in a small town a few miles west of Fort Worth.

"Snapshots" was a Dallas Morning News column containing editorials. It was sometimes humorous, sometimes serious, and sometimes just cranky. It was the nineteenth-century equivalent of 60 Minutes' irascible Andy Rooney. And the story continues.

SNAPSHOTS

One may ascertain his own opinion of airships, but he may find it necessary to keep them to himself, because even the ladies have been seeing them. [I cannot imagine the social implications of such a statement. Does this mean that women of the era were believed to see all manner of nonexistent things? In any case, the statement does indicate an editor who didn't believe the airship stories.]

An Arkansas preacher believes that the airship recently seen in the northwest is the temple of the tabernacle of the testimony, and that the third angel is now pouring out his vial upon the rivers and mountains of waters.

There is a man in Atchison who declares that the airship cook dropped a potato on his head. [This statement seems reasonable. Several individuals who examined airships at close quarters reported the existence of a galley and a cook.]

A Kansas man proposes to take time by the forelock. He announces that he will run for the legislature on a platform to regulate the air courses of that state.

From the number of airships that have been discovered it would seem that the airship factories have been running on full time for a number of years [Recall the proposition stated in the previous chapters of at least three airships flying about the night skies of Texas in April 1897. There may be more truth to this statement than the editor realized. We will investigate this issue in the final chapters.] ("Snapshots," Dallas Morning News, April 17, 1897).

AT FARMERSVILLE

Men Seen in it and Heard Singing 'Nearer My God to Thee.'

Farmersville, Collin Co. Tex, April 18—(To The News)—Last night (April 17—see AAS account in chapter 6] about 9 o'clock a dim light was seen in the northwest, apparently moving slowly to the south or southwest. When first seen it did not look larger than an ordinary 50 cent silver piece. Those watching the queer light soon discovered that the object was approaching the city traveling at the rate of 60 to 80 miles an hour. Some thought it to be a cloudless tornado and those who had storm houses lost no time in getting into them, while the more unfortunate waited and watched the results of the approach of the queer object. In a very short time fully two-thirds of the citizens were out looking at what they then supposed to be a large planet or meteor approaching the earth. In a very few moments—in fact, in less time than one can tell it—the queer thing was almost hanging over the city.

City Marshal Brown was in the western part of the city making his rounds before going home and says the ship, or balloon, or whatever it was passed over him and about 200 feet off the ground. Brown says he could see two men in the ship and something resembling a large Newfoundland dog. Mr. Brown says he was close enough to hear them talk but could not understand one word of their language. He is of the notion they are Spaniards. He thinks Spain has sent several of these airships into the United States with none but trusted officers of the Spanish government to make a survey of the country, so in case the United States should declare war against Spain the latter nation would know every weak seaport station in the United States and Spain would know just where to land her army and attack our weak points.

> Another eyewitness Mr. Hildreth, says he saw three men in the ship and that he heard them singing 'Nearer My God to Thee' and that they were distributing temperance tracts. R. Porter ("High in the Heavens," Dallas Morning News, April 18, 1897, p. 4).

This is the second Texas account that mentions a Spanish connection. This is an important issue and will be discussed in the final chapters.

Unfortunately the reporter does not say how they were distributing temperance tracts. Were they just tossing them overboard as they flew over communities, or did they land and hand them out on street corners? I suspect the temperance tracts and "Nearer My God to Thee" to be fabrications in an attempt to further the personal agenda of one Mr. Hildreth. There are no other existing accounts that place the crew members of the airships in such a religious situation.

This account is also mentioned in chapter 6 in the Austin American Statesman account titled "In Texas." The Dallas Morning News did not report the Farmersville sighting as "Friday night," April 16, but as "last night," April 17. The Austin American Statesman account of Marshal Brown's sighting gives a date of April 16. (See the account titled "At Farmersville," in chapter 6.) Since the Austin American Statesman specifically mentions "Friday night," which is unambiguous, I am inclined to believe the Austin American Statesman's date, or April 16. The Dallas Morning News correspondent may have written the article on April 17, giving "last night" as the correct day of the sighting, but the correspondent delayed sending the telegram to the Dallas Morning News until April 18.

SEEN AT BEAUMONT

Beaumont, Jefferson Co., Tex., April 17—R.E. Draugham, who is night watchman at the Texas Tram and Lumber company's planer says that this morning [April 17] at 1:00 he saw something which he took to be the much-talked-of airship. The object was a globular shaped thing a little dark with a bright light the size of a star in one end. It came from the southeast and went toward the northwest slowly, but was very high in the air ("High in the Heavens," Dallas Morning News, April 18, 1897, p. 4).

THE AIRSHIP.

A Texas Rabbi Says He Has Seen It and Describes the Wonder

There is a man in New Orleans who has seen the airship and conversed with one of the occupants. He is Rabbi A. Levy, of Beaumont ,Tex., and his clerical position entitles him to credence.

Dr. Levy was seen by a Picayune man last night at the residence of Mrs. G. Levy, No. 48 St. Peter Street, where he is stopping, having come to this city to attend the wedding of Mrs. Levy's daughter this afternoon, the young lady being his niece.

"You can take my word for it," said he, "that the airship is no myth. I had heard a good deal about it, but placed little reliance in the stories that were circulated, and doubted until the moment I saw it. It was about ten days ago [April 15 or, perhaps, April 17— the April 17 date agrees with other accounts placing an airship in this vicinity on this date] on a farm about two miles from Beaumont , which is my home. About 10 o'clock that night the whole country around was aroused by the report that the airship had been seen and that it had alighted on a farm nearby. My curiosity was aroused and I went to see it. I learned that they had stopped to lay in fresh supply of water. It was dark as pitch then, and I could see very little except the outlines of the ship. It was about 150 feet long, the body being shaped something like the hustles used in an ordinary sewing machine. On either side were immense wings, about 100 feet long. It seemed to be made of some light material, what I could not say. I spoke to one of the men when he went into the farmer's house, and shook hands with him. It is run by electricity, but how it is supplied I do not know. Yes; I did hear him say where it was built, but I can't remember the name of the place, or the name of the inventor. He said that they had been traveling a great deal, and were testing the machine. I was so dumbfounded that I could not frame an intelligent question to ask, so you see I can give you but very meager details. One thing I do know, and that is that an airship is an accomplished fact, for I have seen it, and many of my friends have seen it flying in the air. It went to Dallas, Austin, Fort Worth and hovered all around Texas for some time." Dr. Levy will return to his home in a day or two" (New Orleans Daily Picayune, April 25,1897, p. 7).

The rabbi's eyewitness statement is consistent with many other airship accounts. "Laying in water" seems to be a sufficiently valid reason for coming to the surface and alighting. Notice this account of a faceto-face encounter with the crew member does not mention any difficulty in communication. If we assume the rabbi spoke English (seems reasonable in 1897 Texas), then the crew member he conversed with must have spoken English also. However, the previous account of Marshal Brown states that he thought they spoke Spanish. This account does not specifically mention any language barriers. The possible existence of a Spanish connection is a very important factor in the airship story.

Note that Rabbi Levy stated the crew member told him the airship was powered by electricity. A discussion of possible sources of motive power is presented in the final chapters. Levy's general description, including the length, is consistent with previous reports.

THE AIRSHIP

Views Expressed Concerning the Aerial Monster.

AS SEEN BY VARIOUS PERSONS.

A Druggist Who Saw It Tells of His Experience Sighted by a Watchman at the Hour of Going to Press. Motto the words of that plaintive foreign air

Have you seen the airship? This is the question that was heard most frequently on the streets Saturday and was made the theme of the street corner humorist almost to the exclusion of the Cuban war, Count McCloskey's base runners, and the latest gossip about the flood in Louisiana.

Staid citizens who have never been known to get within shooting distance of a saloon would stop each other and refer ambiguously to the eccentric appearance that has been keeping the people from one seaboard to the other guessing for the past weeks and causing eyes of thousands of others to bulge out with astonishment while watching it "scorching" down the firmament like Mr. John Hay's "Prairie Bell," (an exceptionally fast railroad passenger service) "with its furnace crammed with resin and pine."

Such a phenomenon certainly offers a happy theme for the lovers of conjecture, and about as many theories have been expressed about the uncanny monster as it has been times seen. There is no question but what it has usurped, temporarily at least, the place of the sea serpent, that misguided monster which every right minded proprietor of a summer hotel would sign a season's contract with to disport itself exclusively for the gratification of his guests on the white sea sands. At present, there is great doubt as to whether or not it is a rakish practical craft skimming the sky for ulterior purposes of gain, either of preempting choice portions of the earth not yet claimed or annexing some Cherokee strip in Mars. Some think it is a product of the craft of man unmixed with guile.

"I wonder why it always flies in the night time," remarked one Dallas man Saturday.

"Why, it's a fly-by-night company, to be sure," remarked a friend.

This is a facetious view—one indulged in seriously by quite a number of level headed citizens, however. Some are utterly skeptic and suggest that it is a new fad with those people who are unfortunate enough to "see things." Formerly their minds conjured up blue monkeys, Nile-like saurians and other creeping things equally disagreeable for the mind to dwell upon long at a time. They suggest that having exhausted the catalog of things that creep, they have by some mental somersault invaded the realm of flying things, and hence the airship.

This aerial vessel seems to have adopted its motto the words of that plaintive foreign air once so popular on these shores: "Just Tell Them

That You Saw Me, "and there was nothing else to mention.

Perhaps it is the long lost Pleiad vainly endeavoring after all these years to get back home and take its place in society. Again, it may be the successful culmination of some aerial invention which a jealous European power is anxious to secure a copy right on and takes this means of testing where no prying neighbor can break in and steal the patent safety break device. It may be an aerial navigator from Mars, a sort of devil-may-care Ulysses with a desire to go west and survey new patches of ether [The general concept of the universe in the late 1800s was one of it being immersed in an ether-like substance, albeit invisible. This is a reference to alien beings exploring the universe.] In fact, there is no end to the amount of conjecture that might be indulged in.

Plain, unaesthetic folks think it may be the work of some patent pill producer, or baking powder magnate, who seeks to startle the American people by a great hoax, knowing that he who boometh his own judiciously, prospereth not a little.

But there are people who have seen it. Why, dear me, of courses there are. Right here in Dallas, too.

Druggist R. C. Kopisch, whose store is next to the Oriental Hotel, has a vivid impression that he saw it. The impression was all that remained with Mr. Kopisch when he talked with a Times Herald reporter yesterday. He referred to the spectacular appearance very modestly.

Said he: "I don't know what it was I saw, but last night [April 17] between 8 and 8:30, and while I was in my store, my attention, as well as that of some 15 or 20 others, was drawn to something that might be likened to the headlight of a trolly car that hovered far over in the west and moved swiftly in a northwesterly direction. It had no particular shape to it as far as I could see, but there was a sort of hazy darkness back of the light that seemed almost opaque.

"The phenomenon, as I said, attracted quite a crowd on the corner, including, a number of guests of the hotel. We watched it till it disappeared toward the north."

"Right in the direction of the brewery, eh?" inquired the scribe.

"Yes, so it was," said Mr. Kopisch, as if he bethought himself of something.

The reporter turned away. His faith in the airship was shaken.

It was veraciously reported that Judge A. T. Watts witnessed the frisky airship disporting itself in the heavens in the full glare of publicity and the moon, but a call at his office developed the fact that he was at the ball game, and two calls later still failed to find him.

Later developments leading to the identification and ownership of the aerial craft are awaited with interest, and further communications of witnesses of its impetuous passage through the stilly night will make good Sunday reading.

Later—Just as the Times Herald was going to press the following was handed in for publication.

The mysterious airship which has created so much excitement throughout the country and furnished two or three columns of news to our daily papers the past week, was just sighted passing over the city by the firemen of No. 4 Engine company on watch. Its approach was preceded by a blinding flash of light, and a dim shadow was cast as it passed over the city hall from the northeast. It was so high that accurate description of its dimensions was impossible. Its speed was very great, with a strong search light in front. Smaller lights resembling the windows of a lighted passenger coach in the night were seen at the side. No wings were discernable, nor any noise heard. It being so far away. It appeared to be more that one hundred feet long, and was propelled by some powerful force ("The Watchman," Dallas Times Herald, April 18, 1897).

AIRSHIP SEEN IN GALVESTON

Walter L. Norwood, An Undertaker Viewed it Early Yesterday Morning

Walter L. Norwood, an undertaker, and Bob Tevis, his driver, saw the airship yesterday morning [April 17] over the city of Galveston. Mr. Norwood was sitting on the bench in front of J. Levy &Bro.'s stables and Mr. Levy announced to a News man that he had seen the airship. After some badinage he protested his innocence of attempting a joke.

"No, this is no joke. I am telling you the truth. I was called out to Thirty-ninth and R about 3 o'clock this morning. A negro out there had died and we were called to prepare him for burial.

"The moon was shinning brightly, and we could see almost as plainly as in daylight. There was not a cloud in the sky. When we were out on the beach not far from our destination. I happened to look up, and see the thing. It moved to the eastward down the beach, following the line of the beach as closely as one would do in driving a buggy. We stopped and watched it. When down about the end of the island it turned and followed the bay front until about Tremont street, when it turned again, crossed over the town and went south and over the gulf, disappearing in the distance.

"Did it look anything like the picture in The News yesterday morning"

"It was not so pointed at the ends as that. The picture shows the headlight as being directed more toward the earth, while in reality it is directly in front, for when it was over us we could see no light at all. It looked like a great big bird. The wings flapped regularly and it appeared to go swiftly."

"How far up was it?"

> "Oh, I could, not tell exactly, especially at night, but I judge it was about four times as high as one of those telephone poles." The poles are 60 feet in height. Further than this he could give no details. Mr. Tevis was, like his wife, "examined separately and apart," and he told the same story [What the reporter means is that each witness—Mr. Tevis and Mr. Norwood—was questioned separately.] (Galveston News, April 18, 1897).

Scientists had pretty much ruled out wing-flapping as a means of successfully elevating humans above the last layer of the earth's crust several years previous to the date of these sightings. However, wing-flapping could contribute to motive power if some other means were incorporated to provide the prerequisite lift. Recall an earlier discussion from chapter 4 about how the wings of modern-day jets "flap" to some degree as a means of preventing them from snapping off in turbulent winds. Typical flapping does not add to the motive power of the airship but keeps the wings intact in turbulence.

However, many airship/airplane inventors in the 1800s were mesmerized by the almost magical flapping of birds' wings. For many, no matter how hard they tried to break the habit, they could not refrain from adding at least a little wing-flapping to their machine's design. So, it is entirely possible that at least one airship was designed to do some flapping in order to contribute to the motive force. (See the account of Marcellus McGary and his successful wing-flapping airship in chapter 20.)

A JUDGE SEES IT

The Curious Effect of Chambers Creek Water.

Waxahachie, Ellis Co., Tex., April 18.—The News reporter has had an interview with Judge Love of this city concerning the mysterious airship, which has been puzzling the minds of many Texans. A rumor having gained currency that it had been seen by him, The News reporter called at his office in quest of further information. Judge Love said:

"Mr. Beatty and myself were on a fishing tour of Chambers creek near the mouth of Great House ranch yesterday [April 17]. The wind was in the north and we were having very little success. About 5:30 or 6 o'clock in the afternoon, we decided to go further down the creek. About 600 yards from the mouth of Great House ranch Mr. Beatty was slightly in advance, and I heard him say, "My God, what is that?" When I struggled through the underneath to him he pointed to the left and there in a ravine, was a group of five peculiarly dressed men, and resting on the bank by them was a queer looking machine, which from the sketches and descriptions heretofore published in The News, we decided must be the airship. The men were taking their ease—stretched out full length on some furs—and they were smoking pipes. We, with some trepidation, advanced upon them; when they saw us they appeared somewhat disconcerted, but one of them in fairly good English called to us 'Come and join us.' We advanced and after mutual introductions had taken place, I asked if that was the famous airship. The man who had first called to us, and who appeared to be the leader of the party, said, 'That is one of the airships [The actual number of airships is one of the central themes of this story, and the fact that the speaker says, "one of the airships" implies that there are more. How many more? Two? Three? Five? Or maybe nine?]; would you like to examine it?'

"The vessel or airship is thirty-twofeetlong and in the center is fourteen feet wide, sloping gradual toward each end like a Mexican cigar. It has three pairs of wings, each is like the wings of a bird. They are ribbed fore and aft, and are covered so that the stream of air can have its full lifting capacity (much as a modern airplane gets its lift from the stream of air passing over the wings] somewhat after the manner of the wings of the kite sent up by Lamson in Rigsby Park The airship contained machinery by which the wings can be worked or flapped very rapidly and by means of a lever the ship can be turned to any direction or made to ascend or descent at will of the helmsman. The ship is fitted for the accommodation of its crew, containing bunks, cooking department, gasoline stove and other conveniences. We were told by the aerial navigators that the airship was capable of a speed of 250 miles an hour, but that its normal rate of speed was from 125 to 150 miles an hour.

On evincing a desire to hear whence they came and how long they had been navigating the air, their leader produced pipes and a sack of excellent tobacco and asked us to make ourselves comfortable while he proceeded to enlighten us.

[The following story is a fanciful yarn designed to throw off any other inventors attempting to determine the location of their home and possibly attempt to copy their design. The inventors did not want anyone snooping around the location of their shop for fear their secrets might become public knowledge. So, an embellished story of a hidden continent masks where they really came from and provides for entertaining reading. These guys had a good sense of humor. People were willing to buy into this story in 1897 in part because Jules Verne had popularized the existence of an underground world deep in the bowels of the earth in one of his many books—Journey to the Center of the Earth.]

"'We,' he said, 'live in the regions of the north pole. Contrary to the general belief, there is a large body of land beyond the polar area, containing about 250 square miles of territory. The first time this land was visited by human beings, so far as we know, was when the ten tribes of Israel found their way there after the captivity and dispersion of the Jews. According to tradition they were attempting to cross Bearing Straits and were carried by a floating ice berg and landed on the shores of north pole land. The climate there, while at that time cold, was prevented from being uninhabitable by the influence of the gulf stream, which after flowing for hundreds of miles many fathoms under the surface of the sea in that region, came to the surface and flows entirely around the continent of north pole. You wonder how I speak English? Well: the polar expedition of Sir Hugh Willoughby in 1553, who with his crew, was supposed to have been lost, as a matter of fact, succeeded in reaching north pole land. The ship had been so wrecked and broken up by the voyage that Sir Willoughby and his crew were unwilling to risk a return trip, therefore they remained at north pole land. In the early part of 1846 Sir John Franklin's crew reached north pole land. Sir John having died near what is know called Lady Franklin bay. Sir John's crew remained as to return was impossible, the ship being crushed between two ice bergs 100 miles from north pole land to which they went in boats. In addition to the foregoing, various parties in the United States and Europe have from time to time reached this land in a hopeless condition.'

"How do you manage to live?"

'Well, we have a splendid country now. You know how buildings are heated by steam. Well we have pipes through which steam is conveyed all over the inhabitable part of the country and the soil is kept at such a temperature that we can produce all the fruits of the temperate zone and some of the fruits of the tropics. The country is lighted by electricity during the six months night. We have no timber and no coals. Water, as you know is composed of two parts of hydrogen and one part oxygen. The oxygen burns very rapidly, giving off great heat. Now by means of a chemical process, we take an ice berg, separate the hydrogen from the oxygen (the chemical process for separating hydrogen and oxygen was known at this time, but it was a very expensive procedure to produce oxygen in any quantity] and use the later for fuel and lights. For lack of timber we can not build ships or trains therefore we were led to the invention of the airship. We have been using the airships in the north pole land for many years for local travel, but not until recently have we made the experiment of taking such trips as the one we are now on.

> 'On the 1st day of January the Historical Society of North Pole Land decided to send out a number of airships throughout the United States and Europe. Twenty airships were ordered built expressly for the purpose with a capacity of five men each. On the 1st day of March, 1897, ten of these ships were started to Europe and ten to America. There are ten ships in the United States. We have guns and fishing tackle and the speed which we go enables us to take any game we can sight. By agreement the ten ships in the United States will meat in Nashville, Tenn. to attend the Centennial Exposition on June 18 and 19 and the ships will be on exhibition for those two days free of charge. [An inventor did notify the exposition that he would display and fly an airship there. More will be discussed concerning the exposition in the final chapters.] About 100 miles north of here we had to descend and saw one of your trains go by. They are very curious things, but go so slow. Now we must be going.'"

> "We then shook hands with the crew and they stepped into their ship, rose in the air and started toward Waco. The description of the ship I have given you is a very meager one but you can all go to the Nashville exposition June 18 and 19 and see for yourselves" (Dallas Morning News, April 19,1897, p. 5; Galveston News, April 19,1897).

This account of the encounter between the good judge and the airship crew probably is true. The judge's description of the airship and the crewmen match certain elements of other accounts (not yet introduced).

The crew seems to delight in misleading the innocent and unwary. Remember these events occurred during a period of intense scientific investigation and invention. One newspaper article claims that every town in America had its aeroplane inventor at work on solving the problem of "aerial navigation." While the claim is undoubtedly exaggerated, it is probably true that many large towns, and not just a few small ones, also had their crackpot inventors feverishly at work on the problem. So, secrecy was the best policy, if you wanted to capitalize on your efforts.

Stealing ideas and even inventions was a common practice then as it is now. The story of the invention of the television and the lifelong bitter feud between two well-known rival inventors is an interesting account of the intense competitiveness between inventors. The invention of the telephone is another case of a prolific 1800s attempt to steal a profitable invention. Alexander Graham Bell had to defend himself against 600plus claims of patent infringement after he publicly introduced the telephone. Amazingly, one of the prominent characters in this story, yet to be introduced, was party to a lawsuit against Bell for patent infringement.

Inventors carried out their experiments in secrecy. When anyone put them to the test, querying them about their inventions and progress, the inventors so pigeonholed—most likely, but not always—offered a tale that was intended to confuse and mislead the competition. Disinformation is not an invention of the post-World War II superpowers. Countries and people were misleading each other with false and partially true stories long before the United States was settled.

The story of North Pole Land sending out airships to explore the world is certainly entertaining but we know there is no such place as described by the airship crew member. Or, is there?

SEEN OVER SAVOY.

> Savoy, Fannin Co. Tex. April 18.—Last night [April 17] between 8:30 and 9 o'clock, J. J. Gallaher, druggist; E. F. Chester, station agent, and J. J. Pritchett, dry goods merchant, while on their way to the lodge, had their attention attracted to a bright light in the northern horizon. The flight was at a considerable distance and was traveling in a northwest direction. It is supposed to be the same phenomenon that was seen by a number of persons in Bonham.

These parties are reliable men. They say the light remained in sight too long for a meteor, as they watched it for almost ten minutes. They are unable to account for it unless it was the muchtalked-of airship (Dallas Morning News, April 19, 1897, p. 5; Galveston News, April 19,1897).

COL. PEOPLES SEES IT.

He Observed It With a Field Glass in the Afternoon.

Cameron, Milam Co., Tex., April 18.—The great aerial monster now flying over the country has been seen in Milam County.

Col. Tom Peoples, who owns one of the largest farms in the county, came in this afternoon and reported the substance of the following story:

Mr. Peoples says that yesterday [April 17] about 2 p.m. he was sitting on the front gallery of his convict quarters watching with his field glasses the convicts at work a mile or two off, when he noticed a dark shadow cover the forty convicts plowing in that gang. It was a bright and perfect day, without a cloud, he was astonished that the horses and men should be under a cloud. He at once began to look for the cause when, with his glass, he caught sight of a huge body coming at a fearful speed from the northwest, and between the sun and the convicts, thereby casting a dark shadow over them. The monster had the appearance of the pictures of the great whaleback ships of which much has been written, with great wings both fore and aft, with great fins beneath and on the sides. The noise of its approach was not great but it produced a humming sound [electric motors, maybe?], which he thinks was caused by the machinery that propelled it.

The principal upon which the great unknown flyer seemed to operate was that of a great plane and the same movement as that observed in the flight and movement of the buzzard as it floated rapidly and without seeming effort and it seemed to take very little power, although it was of monstrous proportions. The visitor, he thinks, must have come from another planet and is on a tour of observation, for it came very low and almost stopped near the large artificial lake on his ranch.

Col. Peoples says that when the ship made this stop there was a great commotion aboard it and many apparent signals were given with strange-colored banners or flags. [Perhaps the signals were how the ships communicated with each other? Was the ship in trouble or experiencing some kind of difficulty?] Strange streamers or streaks of peculiar, dazzling white lights seemed to shoot up to the sky from aboard this strange craft. [The sparks from the commutator brushes from the electrical motors?] After this stop, for the first time, it seemed to require every effort of power to get the machine in motion. (This indicates the airship was experiencing some type of difficulty.] After many rapid revolutions of the great wings [the fan or propeller blades], rudders or fins and more humming sound of machinery, the great and startling ship shot rapidly upward and the last he saw of it, it was going southwest. There was much alarm among the convicts and guards, some thinking that the evil days had drawn nigh, some that their day of deliverance had come.

This is a strange story but it was given in good faith to the News reporter and is vouched for by all the men on Col. Peoples plantation (Dallas Morning News, April 19, 1897, p. 5; Galveston News, April 19,1897; San Antonio Express, April 20, 1897).

THE GREAT AERIAL WANDERER

IT IS EITHER A REALITY OR ANANIAS AND SAPPHIBA WERE MERE AMATEURS

Found on the ground at Greenville and Stephenville, and Exploded at Decatur.

Stephenville, Tex., April 17.—This afternoon Mr. C. L. Mcllhany, a prominent farmer who lives three miles down the Bosque from here, came into the News correspondent's office and before seating himself he said:

"I have found it."

"Found what?"

"Found the airship The Dallas News has been talking about. Its no joke. I discovered the ship on the ground early this morning [April 17]. It was in charge of two men, one an engineer and the other a pilot. They had been compelled to come to the ground to make repairs on the machinery. I at once came to Stephenville and reported my find.

I got a large number of our citizens, who at once proceeded to the spot to view the aerial monster. Among those who viewed the wonderful machine were: Col. James U. Vincent, Eugene Moore of the Stephenville Empire, Mr. Charles Bassell of the Stephenville Journal, Judge W. W. Moorse, Senator L. N. Frank, Mr. M. F. Martin, Dr. S. D. Naylor, Judge Thomas B. King, Mr. J. C. George, Dr. M. Day, J. H. Cage, S. Frank, W. P. Orr, mayor of the city, James Collins, Mr. Lee Young, Dr. R. S. Cameron, Dr. J. H. Stewart, A. M. Borders, S. C. Buck, Hon. J. T. Daniel, ex-District Attorney, Hon. J. W. Karker, District Attorney, Otho S. Houston and Hon. J. S. Straughan, district judge, and many other of our prominent citizens. [I cannot imagine all of these distinguished community leaders subscribing to such a deception as a fake story.]'The airship is very much as reported by the News heretofore.

> It consists of a cigar shaped body about sixty feet in length, to which is attached two immense aeroplanes, and the motive power is an immense -wheel at each end, in appearance much like a metallic windmill. It is driven by an immense electric engine, which derives it power from storage batteries. The crew consisted, as stated, of two men who gave their names as 5. E. Tillman and A. E. Dolbar. They report they have been making an experimental trip to comply with a contract with certain capitalists of New York, who are backing them. They are confident they have achieved a great success and that in a short time the navigation of the air will be an assured fact. They refused to have their machine critically inspected and refused to talk further as to their plans for the future. They rapidly made the necessary repairs, boarded the ship and bidding adieu to the astonished crowd assembled, the ship rose gently into the air and sailed off in a southwesterly direction.

> If you don't believe me, just ask any one of these men who saw it. And say, I want to tell the News about it. This is one time old Erath is ahead—the first place the airship has been seen to light. And say, what you reckon is going to happen when dynamiters get to riding in airships and dropping bombs down on folks and cities? Is this world ready for airships?"

> Without an answer, Mr. Mcllhany went forth to tell the news {Dallas Morning News, April 19,1897, p. 5; Galveston News, April 19,1897).

Dolbar is misspelled in this account. The actual spelling is Dolbear.

The previous descriptions of the airship's length place it around 150 feet and the width about 50 feet. The reported length here of about 60 feet is significantly different from the previous estimates. Was the observer incompetent at guessing lengths or is there another explanation? Maybe this was a different airship.

Note the identification of the storage batteries as the source of electricity. Motive power is again identified as electrical motors fed by storage batteries. Dolbear and Tillman were university professors with a professional interest in electricity and batteries. (See "Looking for Prof. Amos E. Dolbear" and "Looking for Prof. (Captain) Samuel E. Tillman sections in chapter 20.)

Amos E. Dolbear was a professor at Tufts University in Medford, Massachusetts. He was a close confidant and friend of Moses Farmer who, between 1864 and 1868, perfected a thermoelectric battery and in 1868 constructed the largest one ever built for the deposition of copper upon steel to produce the American-compound telegraph wire. During the years of 1860 to 1863, Moses Farmer developed alloys of aluminum with copper and other metals. In September 1859, Moses Farmer discovered the law of the what is now called self-exciting dynamo and, between that time and 1866, built the first dynamo machine, "an invention which," says Prof. A. E. Dolbear, "has made possible all the electrical industries of today."

Capt. Samuel Escue Tillman was a professor of chemistry at West Point Military Academy from December 23, 1880, until his appointment as the academy's superintendent in 1917. Professor Tillman authored the textbook Elementary Lessons in Heat; and Essential Principles of Chemistry.

No doubt, Professor Tillman and Professor Dolbear, through their interest in electrical engineering and chemistry, knew each other and possibly assisted in the design of the "Fargo battery" used in the airship. The identification of these two men, considering their professions (closely associated with an electrically powered machine) is sensible.

Only one person comes to mind when the term "New York capitalist" is mentioned in the same passage as "airships": William Randolph Hearst. Little Willy owned the San Francisco Examiner and the New York Herald in 1896. At the time, his head office was in New York. Not only did he have sufficient resources to fund airship research and construction, but he also was the only capitalist in a position to know both the East Coast and West Coast participants. Did I mention East Coast and West Coast airship participants? I am getting ahead of the story. Also, he would enjoy an immediate personal benefit from any airship success. Such a machine would reduce his New York-San Francisco commute considerably.

A WINDMILL DEMOLISHES IT.

> Aurora, Wise Co., Tex., April 17.—(To The News) -About 6 o'clock this morning [April 17] the early risers of Aurora were astonished at the sudden appearance of the airship which has been sailing through the country.
> It was traveling due north, and much nearer the earth than ever before. Evidently some of the machinery was out of order, for it was making a speed of only ten or twelve miles an hour and gradually settling toward the earth. It sailed directly over the public square, and when it reached the north part of town collided with the tower of Judge Proctor's windmill and went to pieces with a terrific explosion, scattering debris over several acres of ground, wrecking the windmill and water tank and destroying the judge's flower garden.

> The pilot of the ship is supposed to have been the only one on board, and while his remains are badly disfigured, enough of the original has been picked up to show that he was not an inhabitant of this world. Mr. T.J. Weems, the United States Signal Service officer at this place gave it as his opinion that he was a native of the planet Mars. (Many people quickly dismiss this account because of the claim that an alien body was recovered. But, why would a government official, probably with no long-term ties to the community, lie about the recovery of a body? Was this a gaffe by a United States official, similar to another famous incident at Roswell, New Mexico, fifty years later?]
> Papers found on his person—evidently the record of his travels—are written in some unknown hieroglyphics, and cannot be deciphered. The ship was too badly wrecked to form any conclusion as to its construction or motive power. It was built of an unknown metal, resembling somewhat a mixture of aluminum and silver, and it must have weighed several tons. (See chapter 20 for a discussion on lifting power of gas and airship weight.)
> The town is full of people to-day who are viewing the wreck and gathering specimens of the strange metal from the debris. The pilot's funeral will take place at noon to-morrow. S. E. Hayden (Dallas Morning News, April 19, 1897, p. 5; Galveston News, April 19,1897).

If the Aurora sighting and crash occurred in the absence of any other airship sighting in the area then it would be much easier to consign the account to the heap of known hoaxes. However, there were numerous airship sightings—more than thirty were reported in the North Texas region, including Rhome and Tioga—the evening before the crash. Rhome and Tioga are close by Aurora. Two airship sightings were made at 3:00 A.M. on the morning of the crash, one in Dallas and one in Ladonia. Also, another sighting of an airship said to be experiencing mechanical difficulties, occurred in Stephenville at some early, indeterminate hour before the crash. With so many reported airship sightings nearby, one cannot summarily dismiss the Aurora account.

One of the sightings near Aurora is of particular interest. An airship was seen near Stephenville early on the morning, but before 6:00 A.M., of the crash. The airship was observed on the ground experiencing mechanical problems by many distinguished citizens shortly prior to the Aurora crash. The airship was previously observed on the ground only when it was experiencing mechanical difficulties or the crew needed to replenish their water supply. Stephenville is sixty-eight miles south of Aurora. You may recall the account states the airship was traveling north when it passed over the town.

After leaving Stephenville, the airship reportedly headed southwest, but may have turned north shortly after leaving Stephenville (due to continuing mechanical difficulties), toward its daytime lair, somewhere near Sherman. Either the pilot intentionally headed southwest from Stephenville to confound anyone attempting to trace their daytime hideout or he was headed for a southerly destination by plan but the ship's mechanical difficulties caused him to come about after leaving Stephenville. I prefer to think he initially went southwest but was compelled to turn around due to continuing mechanical difficulties. In any case, the northward direction of the airship as seen by Aurora inhabitants is generally consistent with the probable location of the airship's daytime operations base, which I place somewhere northeast of Aurora and near the Texas-Oklahoma border.

If my supposition is correct, that the pilot was trying to get to his daytime hideout, why was he flying over Aurora if he came from Stephenville? If the daytime hideout was north and east of Sherman, as I predict, he could have taken a more direct approach by going more northeast from Stephenville. It seems reasonable to think that a pilot on a ship experiencing difficulties would want to go in as direct a line as possible to home base. In that case, a ship in Stephenville would not fly over Aurora. But let's look a little closer at the issue.

A plausible explanation for the airship's presence over Aurora the morning of the crash is that the pilot, after leaving Stephenville, did not want to fly over the large cities of Fort Worth and Dallas in the daytime. Remember, the airships avoided flying in the daylight for several good reasons. Flying over metropolitan areas in full daylight offered the guntotin' citizens an opportunity to "puncture the air department" of both the airship and the airmen with their shootin irons. The only accounts of daytime sightings occurred when an airship was on the ground undergoing repairs and then it was only seen by relatively few people. By going north from Stephenville, the pilot of the crippled airship avoided the Fort Worth-Dallas metropolitan area. By adopting such an evasive tactic, the airship needed to fly over small towns only. It is unknown what effect the sight of an airship would cause in 1897 if seen in the daytime over a large city, but it is conceivable such a sight would cause great alarm, even panic, and would result in serious injury to many people. Remember that many people were thinking the airship was from Mars. Many others thought it was God's messenger come to collect the righteous. And many people would gleefully take potshots at the beast, if given such an opportunity. I think that in the selection of the route taken from Stephenville the pilot was exercising prudence by attempting to avoid such calamities.

It is safe to assume that an airship may crash as the result of mechanical difficulties. Experience in this century certainly confirms the possibility. So, if the airships' existence was factual, the probability of an actual crash at Aurora cannot be ruled out. The only significant issue with the reality of a crash is the statement by the United States Signal Service officer that the recovered body, in his opinion, was from Mars. Well, maybe so, but I prefer to think that the recovered body pieces were more likely the burnt-beyond-recognition remains of a human.

Why would a United States government official make such a seemingly outrageous (by today's standards) claim? Large telescopes, sufficiently powerful enough to see great detail of the planet's surface, had recently been focused on Mars. The earthly observers were delighted to see great canals stretching across parts of the water-challenged planet. These canals were evidence the learned community used to proclaim the presence of intelligent life on Mars.

At the time, there was much newspaper space devoted to the exciting discovery of Martian canals. It was supposed by many that life on Mars, if capable of creating great canals for presumably irrigation purposes, might also have sufficient intelligence to develop vehicles capable of interplanetary travel. The conviction that life existed on Mars became so fixed in the American psyche that thousands of people would be stampeded years later in 1937, when Orson Welles performed the H. G. Wells classic, The War of the Worlds on radio.

If the credible newspapers and monthly journals reported the airships were from Mars, then any reasonable person would assume the unidentifiable remains must naturally be of Martian origin. So, considering the historical background, it does not seem unreasonable for a government official to assume to be true what he had been reading in the newspapers all along.

The strange metal recovered at the crash site is probably aluminum. Aluminum was not in general use at that time and was not familiar to most people, especially farmers. Only in 1886 did we discover how to smelt aluminum in any large quantity. Aurora was a farming community and farmers were very familiar with steel and iron, as these two metals were used for all manner of farming and household needs. However, it is likely that they would not be familiar with aluminum. The metal would seem strange. Modern-day UFO researchers have searched the good Judge Proctor's farm and claim to have found pieces of aluminum in the immediate vicinity where the old windmill was located. I visited the site in 2001 and found nothing of interest regarding this story.

The papers with "hieroglyphics" sound too much like the coded notebooks of Dellschau, who recorded secrets concerning the Sonora Aero Club in his notebooks using a code known only to him and perhaps any accomplices he may have had. It would prove most fruitful to compare these papers to Dellschau's notebooks and determine the points of similarity. Where are these papers from the Aurora crash currently reposing?

It seems the pilot was buried rather hurriedly in an unmarked grave in the Aurora community cemetery. The fact that the town did not display the "Martian body" for the world to see lends suspicion to the claim that the airship crashed. Also, the recovery of the "weird" papers reinforces the belief the crash claim was false. Many people then (and now) came to conclude that Aurora was falsely claiming the crash to get unwarranted attention for its community. Why? Because, some argued, the railroad had passed Aurora by, therefore ensuring a bleak future for the community. As the argument went, the townspeople wanted to capitalize financially on the publicity such a claim would gain for the town. To use this argument to reject the airship crash claim seems preposterous. Any benefit derived from the publicity of an (false) alien spaceship crash would be fleeting, not necessarily positive, and then the townspeople would suffer the scorn of the rest of the nation. Such a publicity stunt is not very foresighted. For such a claim to hold together for any length of time, the community as a whole would have to agree upon the circumstances of the claim. I cannot imagine the community agreeing to do so.

What if the reporter took it upon himself to write a fake story? One modern writer, Daniel Cohen (The Great Airship Mystery: A UFO of the l890s), claims all the airship stories were fake. He bases his conclusion upon the untenable precept that many newspapers of the period regularly engaged in printed hoaxes as a means of increasing circulation and amusing the audience. He provides some examples of newspaper hoaxes to support his argument. What he never states is that the hoaxes mentioned in his book were singular in their conception and publication. The typical newspaper hoax of the period was carried by one newspaper, usually in a serialized fashion. Upon publication of the final installment, the newspaper would confess to the fabrication of the story. No newspaper ever confessed to printing an airship story as a hoax, although several people admitted later that they fabricated airship stories to see if they could fool the newspaper. These stories involved sightings in other states and are patently false as the circumstances involved are totally out of harmony with the nature of other well-documented sightings.

In any case, if the reporter went out on a limb and wrote the Aurora story without any evidence of an actual crash, I imagine the city fathers (and mothers) would raise a storm of protest the following day. No such remonstration by the good people of Aurora was ever documented.

Modern-day UFO enthusiasts have attempted to get permission from Aurora authorities to let them dig up the area in the community cemetery where the body of the pilot is supposedly buried in an unmarked grave. Aurora has refused, adding fuel to the suspicion that crash was fake. "What does Aurora have to hide," is the cry of the enthusiasts. "Nothing," I say. I am not inclined to believe we need to dig up cemeteries to prove this or that. I think, if we evaluate the pieces of the puzzle, they are sufficient for us to arrive at reasonable, logical, and rational conclusions. In so doing, we cannot but believe an airship crashed on that long-ago morning, killing the unfortunate pilot and burning his body beyond recognition. The pilot, in all likelihood, was a "Martian" only if he called "Mars, Some State, USA" his home.

The airship is now an established fact. Too many reputable accounts have come to the populace's attention to ignore their existence. If three airships were flying about the Texas skies in April 1897, we know from the experience of the past fifty years that sooner or later, one of those airships will crash. Probably sooner, as these airships were the first of their kind, prototypes using technologies far inferior to the modern jetliner. Yet, even with advanced technology, today we, unfortunately, periodically have jetliners falling out of the sky. So, is it unreasonable to believe one of these airships crashed, and the place just happened to be Aurora? It is not.

Perhaps the most significant evidence we now have of the veracity of an Aurora crash is the list of witnesses who gave testimony to seeing the airship on the ground "early in the morning" when it was experiencing mechanical difficulties in Stephenville. The distinguished list includes a colonel, a railroad executive, a newspaper man, two judges, a senator, four doctors, the mayor of Stephenville, a district attorney, an ex-district attorney, a district judge, and "other prominent citizens." While we may be somewhat cynical today (and probably for good cause) and strongly suspect all "prominent" citizens, capable of lying if it is in their interest, it is hardly imaginable that such a list of characters would conspire to lie about seeing an airship on the ground and undergoing repairs. A subsequent crash seems entirely possible and even likely if the mechanical difficulties were severe and/or the winds were high on that April morning.

At this point, a thinking person may ask, "Who were the two men seen with the airship at Stephenville?" Also, why were parts of only one body found? In the final chapters, we pursue these leads. The results of the investigation will astound you.

SKEPTICS AND BELIEVERS

Ennis, Ellis Co., Tex., April 18.—The excitement incident to the published reports of the wonderful airship is growing more and more intense and various opinions are being expressed. One man was heard to say to-day that the whole matter is an advertising scheme. Dr. E. Stuart, an acknowledged authority in metaphysics, gives it as his opinion that the whole affair is due to hypnotism and bad whiskey, and J. M. Chapman thinks it is purely sensational fiction. But the people are not all skeptical. Some believe the question of aerial navigation has been solved and others who are close students of the Bible are apprehensive that the end of time is drawing near and that the strange visitations are heavenly inspectors going about to judge the world. A deeply pious lady said to-day that one would see lights, some would dream and some see visitors, we would hear of wars and rumors of war and lastly that whenever the gospel shall have been preached to all nations then the end will come.

"This,"she said, "has almost come. Every nation except Tibet has had the gospel and messengers are trying to go there. When that is done the fullness of time will have come and the Lord will most likely appear in his second coming."

It is rumored to-day that Mr. C. W. Beale of this city, a very sober and circumspect gentleman, saw the mysterious vehicle last night [April 17] and Mr. F. D. Hahnsbeen, night operator at the Central office says he saw it.

City Recorder J. W. Craig says he saw the ship at noon last Monday [April 12], but as there had then been no excitement over it he let it pass with only mentioning it casually. He says that he and Charlie Pippenmere were looking at the moon and a star at noon and a dark object passed across his vision which as he now recalls it suits very much to the description given of the air vessel (Dallas Morning News, April 19,1897, p. 5; Galveston News, April 19,1897).

SEEN AT WEST

West, McLennan Co., Tex., April 18.—(To The News.)— People here have been on the alert for the famous airship. It was seen by Prof. Hickman of this place about 10:30 o'clock last night [April 17] moving in a southeast courses. His description of the thing was very minute. It seemed to be whaleback in body with batlike wings, windows with lights inside with a powerful headlight in front. It was not over 500 feet above the ground, but ascended rapidly until almost out of sight. It had almost meteorlike speed. [Does he mean to imply it was fast or should we take the statement literally? I think he just meant the speed of the airship was fast.]

It was also seen by Thomas Franklin and others living near this place. This settles the matter of the fact of the airship in this place. James Griffin (Dallas Morning News, April 19, 1897, p. 5; Galveston News, April 19, 1897).

HAS A MUSIC CREW

Hillsboro, Hill Co., Tex., April 18.—A number of persons in this city whose curiosity in regard to the airship has been aroused to fever heat by the graphic accounts of this mysterious wanderer of the heavens as published in The Dallas News sat up most of the night in hopes of seeing it. Their vigilance was not rewarded, probably from the fact that it had engagements to fill in other sections and could not get around.

However, a gentleman named Walter Williams, who camped with his wagon on a high hill about two miles east on the Hillsboro and Mount Calm road, and who slept on the extreme summit of the hill, says he heard and saw wonderful things that were not on the program. He came to town this morning and The News reporter ran across him at the city watering trough as he was watering his team. The reporter, observing that he appeared perplexed about something, halted and entered into a conversation with him, and soon learned the cause of his perplexity. An account of this man and his strange experience is best related in his own words. Said he:

My name is Walter Williams. I am a farmer and live in Anderson County near Montalba, a small country village. I am on my way overland to Hardeman County where I have land interests. Last night [April 17] I stayed east of here on a high hill. I stopped my wagon and team at the foot of the hill, where I fed my team. After supper I strolled about a little for relaxation and eventually got to the summit of the hill. The night was an ideal one with no clouds visible anywhere. The moon was cleverly up and the view from the hill eminently beautiful and impressive. The city of Hillsboro lay off in the valley to the west in all it picturesqueness, while beyond it the shadow of the cross timbers showed darkly against the horizon. The timbered creek above and below me and the clear sky above, from which a few stars blinked sleepily, added to the happiness of the occasion. Moved by impulse I took off my hat on adoration to the hand that had fashioned the hills and spread the valley there. The place was so lonely and quiet I decided to spend the night there, and got my blankets and spread them on the ground with nothing but the blue canopy above me.

I soon drifted away into the land of slumber. After awhile I was awakened by the sound of music. I lay on my pallet with my eyes closed and listened to it. Softer, sweeter music was never heard. Its melody coursed through my veins and penetrated my very soul. Presently I was sufficiently awake to remember where I was and it struck me as very strange that I should hear music at that place and time. I opened my eyes and looked around me. I could see no one, and the music very strangely seemed to be in the air overhead. I sprang to my feet and could not see anything. It must have been midnight or past, for the moon had climbed high up the heavens, and its silver rays filled the earth with their radiance. I felt as if I was in a spirit land listening to the weird music of spirits. It was like the music of an organ with flageolet, violin, flute and cornet accompanying it. At times it seemed very near and then floated away almost beyond the range of hearing, but always returning sweeter and more devotional than before. Look as I would I could see nothing of the invisible musicians, and it is natural that I should have felt somewhat superstitious about it. Yet I was not as disturbed as one would suppose by it. I know or felt reasonably certain that no human agency produced the music, still it did not terrify me. The tune was 'Coronation,' and while it was soft and low, it seemed to penetrate the entire universe. The very air seemed to thrill from it. The stars in the distance, dim and indistinct, appeared to feel its vibration. After awhile the music ceased and I noticed a commotion in the milky way almost overhead. It seemed as if millions of stars moved by a sudden impulse, had started revolving about each other in what appeared to be a space ten feet in diameter. They revolved around faster and faster, occasionally throwing off stars which darted into the void and disappeared. This lasted for scarcely a minute, when the disorder ceased. In the center of the circle was plainly outlined a cross of stars adorned with a crown of thorns. This presently faded and left the milkyway in its natural state. Just as it faded I plainly heard from myriad of tongues the refrain, "Peace on Earth, good will toward men." I fancied I could see in the far heavens flashing in the moon light the silver tips of angel wings. The song died away and everything grew silent. After that I could not sleep until nearly day when I fell into a soft slumber. I am at a loss to account for it. It could not have been a dream. It was too vivid, and I can not account for it. While it is possible that Easter tide may have had something to do with it, I am not prepared to say that it did. I relate it as it occurred to me, and as a Christian that I saw what I saw. If you doubt it I refer you to any one at Montalba, Tex. who will tell you I am at least regarded as truthful."

> When the reporter recovered from the strangeness of the adventure, Mr. Williams was some distance down the street (Dallas Morning News, April 19,1897, p. 5; Galveston News, April 19,1897).

I am inclined to believe Mr. Williams went to sleep under the influence of a dose of either morphine or cocaine. This account sounds like the fanciful dream of a person under the influence. Both drugs, easily obtainable in 1897, were commonly used, and abused, for various reasons. During the Vietnam War, my abdomen was cut open and was not closed for ten days due to gangrene. During this time, and the subsequent twenty days following the stitching, I was given a shot of morphine every four hours. I can recall, to this day, the feeling of the morphine high. Music playing through a stereo system and in my head (without benefit of a stereo system) sounded much the same and much like the account given here by Mr. Williams. He probably experienced a similar drug-induced "stereo" and that is probably why he hurriedly departed down the street after reciting his account to the newspaper man—he did not want to be questioned too closely on the matter. Or, this is one of those fake newspaper stories. The name of the road, Mount Calm, given the nature of the story —Mr. Williams was asleep—seems just a little too cute. But then again, there really is a Mount Calm road between Hillsboro and Waco and the airship crew were fond of playing music on occasion.

SEEN IN THE TERRITORY

> Padl, I. T. April 17—(To The News.)—Until tonight [April 17] the airship has been regarded as a fake by our people. There is, however, no unbeliever now. At 8:35 p.m., just as the north-bound passenger train No. 12 pulled into the station, the ship was seen traveling in a southern courses, moving at the rate of about fortyfive or fifty miles an hour. It looked to be from 75 to 100 feet in length, carried what seemed to be a headlight not unlike those used on a locomotive, and was some quarter of a mile from the earth.
> Attention was first called to the presence of the strange sight by Engineer Girard of the train. Those who saw the ship at this place were Conductor Jack Conlisk and Engineer Girard of the train, Dr. Tucker; Dr. McBride, G. D. Thompson, Mr. Nesbit, and this correspondent, besides the passengers on the train. There is no doubt it was seen by the good people of Paul's Valley as it was traveling in that directions. R. M. Tate (Dallas Morning News, April 19,1897, p. 5; Galveston News, April 19,1897).

This is the second account that places the length of the airship at 75 feet. The length of this airship marks it as the shorter of the three ships going about the countryside of Texas. The other two airships were 150200 feet long.

AIRSHIP LINE

> Bonham, Fannin Co., Tex. April 17.—(To The News)— Bonham capitalists will in a few days apply for a charter for the Bonham, Ivanhoe, and Lamasco Airship Transportation Company. They will at once inaugurate a double daily passenger ship to transport all merchandise to Ivanhoe and Lamasco, and returning will load with corn, which will be brought to Bonham and loaded on railroad cars for shipment to different parts of the state and for export.
> For a distance of about five miles in the Ivanhoe country the air does not contain sufficient buoyancy to float the ships. They expect to overcome this difficulty by either bridging or tunneling. The stockholders, backed by the local newspaper, have all the necessary material on the ground to carry out the enterprise except the bridge and ships. As this will be the first all air line in the state, I thought I would bring it to your attention. Respectfully, Julius (not Jules) Verne (Dallas Morning News, April 19,1897, p. 5; Galveston News, April 19,1897).

This is obviously a humorous attempt to trivialize all the previously reported accounts of airship sightings.

SEEN AT WORTHAM

Wortham, Freestone Co., Tex, April 18—Captain John A. Lilly, a prominent and reliable citizen of this place, a Mexican War veteran, claims he saw the mysterious airship last night [April 17] at 9:30. He says it was going straight up. The captain is noted for his truthfulness (Dallas Morning News, April 19,1897, p. 5; Galveston News, April 19,1897).

AIRSHIP

Seen By Fort Worth People Last Night

SAID TO HAVE LANDED IN THE CITY PARK

A Stephenville Editor Saw It and Tried to Interview the Man Who was Navigating the Aerial Wonder.

Fort Worth, April 19—At last the aerial wonder causing so much comment all over the country has been seen in Fort Worth; at least there are some good citizens who declare they witnessed its appearance last night.

L. E. James says he saw it land in the city park last night [April 17], when a man at least seven feet tall [exaggeration ?] alighted from it and appeared to be fastening some ropes after which he boarded it again when it swiftly arose and soon disappeared from view.

J. E. Johnson at the Natatorium says he saw it plainly last night passing over the city.

Word comes from Stephenville that the editor of a paper there saw it near the earth and tried to interview the man conducting it and was informed that he had not time to talk.

Leading astronomers agree that what all have been calling an airship is nothing but a star in the constellation Orion and is so near the horizon that the axial movement of the earth makes it appear that the star is rapidly moving. This is all there is to the airship except where practical jokers have sent up balloons (Dallas Times Herald, April 20, 1897).

Many of the accounts speak of direct contact with the airship crews and also of seeing the airship as it glides overhead at various altitudes, changing direction, speeding up and slowing down, etc—hardly the same movement one expects from a twinkling star seen on the horizon. The astronomers do not advance any argument to buttress their illfounded conclusion that everyone is seeing stars "near the horizon." If they left the seclusion of their observatories at night and peered into the sky with naked eyes, they may have discovered the truth for themselves.

Actually, when you read the great body of newspaper accounts from other states, documenting the travels of the airships before they arrived in Texas, you realize the term "leading astronomers" refers to people far removed from the places of the sightings. How did secluded and faraway "leading astronomers" know what Texans were seeing? I suppose when they looked up in the sky inside or outside their observatories, many miles from Texas, all they saw were planets, stars, etc. It should come as no surprise that such experts would debunk the existence of airships.

AIRSHIP HERE!

Abilene's Attractions Were To Great for the New vessel to Stay Away.

> Saturday's Reporter registered a big kick because no one in the up-to-date town of Abilene had seen the airship, and our people came bravely to the rescue. At 11:30 Saturday night [April 17] two of our watchmen saw the monster bird hovering over the city, its passengers evidently taking an observation. The gentlemen were enabled to see that it corresponded largely with descriptions given at other places, only it was somewhat larger, its length being about 700feet. Windows on the side next to the observers were brilliantly lighted and faint strains of music were heard as if from a powerful orchestra. Evidently the passengers were engaged in a pleasant hop, and enjoying themselves to in a highly satisfactory manner. After a few minutes the aerial party started off in a southwesterly direction, and went at a terrific speed, but just before it faded from sight it turned to the southeast, and was almost immediately out of sight. No doubt the mysterious visitor will come again, as the attractions of this country by moon light are so great that the passengers will want to see it again. Tonight Mr. Ed Harris and others will keep a sharp lookout, and when they see it will get a more accurate description (Abilene Reporter, April 20, 1897, p. 2).

The previous descriptions typically refer to the length as 150 to 200 feet, although some accounts mention an airship 75 feet long. Two previous accounts estimate the length at 500 feet and now this account states the length was 700 feet. What were the actual lengths? I believe two airships were in the 150-to 200-foot range and one was in the 75-foot range. I think the 500- and 700-foot estimates are gross overestimates of the ISO- to 200-foot airships, or maybe there was a fourth, much larger, airship. But, we can only account for three in the Texas sightings.

April 17, 1897, sightings

The scattered sightings of the airships on the night of April 17 indicate that a search for the crashed airship was underway in the direction of Galveston and Beaumont. The two remaining airships roamed the countryside on the night of the seventeenth looking for the tardy airship that did not return the previous night. Unknown to the other crews, the missing ship had crashed that morning in Aurora. The other crews would not read about the fateful crash in the newspaper until April 19. The pattern of sightings indicates a systematic search of the region between Beaumont and San Antonio. It seems reasonable that the other two ships would continue searching until they read of the crash in the paper.

MR. SMITH'S AIRSHIP.

This One Carried 10 or 12 passengers, Wearing Easter Bonnets.

> Mr. L. G. Smith, steward at the Hermitage Hospital, at 3 o'clock Sunday morning [April 18] saw the mysterious airship. He said he was on the upper veranda looking south when he discovered an immense shadow falling across town. This was followed by brilliant streams of light, which came from a rapidly approaching object of oblong shape, coursing also downward and from the east. The velocity was lessened and suddenly the vessel rested upon the spire of the federal building. From his position Mr. Smith could see through the windows small but decorative apartments, and was sure that 8 or 10passengers were aboard. Several were ladies dressed in handsome Easter costumes. The stop occupied about three minutes. Two men came to the outside. One descended to the steeple, presumably to drop a letter, while the other, with lanterns in hand, appeared to be applying oil at the junction of the wings.

> Mr. Smith states that he hastily aroused his wife, but before she could reach him the mysterious pilgrim was away, going toward the > south, leaving in its journey Oak Cliff, immediately to the left (Houston Post, April 22,1897; Terrell Times-Star, April 30,1897).

Several accounts in which the pilot or captain of the airship is interviewed by the observer give the crew and passenger capacity as ten people, and another account gives the capacity as twenty. Note the different numbers given in the headline and the body of the account for the amount of passengers, a curious transposition of the facts.

EASTER SUNDAY, APRIL 18, 1897

There are nine reported sightings for the night of April 18. The sporadic sightings imply the airships were searching for something—perhaps, the airship that crashed and burned in Aurora? We continue with their stories.

> Editorial comment: At last the lights of the mysterious airship have been seen in Texas. It would be a mistake to suppose that Texas has no reputable citizens after dark (Houston Post, April 18,1897).

> Editorial comment: The airship epidemic is spreading, but it is believed that the purity of the San Antonio brewery products serves as an effectual quarantine (San Antonio Express, April 18, 1897, p. 12).

> The social fad now in swell Kansas society is the airship party ("Snapshots," Dallas Morning News, April 18,1897).

CAUSING TALK

Denton, Denton Co., Tex April 17—The airship reports of which have appeared in the news from this and so many other points is causing a great deal of talk here although many still prefer to believe that it is a gigantic hoax [It would take quite a large conspiracy among many disparate people from diverse professions and widespread regions to perpetuate such a gigantic hoax] ("High in the Heavens," Dallas Morning News, April 18, 1897, p. 4).

It would take quite a large conspiracy among many disparate people from diverse professions and widespread regions to perpetuate such a "gigantic" hoax. I don't think so.

TRUTHFUL' SCULLY CORROBORATED

> Fort Worth, Tex. April 17 -'Truthful'Joe Scully of the Texas and Pacific force is in this city from his run. All day he had been asked concerning the airship. Seen by a News man tonight, he said:
> "I did not think that The News reporter was going to quote me at Dallas, but he told the truth. On the dead, I saw that ship, and if a man says I ever took a drink or did not see that ship, just give me his name and I will give him my attention. People don't think these things are coming but they are and one of them is already here. I saw it."
>
> Superintendent Leroy Trice of the road, so Scully says, has admitted to him privately that he had also seen it. Scully says:
> "Trice told me to say nothing about this matter, just like I told The News man at Dallas, and of course, I told him I would not. Now this ain't for publication."
> Col. Gaston Meslier of the Texas and Pacific here from Dallas said today:

> "When I used to live in Alabama some years ago I heard of airships but I never dreamed that such things existed until such men as Trice, Scully, and Dunlap, told of their seeing them. I never go behind the returns in matters of this kind. Their accrediddness [sic] is on a par with that of election returns" ("High in the Heavens, Dallas Morning News, April 18, 1897, p. 4).

Well, maybe Colonel Meslier should have "gone behind the (election) returns" if he thought the stories were "on a par with that of election returns." Too many dead people are known to have voted in this century for us to believe election returns are anything but suspect. [Dead people in Chicago are notorious for removing themselves from their dark abodes and attending to that most basic of all human freedoms. Must be the Chicago water.]

SENTIMENT AT ENNIS

> Ennis, Ellis Co., Tex April 17—People here are deeply interested in the published accounts of the airship as seen and reported from various points. Some are imposed to treat the matter as a huge sensational joke, while others believe that it is a reality ("High in the Heavens," Dallas Morning News, April 18, 1897, p. 4).

AERIAL NAVIGATION

The New York Mail and Express says "no matter what may be finally discovered as to the 'airship' recently reported by several credible citizens in the various states, yet there is reason to believe that the day is not far distant when aerial navigation will be one of the solved problems." It will be remembered that a little over a year ago the great American inventor, Mr. Hiram Maxim constructed in England an airship under very favorable conditions. With a mechanical genius to suggest the details, a corps of skilled workmen to carry out the plans, plenty of capitol to obtain the best materials, and an absolutely perfect workshop provided with tools and instruments of precision and accuracy, the most wonderful airship of its type was completed and tried. This type was the aero-plane, the adjustable planes having a superb arrangement. For every two pounds of weight of engine and sailor, a horsepower was produced. The two large propeller wheels gave speed and direction to the ship. The only question which seemed to him not exactly solved was that of equilibrium. A trial was made but an accident happened which prevented a perfect test. But up to this time, so far as known, Mr. Maxim has not produced the "flying machine."

And so it has been with all the experiments, there is always "some little thing" lacking for successful operation. The largest number of patents issued for these machines has been after the artificial bird type, which consists of a waist belt having connected thereto bat-like wings, a brace extending from the belt upward to the neck of the operator and carrying a transverse yoke, which is grasped and vibrated to assist in flapping the wings. The machines operate successfully for descent from even high altitudes, but are failures for ascending and directing purposes.

About four years ago a very elaborate airship was patented by a Chicago inventor, being similar in shape to a steam ship, with state rooms, galleries, etc., lighted by electricity and propelled by firing explosive cartridges by electric current from the stern of the boat. It has not however proven a success.

Although failures have down to date been the story, much progress has been made in this line since the days of Montgolfer, Cavello, Blanchard, and others, who had similar experiences with the people in France and Portugal who looked upon balloons and their navigators with great superstition.

Dr. Depaw says a fortune of millions awaits the man who can and who possibly will soon solve the problem that will permit a transportation business without requirements of rights of way, bridges, trackage, etc. If there is any young gentleman sailing around Texas and other states, he might apply to the Doctor without further delay (Dallas Times Herald, April 18, 1897).

AT ATLANTA

Atlanta, Texas, April 19.—There was excitement here to-day, caused by a visitation last night [April 18] by the mysterious airship. It was first seen by Jim Nelson, a farmer, living one and a half miles west of here. He had walked out into his yard just after midnight, when his attention was attracted by a peculiar noise, and looking up he discovered the mysterious aerial traveler. It seemed to be descending straight to the earth with great rapidity and Mr. Nelson's hair stood on end with fright, as he mistook it for a meteor and momentarily expected it to strike the earth, explode and blow himself, his family and earthly possessions into eternity. But when within two or three hundred feet of the earth it paused for an instant, coming to a sudden stop, almost like a heavy weight falling till it reached the end of a rope restraining it, then it moved off at a rate of speed about equal to that of an ordinary passenger train, in the direction of the city. Having read in the papers of an airship appearing at different places, he decided this must be the mysterious stranger and having telephone connection with this city he immediately rang up central and reported what he had seen.

Mr. Boothe, the telephone manager being in the office, looked out for the airship, which made its appearance on time. While passing over the city it was seen by many of the best citizens. Lee Wicks, night policeman, saw it distinctly and describes it as being about thirty feet long and the body or hull being about the proportions and shape of a skiff, and seemed to be propelled by revolving wheels and fitted with sails to guide its courses. Both Mr. Wicks and Mr. Boothe agree in their description of the ship, and both believe the motor power to be electricity.

Dr. Crossly, Jack Bangos, Dr. Connerly, Chesa Meyers, Tom Swint, Doc Hogan, Paul Dunkin, R. T. Cops and Mr. Huffmaster, night operator, all are reported to have seen the ship, and verify the statement and description given by Booths and Wicks.

Another solution offered is that it is an exploring party sent out by some other planet. The most plausible theory seems to be that some inventor has succeeded in solving the problem of aerial navigation and with a party of his friends is out on a trial trip (Appeared under the main headline "Seen at Belton," Houston Post, April 22,1897).

When first seen by Jim Nelson there were "only faint gleams of red, green and blue lights, but just after starting off horizontally it shot out a glaring gleam of white light, which was directed towards the earth in front of the airship at an angle of about 45 degrees, and lighted a circle about 30 feet in diameter as bright or brighter than the noonday sun." [The Post adlibbed: This great light and its wonderful power is supposed to have been a search light.]

While passing over the city the speed of the airship was from five to fifteen miles per hour. It showed up just before reaching the business part of the city, and in passing over this portion its speed was not above five miles an hour. It was traveling almost due east and the stream of light was shut off just after passing the city limits. The opinions regarding this mysterious ship are about as numerous as the population. Some who did not see it are inclined to brand the story as a fake, but the character of the men who saw it can not be questioned. It is impossible to give all opinions*, but one that seems to be worthy of consideration is that this airship is the property of a gang of cracksmen, who by the aid of the searchlight and X-Rays, under the managements of scientific experts, sail over a town and look through the walls of the houses and bank vaults and locate the booty; that they return on a later date and secure it, and then disappear by the aid of their airship* (Appeared under the main headline, "Seen at Belton," Houston Post, April 22, 1897; and Terrell Times Star, April 30, 1897).

This is the first account that mentions blue lights associated with the airships.

There are no accounts of bank robbers getting away in an airship, nor is there any corroborating evidence to support the supposition that the airship crewmen were robbers and the airship was their getaway vehicle. The editor or correspondent of this account is daydreaming about the crews' motives.

A FILIBUSTERING EXPEDITION

> Hearne, Robertson Co., Tex., April 18. Hearne has had a visitation from the mysterious airship, and to such an extent were the remarkable workings revealed that those privileged to view this mechanical wonder pronounce the nocturnal navigator no longer a mystery. The News man interviewed a prominent young druggist this morning, who beyond a doubt has seen the machine, whose purposes he plainly explains. Its description is a clear counterpart of those already given in The News. His vision was at 2 o'clock this morning [April 18] at very close range, the ship being barely above the treetops. By the uncertain electric light he was enabled to decipher a number of Spanish words painted on the bow or fore end of the monster, and while not fully understanding the meaning, he is sure the aerial ship is equipping a filibustering expedition to Cuba ("The Mysterious Airship," Galveston News, April 19,1897).

The Spanish connection again. Unfortunately, the Spanish words are not given in this or any other known account. There is a reasonable explanation for a Spanish connection. A discussion of the issue is presented in the final chapters.

LANDED ON THE BRAZOS

> Caldwell, Tex., April 19,.—There has been much agitation and discussion here for the last few days concerning the airship. It is said that some reliable darkies in the Brazos bottom saw it yesterday afternoon [April 18]. It showed up and settled down on the banks of the river and took a supply of water. Two of the sailors captured a colored man who was hoeing cotton near by and carried him off on the ship because he was working on Sunday. It steamed away to the east and was soon out of sight. The News man can not verify this, as he can not spend the time necessary to find the parties who saw it. Some have been watching here hoping to get a glimpse of the aerial monster, but it has not yet come in sight of Caldwell. This is and has been a local option town since last summer and the nearest saloon is two miles away ("The Latest Airship Jokes," Galveston News, April 20, 1897).

I don't know what to make of this account, other than it is a false report given by an individual who does not like to see people working on Sundays, possibly a religious fanatic. The individual is hoping to frighten those people who do work on Sundays into limiting their Sabbath activities.

HE HAS A SOLUTION

> Alvin, Brazoria Co., Tex., April 19.—Major Buck thinks he has solved the airship problem. Yesterday [April 18] he saw a large vulture or buzzard with streamers hanging to his tail, to which he thinks a light had been attached. The heavens are closely watched by the credulous for a glimpse of the mysterious visitor ("The Latest Airship Jokes," Galveston News, April 20, 1897).

I grew up in the wilds of north-central Texas along Red River. From an early age I observed vultures, or buzzards, as they are known, going to roost at sunset. They do not fly about after dusk but go perch on the highest fixed object they can find in their hunting range. Perhaps, someone captured this particular bird, tied a lantern to its tail, then set it loose after dark, I suppose in its haste to remove itself from its human tormentor, it would rise to some height and fly straight away to its roost or other high promontory. For the unwary, such a sight might be mistaken for an airship sailing away in the night. But, it is not possible for the "airship mystery" to be solved with the explanation that all the bright and colored lights were buzzards with lights or fires attached to their tails. However, as the sightings continued day after day, there were more than one or two attempts to fool the population with some manner of fake airship. The fakes were usually readily identifiable as such. Read on to discover how readily identifiable, and sometimes dangerous, faked airships were.

THAT AIR SHIP

Passed Over Bryan Sunday Night, Going North.

Bryan, Texas, April 19.—The mysterious airship of which so much has been said of late, passed over Bryan last night [April 18] A number of people declare they saw it. It was going north ("That Airship," Houston Post, April 22, 1897).

EATS PEACHES AND SMOKES HAVANAS

Lovelady, Texas, April 19.—J. H. Johnson, bookkeeper for the firm Malner & Monday of this town, at 9:25 last night [April 18] saw an object which must have been the much talked off airship. He says it was 250 feet above the trees and when first seen in the northwest it was traveling at a very rapid rate in a southeasterly direction and descending gradually. After crossing the International and Great Northern tracks about one-quarter of a mile north of town it quickly veered to the NE and rose rapidly to a great elevation, passing out of sight behind the clouds in a few minutes. He was so dazed by the sight that he is unable to give accurate details of its appearance, but says that it looked like a dragon fly in shape except that the wings were wide and curved instead of straight and narrow. A long cone-shaped attachment swung underneath and extended about two-thirds of the length of the machine, whose total length must have been 150 to 200 feet. One green light was visible when the object first came into sight, but after its courses change to the NE no lights were seen. An object resembling a man was seen in the lower attachment and could be plainly seen moving about. About the time the machine passed over the railroad track the rattle of tin was heard, and Mr. Johnson, in company with Mr. W. J. McGwire, proceeded to the spot, and, after considerable search, found onehalf gallon peach can branded J. TV. Lusk and an empty cigar box ("Airship Spoken," Galveston Daily News, April 22, 1897, p. 4).

The estimated length of 150 to 200 feet is still consistent with previous accounts. Since the airship was approaching from the northwest, the green light was on the starboard, or right, side of the airship.

The airship sightings on April 18, 1897, are sporadic and are clustered around two regions: Dallas and Lovelady. However, placing a bestfit line between the reported sightings results in the graph shown. Were the Pina and the Colada still searching for their missing sister ship?

MONDAY, APRIL 19, 1897

There are seventeen reported airship sightings for the night of April 19, including the first reported Louisiana sighting. The airships seem to expand their search area as they look for their missing sister ship. The Louisiana sighting is of particular interest because the identity of two airship players seems to be confirmed. The Louisiana newspaper article is included with the Texas sightings for the interest we have in the crew. The story continues . . .

SNAPSHOTS

Airships are being seen even by citizens of prohibition towns. [The separation between alcoholics, drunks, and other imbibers and airship observers was important to the credibility of the reports in the mind of many teetotalers in the pre-Prohibition days of 1897. Would we believe the UFO stories of hardcore drug addicts, junkies, drug dealers, social cocaine users, and marijuana smokers today? Probably not, but if a doctor, judge, or senator confessed to alien abduction, we might tend to give the reported incident at least the benefit of the doubt.]

Fancy the disappointment of a man, who seeing an airship fall, flies to the spot and so lifting it up finds it to be a pair of exploded bloomers. [What an entertaining thought!]

The airship mystery of Kankakee seems now to be thoroughly understood. The dark object floating in the air fell down and the hundreds who rushed to see found a pair of huge bloomers.

If the McKinley cabinet is to be increased by the addition of a Secretary of the Atmosphere, some good Kansas man ought to be appointed.

The New Jersey airship was found to be a mosquito with foxfire on his neck.

THE AERIAL FLEET

We know that this is fishing time;
That snakes have come to threaten man;
That dreamers have begun to rhyme;
That Ananias lives again;
For signs and wonders fill the sky;
And airships through the heaven fly
(Dallas Morning News, April 19,1897).

The previous account consists of entertaining airship tales and poetic descriptions of air travel. The newspapers capitalized on the most newsworthy event of the time. The above tidbits are the editor's way of having a little fun with the subject.

A HOME-MADE ONE.

> Plano, Collin Co. Tex., April 18.—The much talked of airship fell in Piano at 8:30 o'clock tonight and almost caused the destruction of Piano's large two-story public school building. It was first observed by Harris Wyatt coming from the southwest, and fell on the south gable of the schoolhouse building. Some parties who saw the big light on the roof of the building alarmed the citizens by shooting off firearms and with the cry "Fire. The School House is on fire." which brought out the whole town and emptied the churches of their congregations within a few minutes, but it all proved to be a dangerous hoax. In the shape of a large "turkey buzzard" with a bail of cotton twine saturated with turpentine tied to one of the bird's legs. The bird had alighted on the roof of the school building and from a distance it looked as if the south end of the roof was on fire, which was viewed by hundreds of persons, who were unable to do anything on account of the extreme height of the building. In a few minutes after the people gathered around the school building the bail of cotton burned itself loose from the bird's leg and rolled off the roof to the ground where the ball of cotton burned brightly for several minutes. The bird flew off the roof as soon as it was relieved of its warm burden. Piano has witnessed all the airships she wants to, and would prefer that they would pass some other way, if they all prove as dangerous as this one did tonight (Dallas Morning News, April 19, 1897, p. 5; Galveston News, April 19, 1897).

This is another entertaining airship tale for the audience's amusement. Faking an airship was not without its hazards. Burning down the school for the sake of a little excitement suggests the reivers did not think their plan out very thoroughly.

> "Say, you people all know Shadbolt, manager of the Driskil, and are acquainted with his reputation for veracity. The fact that he is in the category with George Washington in this line, inclines me to take stock in these airship yams that are at present flooding the country. Shad asserts that while on the roof of the hotel last Monday night [April 19] engaged in taking clothes off the line, he was astonished first by a peculiar shrilling noise, followed immediately by a biff, bang, whiz, and a current of cold air that chilled him to the marrow. Dodging behind a chimney pot, he saw coming towards him a frightfully constructed cigar-shaped balloon, or something of that character. His heart was in his throat for a moment, but swallowing it with an effort, he sang out: 'ship ahoy!' A voice replied: 'Howdy! Is this Austin?' 'You're bloody right,' yelled Shad, whereupon the main guy on the flying monster called out: 'Stand by you lubbers, and let go that freight!' Something struck the roof, and the startled manager says as the thing went out of sight there was a man sitting cross- legged on the quarter deck, working a concertina and grinding out the music of'Me 'art is true to Poll.' In the bundle which smelled of stale fish and a few decayed things of that kind, was a note stating that the ship was en route to China, but would return in October next, by which time the writer hoped the Texas legislature would have passed all the blooming platform demands formulated at Fort Worth."

> "Now Shadbolt will not deny his fondness for potted cheese and a bleeding glass of 'alf and alf', but he says neither of these appetizers had the slightest connection with his experience on the roof. He's got the note, and the brick that came with it, and will take pleasure in showing it to his friends" (From a speech given April 20 by Col. Dink Botts to a group of his friends, Austin Daily Statesman, April 21,1897).

This is another entertaining airship tale for the audience's amusement. This is obviously a fake story.

"THE AIRSHIP"

> The airship that has been mystifying the public for the last month has turned out to be a veritable ship of air, made with timber (possible), propelled by steam (not likely) and controlled by human hands. It has been seen upon the ground while being repaired and alerter has been dropped by it in which its inventors claim that they have solved the problem of transportation in the air and also asserting that they have been voyaging all over the country and that it moves through the air at the rate of 150 miles an hour.

> We suppose the inventors have taken this means of advertising their invention by exciting the curiosity of the public by sailing over cities at night and throwing out a strong flash light. This is, after all, the most feasible solution of the mysterious vessel, and if it is true—as it is highly probable it is, too many people have seen it to leave any further doubt—it will be the crowning mechanical conquest of the century. It seems to be managed with such ease as to give promise of immediate utility and we may conclude that before many years the "airship" will be quite as common a mode of travel as the electric cars [goodforesight). The latter dawned on us quite gradually and we were all prepared to believe in it, but this has been sprung upon us almost in a night, exciting the greatest curiosity, and is destined just as suddenly to become practical.

What tremendous possibility the successful working of the airship opens up to us. It will be an additional extermination of distance and it will draw continents together as the railroad locomotives drew cities together [wonderful foresight]. It will obliviate all the dangers of ocean transportation and laugh at storms. [Well, we have discovered that to be pretty much untrue]. It will ensure safety in penetrating and exploring savage countries. [Yes, they did). It may be the means of discovering the north pole and other continents (very perceptive). It will make war so dreadful that armies will be disbanded (We wish. Airships just made war on civilians and children more socially acceptable.] and ocean navies will be superseded by the commerce of the air. [But, what about the supertanker and cheap gasoline?]. There is no telling the extent of the great possibilities. [Spaceflight and man walking on the moon]. It will be a "nine days" wonder and then settle down into a practical fact (Austin American Statesman, April 19, 1897, p. 4).

The above article is loaded with perception and foresight. The author seems to take some delight in imagining what the world will be like when air transportation becomes a reality. It is interesting to read this article with the hindsight we have and compare it with our attempts to predict the future. No one in 1897 could foresee the great impact of automobiles and especially the petroleum industry on twentieth-century America. While many welcomed the chance to dismount from the bony backs of horses and take up a comfortable but occasionally jarring seat on a horseless carriage, few people really thought the multipurpose horse would become just an expensive family pet within thirty years. Prognosticators beware; who knows what lurks behind the next turn of the history page? Great editorial!

There is a great similarity between our viewpoint of space travel and the 1897 generation's viewpoint of air travel. They knew the problem of "aerial navigation" was going to be solved eventually. They just did not have a good fix on the date on which such a solution was going to spring forth. Today, we seem to be in a similar circumstance, as it is a common belief that we will soon solve the problem of "interplanetary navigation." I wonder if the first twenty years of the twenty-first century will be as fruitful for us as the first twenty years of the twentieth century were in yielding up solutions to the "aerial navigation" problem.

THE AIRSHIP

How the Phenomenon is Explained by different Classes.

NO TROUBLE TO ACCOUNT F'OR IT

Scientific American Announces Four Flying machines About Ready to be Launched.

Everything else is giving the right of way to the airship, and the newspapers having nothing in particular to write about are giving the strange craft all the space it wants.

All the papers quote some of their very best and most veracious citizens as averring that they have seen the ship. Many men in Dallas say they have seen the strange craft.

Sober, matter-of-fact people who can not gainsay the testimony of their neighbors, resort to the handy solution of saying it is a brand of cigarettes, the Nashville exposition, or a new snuff or fresh chewing gum, and that the explanation will be duly forthcoming by the advertisers who are sending up small balloons with lanterns attached.

Others, who are looking for a sign, say that the people, weary of being tied down to a dull materialism for so many generations, are beginning to look away from old forms and traditions that no longer satisfy with a yearning for something better and more suited to their condition [Have we not heard this one before? Seems to be a common lament by certain segments of society in each generation.], and that they are seeing queer things. In fact, they can see whatever they are looking for. The French Academy has recently conducted some experiments which have demonstrated the fact that a person capable of concentrating his mind with great power on an object can throw that object on a sensitized plate where it is photographed. [As I recall, this "parlor trick" was determined to be a hoax.] It is on this principle that many persons can see whatever they wish to see in the embers, in the moon, the clouds or in the clear sky. The faculty of clairvoyance is developed by gazing fixedly into a glass of clear water until pictures and views of the unseen world are reflected from the mind into the water.

Another class of persons of a scientific term say that it is about time for the problem of aerial navigation to be solved, and that they would not be surprised at any time to behold a genuine airship. A recent edition of the Scientific American stated that four different inventors in different parts of the country, each working under his own conception of the principle involved in flying, were about ready to launch their boats. So that each class of thinkers has its own explanation of the real or alleged phenomenon, and if thought is creative as some believe it to be, the concentration of the whole country on the airship ought to create one.

Whether there is or is not a ship wandering through the heavens, with or without rudder and compass, there is very little doubt that innumerable balloons with lights attached are being sent up nightly [to] sail over the country and that these balloons are being sighted and reported for the real or alleged airship.

Since the papers have been printing matters about nocturnal air navigation it is said that work has been resumed on all the flying machines in the country. There is hardly a town of any importance in America but has one or more men who have at one time or another attempted to construct a flying machine. In Dallas alone it is said that work is progressing on four flying machines. Scientists are agreed that the humble bee and a few other insects fly practically without wings, as their flight can in no wise be accounted for by their rudimentary excuse for wings. The humble bee thus adds a vexatious complication to the flying problem.

Many persons poke shallow fun at the phenomenon. They say it is the heirship to the Edwards estate; that the jim-jams have quit serpents and creeping things and shifted to that part of the menagerie represented by the followers of the air.

Whatever else there is about the matter, the whole country is stirred up over the phenomenon.

The Rocky Mountain News, of Denver, prints the following:

Yesterday afternoon people living on Seventeenth Street were startled by the discovery of a tiny paper parachute floating down from the heavens. It was made of tissue paper and thread and attached to it was a folded piece of paper. It reached the street near the Equitable building and was captured by some passerby. The folded paper attached was discovered to be a note, written with a lead pencil in a straggling hand, and read as follows: "This is dropped out in the hope that some one will find the note. We are in an airship, but are lost."

In their extreme agitation, the writers evidently forgot to sign their names. Upon deciphering the note, many people began to search the heavens with their eyes for the runaway airship. A small boy, who was first to see the fluttering parachute, announced that he saw something away up in the air a few minutes before. He thought it was a bird, but it was large and there was a stream of smoke behind it.

> Word was sent to Captain Glassford of the signal service, and if he can discover anything that looks like a runaway airship floating around anywhere in the vicinity, he will dispatch Sergeant Baldwin with the big balloon from the fort in chase and if possible rescue the travelers who are lost.

> The fact that a lost airship was roving over the city caused something of a sensation; and the parachute that brought the news, together with the note it contained, was brought to the news office {Dallas Times Herald, April 19,1897).

The note mentioned in this account is most likely a fake. It was not signed and the supposed airship from whence it came was nowhere to be seen. Only the boy who saw the parachute come down in the afternoon claims to have seen the airship. Denver was a good-sized town in 1897, and if an airship passed over the mile-high city in the bright light of the afternoon, others must have seen it. Yet, no one else made such a claim. I think someone was having a little fun.

THAT MYSTERIOUS AIRSHIP

Philadelphia Inquirer.

For some time past there have occasionally come stories of the appearance of an airship in widely separated parts of the western country. The first announcement of this character came from California, and since then the mysterious object is said to have been seen in Kansas City, Omaha and other cities. The stories were of the most circumstantial character; the truth of them was vouched for by persons of intelligence, whose veracity on other matters coming within their observation would not have been questioned, and all of them were agreed as to the particulars of what they saw and offered independent and corroborative testimony. In some instances it was simply claimed that what appeared to be the brilliant headlight or something in the sky had been seen, while other observers were confident that they saw the vessel and gave a description of its outlines and movement. Of course, there were many people who were incredulous as to the story and made it the subject of good-natured raillery.

The fact that the object was always seen by night was used as an argument against its existence; whereas, if some man has actually succeeded in perfecting an aerial contrivance, the most natural thing for him to do at first would be to test it after darkness had fallen, and secure secrecy for himself. And now comes the story that the directors of the transMississippi exposition to be held at Omaha have received a communication from a man who declares that he has invented an airship and that he will disclose his identity and come to the front if the directors will guarantee him 570,000 square feet of space. He declares that the ship will carry twenty people to a height of from 10,000 to 20,000 feet.

Because an airship such as that which he has described has never been constructed, it would be foolish to state that it never can be. In a story which is now appearing in a magazine the hero, who lived in this city during the revolutionary war, and who is supposed to have written the story years afterward, tells how difficult it was to reach Bryan Mawr from Philadelphia at the time that the army of Washington was in the neighborhood, and then speaks of the ease with which the trip could be made at the time of writing by a swift stage coach. This same man, although compelled to acknowledge that better means of travel had come, would never have believed in express trains, in steam ships and telegraphs. And as we, who know that they have come, are equally skeptical as to the accomplishment of aerial travel. One hundred years ago it would never have been dreamed that the land could be navigated as it is today and yet some people ridiculed the idea that the air could ever be navigated and look upon the idea as the dream of the visionary or the fool.

One by one the forces of nature are now rendering themselves to man what were once looked upon as miracles are now acknowledged to be simply the result of an acquaintance with and a mastery of natural laws, and, therefore, there is nothing that prevents invention and study that should be laughed at. The eyes of the people who claim to have seen an airship may have seen them; the man who claims to have invented it may be a charlatan; but the world will yet, if we may judge from the marvelous progress of science and invention, see a contrivance of this character, while the people who laugh at the thought will acknowledge the simplicity of the vessel and wonder why it was not constructed a century earlier ("The Mysterious Airship," Galveston News, April 19, 1897).

What a great article. The Omaha exposition was important, and during this great event, an airship inventor did pilot an airship over a defined course with some degree of success. However, he was not party to any of the missions plowing through the Texas skies.

SEEN AT BELTON

> Belton, Texas, April 20.—Last night [April 19] quite a crowd of responsible people of this place assembled for the purpose of watching for that much talked of airship, and at 11:30 o'clock it was seen coming from the southwest at an immense velocity. It dipped and but for the fact of bearing just a little to the left of the "New Surprise" show tent, directly in front of Peay's Hotel the tent would have suffered great injury, judging from the velocity of the ship. Missing the tent, it passed by the northwest comer of Peay's Hotel and rising passed from view. The passengers on board this wonder spoke as they passed, but could not be understood on account of the velocity.
> Belton people have been skeptical heretofore, but they now believe.
> The race was so swift that no proper estimate could be formed as to dimensions; however, about ten persons were distinctly seen ("Seen at Belton," Houston Post, April 22,1897; Terrell Times-Star, April 30,1897).

I wonder if the ten persons mentioned in this account included the financial backers of the airship project? It seems likely that any number of crewmen larger than the minimum number required to fly the airship would include the men who paid the bills.

Coming from the southwest implies it was going in a northeast direction.

AIRSHIP SPOKEN

Beltonites Felt the Breath of the Aerial Machine.

Belton, Bell Co., Tex., April 20.—The numerous accounts and reports appearing in the News for some time past regarding the airship have excited the curiosity of the people of this place to such an extent that last night [April 19] quite a number of responsible people of this place "laid for it," and at 11:30 o'clock, to their surprise and astonishment, she passed over Peay's Hotel, dipping low. Had she not passed to the left, the "New Surprise Show Tent," just in front of the hotel, would have been completely demolished. The passengers spoke, but the velocity was so great that no one could understand. The ladies, however, declared they recognized the voice and features of Shrader, the divine healer. From here the ship rose and was lost to view. The people here have been inclined to doubt the veracity of the existence of this aerial freak, but now, without a dissenting opinion, it is an actuality. It seemed to have reversed its former courses, traveling from southwest to northeast at great velocity (This story under the main headline "Airship Spoken" appeared in the Galveston Daily News, April 22,1897, page 4)

AT LONGVIEW

Longview, Texas, April 20,—Last night [April 19] about 9:30, the Post correspondent and family on returning from church saw the socalled airship. A bright light, seemingly about the size of Venus, moved swiftly to the northwest, disappearing beneath the horizon. In a few minutes it reappeared rising nearly to zenith and rapidly transferred the heavens in an easterly direction ("Seen at Belton," Houston Post, April 22,1897; Terrell Times-Star, April 30,1897).

AT GROSEBECK

Grosebeck, Texas, April 20,—Mr. B. F.Johnson saw the mysterious airship last night [April 19], as did several of his neighbors ("Seen at Belton," Houston Post, April 22,1897; Terrell Times-Star, April 30, 1897).

HE SAW THE LIGHT

> Alderman Haynes last night [April 19] informed the Statesman "mystery man" that he saw the strange light referred to in another column, seen by Mr. Cousins. Mr. Haynes says he stepped into the yard and suddenly he was blinded by a flash of light and then he saw a moving light that looked to him as if it were traveling over the capitol. He called Mrs. Haynes and the children, and all watched the strange light as it moved rather slowly in a westerly direction and disappeared (Austin American Statesman, April 20,1897, p. 3).

SURE ENOUGH AIRSHIP

Lighted on East Mountain at Mineral Wells this A.M.

STATEMENT MADE BY THE CREW

Problems of Aerial Navigation Solved. Passing Glimpses of the Strange Visitant Explained

Seeing the airship is becoming quite an industry. It is even being witnessed by the inhabitants of towns that have been "dry" these many years.

The stories told range from the above Ben Adhem style of narrative to fin de siecle romances that suggest the inspiration of a gifted scientific genius a la Ignatius Donely.

The airy visitant continues to hover on unwearied pinions in the blue arch of night, keeping good people out of their beds in the expectant hope that they may catch a glimpse of its patent headlight. It should be observed that the airship is a respecter of the city ordinances, as no accounts are mentioned where it is seen with its "lamp" out. This gentle dig at the local wheel men who scoot frantically about the streets in a lampless condition. Why someone hasn't taken a shot at the "thing" still remains a question. It is strange that some matter of fact scientist not troubled with any scruples hasn't drawn a bead on it like the man in Coleridge's maritime narrative, whose investigations took this practical form.

A number of young men and boys who have been "funny" all their lives have taken advantage of the amount of free advertising given the aerial traveler by sending up toy balloons in order to widen the area of the airship's activity. It also promotes a Christian feeling among those people who, after descanting knowingly upon its midnight beauties, are told by the parties to the hoax that they were only staring at a little balloon lit up by a cheap candle.

The airship is still a popular theme in the city and suburbs, and particularly in the country where the untutored agriculturist instead of manning the plow is sitting up late at nights watching the airship plow the heavens.

Airship parties are quite a fad in Oak Cliff now among the young lady collegians, it is said, ever since a popular educator in that favored suburb looked aloft and beheld the airship with all sails set exchanging winks with the "man in the moon."

But seriously enough, many citizens whose veracity is monumental have gazed at the bird of passage and then confided their impressions of it to the hypnotic editor.

Said Mr. Thomas Work, whose experience with plain drunks and peace disturbances (not airships) in the city court qualifies him to speak with some weight:

"The airship was sighted by my children and a large number of residents on Routh Street last night about 7 o'clock. It was scudding along right merrily with all sails set; seemed to be going in the direction of the hospital. I expect it had a quiet tip that Dr. Armstrong was at his office. Oh, yes; It was an airship all right. There was a filmy red light about the thing peculiarly uncanny and it was going at a great rate of speed."

James Williamson, the well known contractor of West Dallas, told city Judge Curtis Smith this morning just before the regular police court festivities that he'd "seen it."

"Seen what?" said the city judge.

"Why, the airship, to be sure," said Mr. Williamson reproachfully.

"It passed my homelike a house afire about 9 o'clock last night [April 19]. It had a dark, piratical cut and chased through the ether at the rate of about 200 miles an hour. So swiftly did it move that the eye was unable to follow it in its flight."

"Yes; it was no funeral procession, I expect." said Judge Smith absently.

Alf Nussbaumer, B. O Marshall and William Boll, Jr., were hunting on Grapevine prairie nine miles west of Dallas Sunday afternoon when the airship discovered itself to these nimrods. Neither Mr. Marshall nor Mr. Nussbaumer could be found at their usual places of business to-day.

Mr. Boll was seen, however, and asked to describe his sensations, which he did only regretting that Mr. Nussbauer, who was much affected by the sight, was not present to tell about it.

We had just sat down to dinner." said he, "and were meditating upon the number of Easter hats we missed seeing by not going to church. Suddenly casting up our eyes, we beheld a long cylindrical body moving with fearful velocity through a nearly cloudless sky. It's general appearance was white. We could plainly discern two wings, one at each side, which looked like those of a great bird. The contrivance was, I should judge, sixty feet long and there was a wheel behind. Save the wings, which moved with a rapidity that was uncanny, we could discern no signs of life about it. It was going toward the southeast and we watched it till it disappeared.

"Now, this is no joke. We had no drinkables of any kind for dinner and we are all willing to make affidavit that it happened just as I tell you. Mr. Nussbaumer, I understand, is going to commit the impression of it to writing."

Even more circumstantial accounts of the "ship" are given below:

Col. W. C. Wolf, living on Wolf Trail in North Dallas, states that at 7:45 o'clock last night, he, his two sons and about a dozen of his neighbors, saw a bright headlight pass over that quarter of the city with a whirring whizzing noise, and disappear in a northwesterly direction. He says he could see nothing but the light, which appeared to be fully a mile high.

Mr. Jeff Hightower, head man in D. H. Howard's New York store in Mineral Wells is in the city to-day. He says that at 4 o'clock this morning [April 20] the airship landed on East Mountain, and that a number of citizens of the Wells went up and talked to the man and inspected the ship from the outside. They were not permitted to enter the craft. The ship is shaped like a cigar, eighty feet long, with a paddle wheel at each end and on each side. The crew informed the citizens that they had sold the invention to a New York syndicate for big money provided they first made a trip from New York to Liverpool with it, and that before tackling the Atlantic they would make three or four successful trips between New York and San Francisco. They said they were having a lot of trouble holding the craft in a straight course, and their experiments to overcome this trouble were detaining them in the south west. The crew promised the citizens they would return and hover over the town at 10 o'clock to-night, which is the occasion of the opening of the Crazy Well. Mr. Hightower, whose name ought to make him an authority in matters of this kind, says there is no joke or jolly about the ship, that the best people in Mineral Wells saw the craft and conversed with the crew (Dallas Times Herald, April 20, 1897).

THE LATEST AIRSHIP JOKES

Hanging Around Galveston

Tom Moore a young man who draws the thirst-slaking soda from a fountain at Schott's, announced yesterday morning [April 19] that the airship was passing over the city. Charles Schott, night clerk at the store, was on the rear upper gallery.

"I saw a big, white object for a minute," said Mr. Schott last night, 'but I was unable to follow it in its flight, because my vision was obstructed by the buildings. It appeared to be passing above the Tribune building, and when I first saw it the front end was a little beyond the alley, and the rear end almost where the entrance to the stair way is located, so I judge it to be about 75 feet long. It appeared to roll over slowly, and was pretty well up in the air. It was moving south. It was just at 8:30 this morning.

Moore says he could hear a buzzing noise as it passed along.

A boy in Schott's last night said he overheard a party of gentlemen, some of whom he knows by sight, on K and Twenty-first street, say that they saw the airship during the day. Sergeant Jack Pither, they say, called their attention to it, but when asked about it last night, Pither denied having seen any airship ("The Latest Airship Jokes," Galveston News, April 20, 1897).

AIRSHIP SEEN IN BRYAN

The Crowning Marvel of the Nineteenth Century.

SEEN HERE LAST NIGHT.

Three Brave Young Men and What They Saw

Three well known and reliable young men of this city had perhaps the strangest experience last night [April 19] that has come athwar t [sic] the history of any trio of human beings, exclusive of miracles, since the world began. They are none other than Messrs. J. C. Minkert, Dr. Chas. Edge and Dick Jones, three young professional men in whose truth and veracity most any one in the city has the utmost confidence.

As given to an Eagle reporter at a very late hour last night, these young men's experience may be briefly told as follows:

Mr. Minkert was awakened from peaceful slumber sometime after midnight by a bad case of toothache and immediately dressed and sought a dentist. In the utmost distress, he was proceeding to Dr. Edge's dental office, when he met Mr. Jones, returning at a rather late hour from some consultation on legal matters with a brother lawyer. Joining Mr. Minkert, together they sought the dentist. The latter was found and relief soon given the sufferer. And now began the strange experience which was related to the writer by one of the party. Mr. Jones discovered a bright light through the open window, and speaking of it, the attention of the three was directed to a strange object approaching through the heavens, from a southern direction. Watching with breathless surprise and interest, the celestial object was now seen approaching rapidly, while apparently getting lower. Now it was near enough to detect that it was a large body with apparently two lights, one at each end of a long, ship-like object. The light in front was extremely bright and dazzling. Coming approximately within a mile or two of town, the body hovered and apparently swung a great searchlight around and then moved off eastward, so it seemed, and stopped, remaining still for at least ten minutes, while the most brilliant light they ever saw flashed repeatedly in various directions. The observer thinks it was directly over the A&M College. The object was now so far from them that not much could be seen of it except the two lights. Then all at once a fluttering motion was faintly discerned, and the strange apparition began to fly up into the heavens, and move northward. It now began to be more plainly seen. Plainer and plainer it became, until at last almost stopping again, half mile south of town, it showed what its true nature is. A long cigar-shaped body, with many windows and openings through which pale lights streamed forth, with great wings protruding from each side, and an immense fanshaped rear projection. This formidable dragon-looking celestial vision hovered over the city, then presently moved slowly away toward the eastern suburbs. This movement effected the wonderful apparition out of sight of our three nocturnal sightseers, (who looked from a southern window). For many moments, not a word had been spoken, Jones now turned to the others with a white face and eyes as large as saucers, while Dr. Edge caught his breath and said:

"Well, I'll be ...

Minkert said he would too, and a consultation resulted in a quiet march to the other side, for a better view.

Outside, again the aerial monster loomed up, now almost stationary, and slowly descended to earth. Down it went, below the houses and tree tops, and out of sight, except for its lights brightening up the surrounding atmosphere.

One behind another, our young adventurers began a silent march toward the strange visitor. Jones led, the dentist came next with his forceps in hand, while Minkert brought up the rear. Over the hill and out of town they went, and discovered, in the Claude Mitchell pasture, what at first seemed a great ocean vessel sitting on dry land, a hundred miles from deep water—with great wing like sails folded up, an immense tail, a great wing or rudder underneath, but not touching ground, the vessel being supported upon great pillars projecting down from its sides. Streaming from many windows was a pale light, while the great light in front was turned off. Around the cigar-shaped body of the ship extended a deck or platform, and walking about on this were discerned numerous people, while inside and up among the sails, workmen were busy making repairs.

One young man realized they were in the presence of the famous airship, and longed for J. W. Leigh to see it, so he could have a tale to tell sure enough.

The question of drawing near or retreating was discussed.

Dr. Edge remembered that he had left his door open. Jones thought it was time for him to retire, as he seldom keeps late hours, while Minkert feared he would catch cold in his jaw. So they hesitated. But they circled around, and gradually got nearer. Presently, without warning, the searchlight flashed out like lightning, and they were caught. Blinded by its brilliance, they fell over each other into a mud hole, and crawling out found themselves "taken in" by a small squad of foreigners, and dragged up to the monster of the upper regions. They really found no cause for fear, however, and now began to see sights indeed. A man who could talk English was summoned from the cabin and came out to talk and exchange neighborhood news, as it were, and do the honors of the ship.

> They now found that a party of English millionaires and French scientists had built this strange craft and three more like it, and were taking a cruise around the world, having kept the secret of their enterprise for the novelty of the thing. The motive power of the machine was electricity, of course, and the search light was a 20,000 candle power electric light. Taken aboard, they were being shown the sights when Jones asked with considerable anxiety how long they were scheduled to stop in Bryan.
> "We are now ready to move," said the engineer.
> Then a wild scramble for the outside was made by the Bryan delegation, but the aerial navigators were not ready for them to go. Besides inventors and electricians, there were professors of more occult sciences on board. Prof. Sven Boydgollybros was summoned and with a wave of the hand, they were put to sleep. They were told to open their eyes and watch the proceedings. The button was pressed; the fifty thousand horse power engine [impossible in 1897] began to work; the great wings began to stir; the crew of pilots grappled their steering apparatus; the familiar scenes of earth faded from view, one of the boys swallowed a Taylor & Cox drink check as he caught his breath after looking out, the ship was pointing toward the north star and was bidding farewell to earth and things earthly when the professor of hypnosis snapped his fingers, sounding like a gunshot in a graveyard. Then the spell changed, and the boys turned and looked at the crowd. They were sitting by a table in the Kandy Kitchen [Bryan headquarters for airship news] while a party of Bryan amateur hypnotists were laughing at them, and the Flying Dutchman of the skies sailed on (Bryan (Texas) Daily Eagle, April 20,1897, p. 4).

The above account is obviously one of a fake sighting. Seems like everyone was starting to have some fun with the airship news, even hypnotists.

A PHENOMENAL STAR

Texarkana, Bowie County, Tex., April 20.—The belated population of Texarkana were greatly excited last night [April 19] over the appearance in the heavens of a star of magnificent brightness. To a fixed gaze it had the appearance of vacillating in its proportions and some of the lookers-on swore that they could see it move from place to place. The star threw a bright light the color of an arc-electric, and at times it dazzled the sight in like manner. It was a scene beautiful to behold and was admired for hours by many (Dallas Morning News, April 21, 1897, p. 7).

The airships were not known for taking hours to proceed from horizon to horizon. It may be that the above sighting was actually the planet Venus.

INSPECTED THE AIR SHP

Beaumont Man Saw The mystery at Close Range Conversed With The travelers. Says it Is propelled by Four Big Wings, Electricity Being the Power Used

Beaumont , Texas, April 20.—Mr. J. R. Ligon, local agent for the Magnolia brewery of Houston, this afternoon informs the Post correspondent that the airship visited Beaumont Monday night [April 19], and that he not only saw the flying machine, but he had a chance to inspect it from the outside and conversed with one of the men who was traveling in it. "I and my son Charley drove home at 11 o'clock Monday night," said Mr. Ligon, "and were unhitching the horse when we saw lights in the Johnson pasture, a few hundred yards distance. We went there to investigate and discovered four men moving around a large dark object, and when I hailed them they answered and asked if they could get some water. I told them that they could. They came to my house, each bringing two baskets, and after filling them, started to return. I accosted one of the men and he told me his name was Wilson and that he and his companions were traveling in a flying machine. They were returning from a trip out on the gulf and were now headed toward Iowa where the airship was built."

Mr. Ligon says he accompanied the men to the ship, and describes it as being 130 feet long and 20 feet wide. It was propelled by four large wings, two on either side, and steered by propellers attached to the bow and stem, electricity being the power used. The hull of the ship is made of steel and contains apartments into which compressed air is pumped when the ship is in action. The ship carries a water ballast that is pumped to the bow when it is desired to bring the vessel to the earth and to the stern when the course is skyward. Mr. Ligon says the workings of the ship were thus described to him by the man Wilson, who also stated that this ship was only one of five that had been built in a quiet Iowa village (Houston Daily Post, April 21, 1897, p. 7; Bastrop [Louisiana] Advisor, April 24,1897, p. 6).

The airship crew member states that their ship is one of five built. Incredible as one successful flying machine in 1897 seems, news of five is just astounding. Could five have actually been built? We will explore the possibility in the final chapters.

So far, this account and several others are the only evidence that any airships were built in a "quite Iowa village." Was Mr. Wilson lying about the origins of the airships in the attempt to thwart possible claim jumpers? Perhaps Mr. Wilson did build his airship in a quiet Iowa village. To learn more about this Iowa village, you must read on.

> Rice, Texas, April 19.—This morning [April 19] at 7:00 o'clock what is supposed to be the "airship" touring in the South was seen at this place, moving in an easterly direction at a very rapid rate. Several citizens of this place viewed it with perplexed curiosity.
> It was only in sight a few moments and disappeared as quickly as it came ("That Airship," Houston Post, April 22, 1897).

WAS ABOARD AN AIRSHIP

THE FIRST DESCRIPTION OF THE MODERN INVENTION TO BE PUBLISHED SAN FRANCISCO—New York

Travel to be Revolutionized Within Two Years Speed at 1,000 Miles In Eight Hours.

Richmond, Fort Bend Co., Tex. May 7.—To The News : The tragic death by the flood near Grenada, Miss., last Tuesday of the writer of the following letter has induced its recipient to allow The News to publish it. The gentleman to whom it was written is Dr. D. H. Tucker, physician at the state farm in this county, and is a man of unimpeachable character and, unquestioned veracity, and he pronounces the author of the letter a man of like reputation. He and the doctor were college mates and he was a young man of scientific turn of mind and had devoted considerable time to the study of physics and similar branches, and had at one time been engaged as draughtsman on the Panama Canal. Here is the letter:

Lake Charles, La., April 20,1897.—Dr. D. H. Tucker, Harlem, Tex. —My Dear Friend: Since receiving your last letter, which reached me at Mobile, I have had a most wonderful experience. This is a day and generation of wonders. It is said that there is nothing new under the sun. I doubt this statement and am ready to affirm that Noah's ark was an object of small interest to his antedeluviah conferees compared to the wonderful ship I have just had the pleasure of seeing.

I have known that for years the scientific world has been on the qui vive for the perfection of the airship ; that experiments were in progress, but that nothing satisfactory could be obtained of the practical working of any of the machines, even from the ever alert and truthful Scientific American. But the thing is a fact! I assure you of this, for I have seen the airship, have spoken to the people on board, have been on board of her, and was enabled to make a sketch of her, which I send you. Of course, many of the details are necessarily lacking in it and I have had to depend more or less as to measurements to my memory, but rough as it is, it is comparatively accurate. But to begin at the beginning.

Yesterday about noon [April 19], while driving across country in a leisurely trot my eye encounter ed almost directly ahead a large object at a high elevation. It was so unlike anything I had ever seen that my gaze was instantly riveted upon it. It approached at a very rapid rate, and from the apparent size of a flour barrel, it rapidly developed into a ponderous affair, the sight of which was startling to say the least of it. When about one-half mile from me it emitted an unearthly whistle, which terrified my horses so that I was forced to jump to their heads.

While struggling with them I was thrown down and they broke and ran. When I rose, there, about 100 feet from me was a huge something, settling rapidly, but easily to the ground, and a man was preparing to descend a rope ladder. The sight at first was so startling and the struggle with my team had so unnerved me that it was several seconds before I could even estimate the size or distance the strange affair. As soon as I recovered my sense I instantly realized that it was the much talked of airship, which I, in common with nearly every one else, had set down as the creation of fancy and imagination.

As soon as the vessel's rope about reached the ground the man came down the ladder, followed by another, both of whom came up to where I was standing and began to inquire if I were hurt and to apologize for the damage they had caused. I was so dazed that I could hardly speak at first, but I lost all interest in my team and assured them that I was not hurt, and then began to ask them questions. It was decidedly gratifying to find that they were plain, every-day Americans like myself, and they were gentlemanly. They invited me to inspect their ship, as if it were an ordinary affair, and you can rest assured I did not wait for a second invitation, but climbed the ladder or gangway or whatever else it is called, that hung over the side.

Now, let me assure you that I am not drawing on my imagination, but I am giving you facts, as strange as they may seem, and I as write I read in a late Galveston News that others have seen this ship, but always in the night time and in so many different places that it seems a piece of fiction, whereas I saw it in the broad, open light of day and spent over an hour talking with the inventor and owner.

As I reached the deck I was introduced to a Mr. Walters, who held the position of engineer. The two men who met me on the ground were Mr. Wilson, the owner, and Mr. Scott Warren, his friend. They also had a Mexican or Spaniard, who did the cooking, I suppose. We went into what might be termed the cabin, where we sat down a few minutes. This was a room probably 14 feet long by 8 feet wide. It was fitted up very prettily, something on the order of a smoking room on a Pullman sleeper. It had three reclining chairs screwed to the floor and cushioned seats on the sides and ends. Around a post in the center was a table with several field glasses and books in a bracket above it.

There were a number of incandescent lamps about the walls and hanging from the ceiling, and I immediately concluded that the motive power of the ship was electricity and so expressed myself to Mr. Wilson. He said this was not the case, but that it was propelled and sustained by a gas which had the property of great compressibility under a slight pressure and a correspondingly great power of expansion. That he had invented a machine or rather engine that once started worked automatically and that one had only to attend to the governor which regulated the speed. I was not prepared wholly to accept this explanation and intimated as much in my expression of astonishment, but I was convinced of it when he showed me the apparatus for generating the gas and the engine for utilizing it.

Not being a practical mechanic I can not enter into details of this engine's construction, but this much I was able to understand: That there was a receiver made of aluminum (and of this metal the engine and everything connected with the ship so far as I saw was constructed), from which pipes passed to what appeared to me to be a square box, at each end of which was a cylinder with an exhaust chamber, in which worked a piston attached to a very singularly constructed driving wheel like the sprocket of a bicycle, except that there were four wheels, one within the other, and these Mr. Wilson called the accumulators. There were two sets of such wheels with a combined velocity surpassing anything heretofore constructed. By the peculiar arrangement of the wheel within a wheel the balance of the centripetal and centrifugal forces was preserved in the presence of 65,000 revolutions a minute; that is, the velocity of revolutions in these wheels would equal 65,000 revolutions of an ordinary wheel ten feet in diameter in one minute if such a thing were possible.

My mouth, as well as my eyes, opened wide at this statement, but I presume the truth was told. I asked what the highest attainable rate of speed might be. Mr. Wilson said that he did not know exactly, but that he had covered something over 1000 miles in eight hours and the indicator or "speed dial," as he called it, only registered 72 per cent of what he believed was the maximum speed of the ship. Though he admitted that the dial might not be accurate and the possible speed might be more or less,

I was naturally curious to know by what means he generated sufficient gas to answer the purpose of a long voyage, but he smiled and said, "quite a number of people would like to know the same thing probably. "This is his secret and to test the practicality of which he is now traveling back and forth. He said that he had discovered it two years ago after years of experimenting, and I judged from remarks dropped occasionally that his companion, Mr. Warren, had furnished the capital for the experiment. Mr. Wilson said, however, that the source of his gas supply was the air which is passed through a condenser containing certain chemicals which posses the function of eliminating therefrom a gas known only to him. He did not know the chemical formula, he said, or whether it was simple or compound. All the machinery seemed very simple and did not occupy a greater space than 6 feet in length by 4 feet in width.

To elevate or depress the ship while flying through the air a small wheel at the stern of the boat is operated. This wheel was something like that in a ship's pilot house, but instead of having spokes there was an arrangement of magnets connected with wires to storage batteries. By passing the current over the wire of the wheel the operator was able to overcome gravity thus elevating the ship. By passing the current in the opposite direction and under the wire the weight of the ship was increased and could sink like a shot to the earth, and by passing the currents in opposite directions at the same time the vessel would remain horizontal at any distance from the earth. What I thought was the anchor was simply the ladder which hung over the side.

While I was on board it had a gentle swaying motion which I imagine if much greater would produce seasickness. At the time we were not more than ten feet above the ground. The interior arrangement of the vessel is very neat and comfortable thought not expensively luxurious. The kitchen is a very small cubby almost identically like that of a buffet car. The berths are narrow but comfortable looking.

To attempt to describe the ship in detail would be futile, as the whole thing was so suddenly sprung upon me that I was dazed. Mr. Wilson told me that currents of wind had little effect upon them, as by pressing a button at the wheel he could rise above or below antagonistic wind or storms. He said that he had never been higher than 2,000feet, as it affected the crew disagreeably, but that, as he had only been experimenting with his ship for about two weeks he did not yet know which would be the most desirable or comfortable height at which to travel.

He showed me the mechanical means by which the ship was propelled. At one end was a propeller (working on a shaft connected with the sprocket wheels) such as those on a tug boat, except that the blades of this ship's propeller were enormous, being ten feet in length. What I thought were sails were canvas wings used in steering but Mr. Wilson stated that he was at work on a contrivance that would obviate the necessity of using sails. The length of the ship was 75 feet by 25 feet.

Mr. Wilson said that the pantry was easily supplied with provisions at any time as he had only to drop down near a town and make his purchases. As to the cost of the concern, I could not ascertain as neither man seemed inclined to talk about that part of it, but Mr. Warren said that it was low enough to warrant the building three of them as experiments. Each one was essentially different in some of the details and comparisons were being made as to the relative merits of each. They refused to state what point they started from or to give any information concerning their business, except as I have stated. They had a number of different newspapers containing accounts of the ship and they referred to them laughingly. Some of them, Mr. Warren said, were correct, but many of them were untrue.

On account of the pleasanter climate most of their journeys had been through Texas and Mexico. They did not know where the other ships were, but supposed they were in Mexico or Lower California and Arizona. They laughed heartily over some of the accounts of their being seen at so many different places at the same time, and gave as a reason for not alighting at or near a city that they did not want to be subjected to the annoyances, and I inferred that they had not yet secured all of their patents. As a reason for traveling almost entirely by night Mr. Wilson stated that it was because they had not yet become accustomed to being in such dizzy heights, and they feared to see the distance below them. They are not aeronauts and do not claim to posses the nerves or coolness of that class of people.

I learned that Mr. Wilson (though I doubt if that is his correct name) formerly lived in Fort Worth, but I do not remember to have ever seen him. He is apparently a young man and has the typical face of a genius or an inventor. He said that inside two years their method of locomotion would be in general use throughout the world.

These ships, he said, had been built according to plans at different places and had been put together at Mr. Warren's place, but he did not say where that was. At night a small but powerful search light was used to flash ahead or below. It was mounted on the forward deck, and near it was the air whistle which frightened my horses. This latter arrangement had just been gotten in working order and this was its first trial, and I must say it is the most diabolical arrangement I ever heard or saw.

The inventor said that as soon as he could demonstrate satisfactorily the practicability of economically and safely operating his ships he and some capitalists would construct a line of ships to be operated between New York and San Francisco and other points, and that it would not take long for the people to overcome their natural timidity in trusting their lives in such crafts. So far they had met with but one slight accident [the Kalamazoo, Michigan, explosion?], and that was to one of the sails or steering apparatus shortly after setting out on their journey. It amounted to very little, however, and only made it difficult to steer properly.

> They offered to take me up to an elevation so that I could see if my team was in sight, but I respectfully but firmly declined and told them goodbye, after promising that I would not make my observations immediately public. As soon as I reach Memphis, however, I shall write my experience up for the press, and I think I can set at rest all the mooted question as to the existence of a real airship. I can say positively and emphatically that there is at least one, and it is a real practical, tangible reality, and though in time to come I will no doubt see much of them I can never again be effected as I was yesterday noon.
> I have told several people here of my experience, but as they treat it as a Munchausenism I have not made any particular effort to convince them of its truth, but I assure you that every word I have written is absolutely correct.
> One week after writing the above the author was drowned while attempting to save some livestock near Grenada, Miss., and Dr. Tucker has given me permission to use the letter for The News. With a few trifling corrections in the language it is given as it was written. Geo. Dunlop (Dallas Morning News, May 16, 1897)

See chapter 22 for an account of the Michigan explosion.

This is a remarkable account of a close encounter between a local person and the airship and its occupants. It has a great ring of truth to it and appears in all respects to be legitimate. It is perhaps the best description of the airship we have. Although I think the crew made a few false claims (to lead the unwary astray and protect their invention), the account in general is very accurate. Note the claim that three airships were manufactured, with two differing lengths of about 150 feet long and about 75 feet long.

The crew of this airship apparently did not know where the other two airships are. So, the Aurora crash, which occurred on the morning of April 17, was still unknown to them. Since newspapers did not print anything about the Aurora crash until April 19, their statement concerning the number of airships and their whereabouts is reasonable.

This supposition is in agreement with the flight paths of the two vessels that appeared to be searching for something on the night of April 17. Also, the statement that the other two ships might be in Arizona or southern California gives added weight to the sightings that occurred in Childress and El Paso, as the airships apparently were far ranging—with the Southwestern region of the country well within their territory.

TUESDAY, APRIL 20, 1897

There were four reported sightings on the night of April 20. One may wonder why there were so few Texas sightings on this particular night. Airships were seen in Louisiana and Colorado on this same night, so maybe those in the airship fleet found themselves widely dispersed as they looked for their missing sister ship. And the story continues . . .

THE HEAVENLY MYSTERY

Possible soldiers From War-Like Mars Out On A Terrestrial Reconnoiter

THE SHIP CARRIES COLORED LIGHTS

An Astronomical Theory Anent the Mysterious Stranger as Seen in Chicago— The Celestial Craft the Talk of the Town.

The great and mysterious aerial vessel that has thrown north Texas and many parts of the country into a state of excitement and commotion, was first seen sailing over Kansas, but the stories about it did not excite much attention.

Since then, however, the mysterious stranger has been seen in many parts of the country, and Friday night last refutable citizens in scores of Texas towns had a view of the aerial vehicle.

It has traveled over Illinois, Indiania, Iowa, Wisconsin, Arkansas, Louisiana and other states, and everywhere has excited greater curiosity and in some places provoked consternation.

On Friday night, April 9, the strange light skirted over the northern border of Chicago and could be seen, according to the numerous reports of residents in that neighborhood. A great crowd gathered at the corner of Milwaukee and Oakley avenues and gazed at the object, trying to figure out to their satisfaction what it might be. It was an "airship" for lack of a better name to designate it by, but most were skeptical about the identity of the "manifestation." It was said the object looked very much like a balloon but the "red light" was plainly discernable. Many of the people mounted the roofs in the neighborhood and all the field glasses in the vicinity were called into play. Among those who reported seeing the lights were Max Christianson, 1552 Milwaukee Avenue; Joseph Starveitch, 1480 Milwaukee Avenue; George Nicholson, 1480 Milwaukee Avenue; L. Wickert, clerk in Keats Drug Store, 1480 Milwaukee Avenue.

It passed over Chicago, going eastward, and disappeared about 12:45. It carried a strange green light, which was seen by thousands of people.

Professor G. W. Hough of Dearborn observatory, Northwestern University, took an interest in the "airship rumors"and advanced the opinion that the strange light was caused by the effect of the atmosphere on the star Alpha Orionus, "which is of the first magnitude and is in the constellation Orion. It rises early in the evening and its course across the heavens is about the same as that of the moon. In Chicago it is first visible about 7 o'clock this time of the year. It reaches the zenith he says, about the time when the mysterious phenomenon described as an "airship" was seen that night. The professor says the star is unusually bright in a clear atmosphere and appears to be close to the earth. The star gradually disappears during the evening and as it grows dimmer the defect of the atmosphere causes it apparently to change color.

On the same night that thousands of people in Chicago saw the "airship," red, white, and green lights high in the heavens warned the citizens of Evanston that the Kansas airship was sailing over that suburb. The lights were first observed by Robert Lowen, a jewelry clerk, living at 1926 Sherman Avenue. It was a few minutes after 8 o'clock, and hundreds of Evanston people saw the light.

On the same night at Lake Mills, Wis. at 9 o'clock, it was seen by many people. It was visible about ten minutes and then disappeared behind some trees.

At Wausau, Wis., on the same night, what was supposed to be an airship was seen passing over that city about 10:00 o'clock. Lights could be distinguished from a dark object far up in the heavens, which had the appearance of being shaped like an egg. It was viewed there by at least fifty persons.

> On the same night a large number of people in Solon Is., saw the mysterious visitor, and on the same night operators of the Western Union Telegraph company and others. It appeared to be about 500 feet above the ground. The outlines were distinctly visible against the sky. The ship gave out two bright lights of an electric glow.

> At Mount Carroll, hundreds of people, about 8:30 o'clock saw the strange visitor. It came from the northeast, and when opposite Carroll changed its course and went due west at a most terrific speed. It appeared to be oblong in shape and carried a red light. In length it appeared to be about 10 feet long and some two or three feet high. Many people saw it in various parts of the city ("The Heavenly Mystery," Austin American Statesman, April 20, 1897, p. 3).

This account may be the genesis of the doubting "leading astronomers" mentioned in a previous article. Oblong shapes, bright lights, colored lights, terrific speeds, and changing courses do not sound like stationary stars in the firmament. Nor does this sound like meteors, comets, or any other naturally occurring cosmic event. Sounds just like an airship, such as might be seen today on final approach to a large metropolitan airport.

SOMETHING MORE ABOUT AIRSHIP

Engineer John Smith has returned from Yoakum

A Statesman reporter has had a talk with him, and he referred to the airship, about which he has dreamed some, but not seen. Mr. Smith has been down on the Rio Grande, and he says at almost every Mexican house you see a white cross. It is either on top of the house, on the door, or somewhere about it. "A priest went through that part of the country some time ago," said Mr. Smith, "and he told the Mexicans that the time was at hand for the devil to appear as some great monster, and that the only protection against him was a white cross, and promptly the cross went up." Mr. Smith said he had no confidence in the airship business, but it was seen, all the same, in Louisiana, Tuesday night [April 20], at Natchitoches.

The newspaper account says about 1:30 that night, as a gay crowd were returning from a reception given by Company I at the Armory Hall, they were treated to a strange sight, coming from the western heavens. That spectacle consisted of a massive airship, the first story being of balloon shape, and the under car being of conical or cigar form.

> When first seen it seemed but a faintly animated spark, which, as it came nearer, gradually grew brighter. After a few moments its entire form was clearly perceptible, and developed a structure of strange proportions. It seems to have been illuminated with a fluctuating light, which ranged from brilliancy to semi-darkness. Its destination appeared to be northerly, and it gave indications, from its courses, of coming from Texas. It was evidentially a machine of unique invention, as its movement was of an undulatory character and bore striking resemblance to the movement of some huge bird. It was visible, though about 1,000 feet high, nearly half an hour, and was a rare curiosity to those who had the good fortune to witness the phenomenon.

> The remarkable fact in connection with its visitation was that, as its course neared the city, the light that illuminated it became suddenly low, and did not again rise until the city was left in the darkness (Austin American Statesman, April 23, 1897, p. 3).

In a previous account, the pilot states they are having trouble keeping the ship in level flight, which may account for the undulatory motion observed. But, recall previous accounts where the observer stated the wings flapped to give motive power. Did at least one airship propel itself forward with a bit of wing-flapping? The issue is explored in the latter chapters.

AN OPERATOR SAW IT.

> Sabinal, Uvalde Co., Tex., April 20.—The famous airship which has been putting in appearances in various parts of the country was seen directly over this place at 2 o'clock last night [April 20] by Charles McGar, night operator of the Southern Pacific company. Mr. McGar is a highly responsible gentleman and no one doubts his statement of the matter. He says that the ship was not more than 300 feet above the earth and traveling in a westerly direction. His description of the nocturnal flyer tallies with the one in the [Dallas Morning] News, save that its bottom much resembles the keel of a steam boat. Its passage through the air was accompanied by a strange whirring sound, not unlike the buzzing of an electric battery (Galveston Daily News, April 24, 1897, p. 8).

THE AIRSHIP IN WEST TEXAS LANDED IN THE TOWN OF UVALDE, SHERIFF BAYLOR INTERVIEWED THE MEN

IT STARTED FROM GOSHEN, NEW YORK AND IS ON A TRIAL TRIP NAVIGATOR WILSON LEFT A MESSAGE FOR HIS FRIEND AKERS

Uvalde, Tex., April 22.—That Uvalde has been visited by the famous airship that has created so much excitement in Texas the past week or more, there is no room to doubt. The airship was sighted by Sheriff H. W. Baylor about 10 o'clock Tuesday evening [April 20]. Mr. Baylor's attention was first attracted by a bright light and the sound of strange voices in the alley back of his residence. He went out to investigate and was surprised to find there the airship and crew of three men. They stated they were on a trial run and did not wish their presence known to the people of the town. One of the men, who gave his name as Wilson, and place of residence as Goshen, N.Y., inquired for Captain C. C. Akers, former sheriff of Zavalla County, who he understood lived in this section. He said he had met Captain Akers in Fort Worth in 1877 and liked him very much, and would be much pleased to meet him again. When told that Captain Akers was at Eagle Pass in the custom service, but often visited this place, he asked to be remembered to the captain on the occasion of his next visit.

After procuring water at the hydrant in Mr. Baylor's yard, the men boarded the ship, its great wings and fins were set in motion and it sped away northward in the direction of San Angelo.

Mr. Baylor is thoroughly reliable and his statement is undoubtedly true. His description of the ship does not differ materially from that given by Mr. J. R. Ligon of Beaumont and the gentlemen who saw it at Greenville.

County Clerk Henry J. Bowles also claims to have seen the airship as it passed up Getty Street north of the Baylor residence ("The Airship in West Texas," Galveston Daily News, April 24,1897, p. 3).

If all these accounts are a great hoax perpetuated by the newspapers, railroads, telegraphers, or any other entity, it seems unlikely they would be able to persuade a sheriff to lie for the sake of selling a few papers or having some fun. It seems much more reasonable to believe Sheriff Baylor did meet the airship crew members.

Sheriff Baylor's account offers considerable new and important information about the airship and its inventor. We now have a name, Wilson, and another place, Goshen, New York, associated with the creation of an airship. The airships' origins are becoming less of a mystery. The connection between Wilson, Goshen, and other airship crew members will interest us later. It is obvious there were at least two airships about the night of April 20.

THE AIRSHIP

One Man Saw It In New Orleans Last Night

At 12:30 o'clock this morning Camp street in the vicinity of the newspaper's office was roused by an unearthly yell of "There it is!" and as quick as a flash the man who saw it disappeared up a stairway, and the racket as he jumped four steps at a time could be heard a block away. He had seen the airship, so he told his colleagues on the papers, and instantly every window in both offices was filled by the newspaper men and printers, all searching the heavens for the wonder, while the fortunate young man who saw it tried to describe it. He seemed very much excited, but he managed to say that he saw it going in a northwesterly direction, and it was about fifty or sixty feet long. It had a powerful searchlight which played around. As he described what he had seen everybody craned their necks and looked and looked, but they looked in vain, for there was nothing to be seen but the blue ether of night dotted here and there with a twinkling star, which some startled their companion by saying it was the searchlight of the aerial wonder. As the moments flew by, and nobody saw anything which could by any possibility be distorted into an airship, the laugh began to grow on the man who said he saw it. He denied the soft impeachments which were cast at his veracity by his co-workers, but it was hard to convince them. His general reputation for truth and veracity is such however, that his friends cannot help but believe that he saw something and as the airship was seen in the vicinity of Natchitoches yesterday, it is not unlikely that it may have come in this direction, the navigators bent on a little fun at the expense of the people of New Orleans.

> A young man connected with the Picayune claimed to have seen the airship here on April 1, but all he saw was the searchlight, as it was dark at the time. It was generally treated as an April fool joke, but the subsequent excitement caused by the alleged appearance of the strange craft in other cities leads to the belief that there may be some truth in it.

> The two supposed navigators of the airship, Dolbear and Tillman, as they gave their name to the people of Stephenville, Tex., were supposed to have been in the city last night. Their names were registered at one of the hotels, but it was in all likelihood a hoax, as cards sent to their room failed to get any response {New Orleans Daily Picayune, April 21, 1897, p. 9).

The reason this sighting is so important is the proximity of two individuals identified in the April 17 Stephenville, Texas, sighting ("The Great Aerial Wanderer," chapter 7). This account claims Tillman and Dolbear were registered in a New Orleans hotel on April 20. Unfortunately, the name of the hotel is not specified in the article. The account spells Dolbear's name correctly, not "Dolbar," as it is spelled in the Stephenville article. The reporter says, "their names were registered at the hotel." The fact that the newspaperman reported his name correctly implies Dolbear really was registered in the hotel. Else, the reporter most likely would have used the spelling in the Stephenville article (Dolbar). Also, if someone was playing a hoax, it seems reasonable that the name in the hotel register would have been spelled the same as it was in the Stephenville account. However, attempts by interested parties (newspaper reporters) to contact the two men at the hotel were fruitless. But, if Tillman and Dolbear were seeking to avoid publicity, they certainly would not have entertained reporters in their rooms.

Since the airship was spotted over Lake Charles at noon on April 19 and in Natchitoches (see the following account), we can guess that Tillman and Dolbear stopped in New Orleans for an evening of rest and relaxation then left in the wee hours of the twentieth. One can easily imagine the two men enjoying a luxurious meal and bath after days of eating sandwiches and sweating in the close, hot quarters of the small airship. This seems the most likely scenario because the Lake Charles sighting was the first airship sighting in Louisiana and the Natchitoches sighting was after the New Orleans sighting.

THE FLYING MACHINE SEEN BY THE PEOPLE OF NATCHITOCHES

> Natchitoches, La. April 20 - Last night at about 1:30 o'clock as a gay crowd was returning from a reception given by Company I at the Armory Hall, they were treated to a strange sight, coming from the western heavens. That spectacle consisted of a massive airship, the first story being of balloon shape, and the under car of conical or cigar form. When first seen it appeared but a fairly animated spark, which, as it came nearer, gradually grew brighter. After a few moments its entire form was clearly perceptible, and developed a structure of strange proportions. It seemed to have been illuminated with a fluctuating light, which ranged from brilliancy to semi-darkness. Its destination appeared to be northerly, and it gave indications, from its course, as coming from Texas. It was evidently a machine of unique invention, as its movement was of an undulatory character, and bore a striking resemblance, to the movement of some huge bird. It was visible, though about a thousand feet high, for nearly half an hour, and was a rare curiosity to those who had the good fortune to witness the phenomenon. The remarkable fact in connection with its visitation was that, as its course neared the city, the light that illuminated it became suddenly low, and did not again rise until the city was left in the darkness {New Orleans Daily Picayune, April 21,1897, p. 6).

It is interesting to note that the reporter believed the airship came from Texas. According to the account, the airship came from the "western heavens," a direction that indicates the airship might have come from Texas. A more logical explanation is the airship came from New Orleans (see the previous account) and turned toward the east as it approached Natchitoches. The New Orleans account reports the airship left the city headed northwest. Natchitoches is northwest of New Orleans. If the airship navigator intended to pass over Natchitoches, he very well could have missed the intended target to the west, requiring an eastern course correction as he approached the town. Keep in mind "visual flight rules" were the only flight rules of the day. In the dense eastern pine forest, communities were not easily visible from the air at night during the period of gas streetlights.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 21, 1897

Continuing the pattern of the past two nights, the night of April 21 features few sightings. The few sightings reported are confined to the far-eastern and northern portions of Texas, implying two airships are roaming the state this night. Let us continue . . .

WHAT AN EDITOR SAW.

> Eden, Jackson Co., Tex., April 23.- Frank Dickson, editor of the Progress comes to the front and avows without qualification that he saw two airships pass over the southern part of the town night before last [April 21]. The distant rumbling first attracted his attention, but he thought that it was possibly the noise from a steamer navigating the Navidad River, but looking up he soon discovered the two monsters poised in the air, about 200 yards apart, communicating with each other by means of red and green lights. The outlines of the aerial navigators, says Dickson, were substantially the same as heretofore described in the News. He says: All this transpired in the space of five minutes, and when they started off one went north and the other south, and were out of sight before I could recover my presence of mind and call my nearest neighbor, Colonel O. Rigg, to witness the strange apparition ("The Airship in West Texas," Galveston Daily News, April 24,1897, p. 3).

We have an eyewitness who saw two airships communicating with each other with red and green lights. How can anyone say the observer must have mistaken the scene for a couple of twinkling stars? This is pretty solid evidence of the three-airship hypothesis presented earlier. Two are present near Eden, perhaps becoming desperate in the search to find their missing sister ship while she lies crumpled and burned in Judge Proctor's Aurora pasture.

THURSDAY, APRIL 22, 1897

There are seven reported sightings for April 22 and three for early the following morning. The sightings are closer together than those of the previous three nights, implying that the two airships ranging over the state are in close communication with each other. The story continues ...

SAW THE AIRSHIP

A Brenhamite Describes His Experience With the Aerial Bird.

Brenham, Tex., April 22.—The airship passed over Brenham about 4 o'clock [April 22] going south just as the cook started the fire in the galley and began preparing the morning meal for its passengers. [The writer of this article does not really know if the airship cook was busy or not. He is alluding to the time of the morning the airship was observed.] Among those who saw it here was Mr. John R. Pennington.

He says it was pretty high and he could not clearly distinguish all of its features, but it was like several of the published descriptions. He heard a roaring sound like the approach of a cyclone or a hundred buzzards sailing with set wings and looking up he saw the lights and hulk of the ship and heard a noise on board like the rattling of glassware.

He was out at his horse lot and hastened to the house to awaken the family that they might see the ship, but before they could be awakened and get to the front gallery it had vanished in the distance, and this was not surprising considering the apparent speed at which it was sailing.

There are people here that could tell airship stories all day and the public would scarcely pause to hear them, much less to give the story more than a passing thought, but Mr. John Pennington is a man of unquestioned and unquestionable integrity and not in the habit of talking to hear himself talk (Galveston Daily News, April 24, 1897, p. 8).

AT CONROE

Conroe, Montgomery Co., Tex., April 23.—Our little city all agog today over the report of a most remarkable incident that occurred last night at the hotel.

Prof. G. L. Witherspoon, proprietor of that hostelry, Major Dan D. Donahue, auditor of the Texas, Louisiana and Eastern Railroad, Colonel A. H. Traylor, tax collector, and John Wahrengerger, merchant, were engaged until 1 o'clock in a social game of domino's, when they were disturbed by a call from three strangers who said they were from San Francisco, Cal. They were most reliable gentlemen and made no hesitancy in stating they were traveling in an airship from San Francisco en route to Cuba, via El Paso, Conroe and New Orleans.

They had left the ship at Williams ranch near town and walked in to get supper by way of a change.

Major Donahue says that he feels like he has interviewed natives of the moon, as heretofore he has scoffed at the idea of an airship, and he and his friends on last night gracefully declined an invitation to inspect the wonderful aerial traveling machine, but when less than an hour after his midnight visitors had taken their leave, he saw the ship rise majestically from the earth, illuminated by brilliant electric lights, and plow its way through space, his skepticism vanished, and the strange reality of an airship was stamped on his senses and vision.

Major Donahue is one of the most popular citizens and in the main a quiet and most unassuming gentleman, and his statements, especially when corroborated by the evidence of such gentlemen as Messrs. Witherspoon, Traylor and Wahrengerger, are accepted as gospel truth. They say that the ship must have been thirty feet wide and50feet long. They watched it until it looked like a bright star just above the earths horizon, and the major declares he was sober ("The Airship in West Texas," Galveston Daily News, April 24,1897, p. 3).

The airship's length is consistently given as 75 or 150 to 200 feet in previous accounts. This observer now places the length at 50 feet. Is he wrong or is there some other explanation? I suspect this is the 75-foot ship the observer saw, and he underestimated the length due to the darkness of night and the distance between himself and the airship. However, there is another explanation, which is explored later.

Recall in the "McKnight's Airship" account in chapter 3, "A man named McKnight has been working on an airship at U. S. Marshal Williams' ranch for some time ..." Conroe, Texas, is located near the site of the Texas state prison system at Huntsville, Texas. It is possible that the Williams ranch referred to in this account is owned by the same U.S. Marshal Williams identified in the "McKnight's Airship" account. The Marshal Williams identified in that account also owned a ranch near Paris, Texas. Marshal Williams was U.S Marshal for the Eastern District of Texas. The eastern district encompassed Houston and points further west and north, including Conroe and Huntsville. The eastern district extended north to the Red River, east to the Arkansas and Louisiana borders, and west to Paris, Texas. In 1897 there was no federal prison system. There was one federal prison used almost exclusively for military offenders at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas. Most federal prisoners were held in state penitentiaries. As Huntsville was the site of the state prison system, and Houston was the site of the largest city in his district, it is likely that U.S. Marshal Williams spent a considerable amount of time in the Huntsville-Houston area. It is reasonable to think Williams owned property near his primary place of employment. We will investigate this U.S. Marshal Williams and his connection to airships in chapter 20.

In previous accounts Iowa was identified as the location where five airships were built and Goshen, New York, was identified as the origin of a fellow named Wilson who was crewing an airship. Now, California is identified in this account as the origin of the three-member crew and, by implication, the origin of the airship. To a casual reader, such seemingly differing accounts smack of a hoax. However, we are not casual readers but are attempting at a penetrating analysis of the totality of the stories. The apparent discrepancies in the origins of the airships are explained in the final chapters.

THE AERIAL VISITOR AT FLATONIA

Flatonia, Fayette Co., Tex., April 23.- The airship has been seen in this vicinity. Albert Mach, a reputable Bohemian farmer living about three miles south of Flatonia, saw it last night [April 22] about 10 o'clock. Mach had never heard or read of airships , therefore his statement may be considered reliable. He says the ship passed almost directly over him and was about 100 feet above the earth. It was going in a southeasterly direction and he could plainly distinguish a sound like the rapid whirring of wings. [Rather than wings, this could have been the sound of fan blades spinning around] He saw different colored lights flashingfrom the machine (the red and green signaling lights and perhaps the white sparks from the electrical motors] and as it passed from view it cast a bright striate of light from the bow of the ship in a slanting direction toward the town.

Mach was very frightened and ran in the house to call his wife but before she reached him the ship had disappeared from view.

The airship has been looked upon as a hoax here by nearly everybody but renewed interest has been awakened by its appearance in this locality ("The Airship in West Texas," Galveston Daily News, April 24,1897, p. 3).

SEEN AT HUNTSVILLE

Huntsville, Walker Co.,Tex April 23.- Last night [April22] about 11 o'clock, while Mr. Isacc N. Adickee, one of the most prominent social figures of this city, was returning home from a call on his best girl, he had a glimpse of the much talked of airship. He says it came from a northwesterly direction and moved at a very rapid rate and passed over the outskirts of Huntsville, ascending as it neared the hills. It was not in sight over ten minutes from the time he first saw it. Its appearance tallied very much with former descriptions appearing in the News, being cigar -shaped and having wings, and also throwing out the usual bright light. No one here doubts that Mr. Adickee has really seen the airship and especially the young ladies, as they certainly have the utmost confidence in his veracity ("The Airship in West Texas," Galveston Daily News, April 24,1897, p. 3).

SUPPLIES FOR AIRSHIP

A Rockland Man Helped the Aerial Navigators Purchased Chisel and Lubricating Oil for " ," the Man with the Mysterious Machine

Rockland, Texas, April 23.—Mr. John Smith, living near this place, reports that last night [April 22] about 11:00 o'clock, after having retired, he heard his dogs barking furiously together with a whirring noise. He went to the dogs to ascertain the trouble and saw something, he says, that made his eyes bulge out, and but for the fact that he had been reading of an airship that was supposed to have been in or over Texas, he would have taken to the woods. It was a peculiar shaped body, with an oblong shape, with wings and side attachments of various sizes and shapes. There were brilliant lights, which appeared much brighter than electric lights. When he first saw it, it seemed perfectly stationary about fifty yards from the ground. It circled a few times and gradually descended to the ground in a pasture adjacent to his house. He took his Winchester and went to investigate. As soon as the ship, or whatever it might be, alighted, the lights went out. The night was bright enough for a man to be distinguished several yards, and when within about thirty yards of the ship he was met by an ordinary mortal, who requested him to lay his gun aside, as no harm was intended. Whereupon the following conversation ensued:

Mr. Smith inquired: "Who are you and what do you want?"

"Never mind about my name; call it Smith. I want some lubricating oil and a couple of cold chisels if you can get them, and some bluestone. I suppose the sawmill hard by has the two former articles and the telegraph operator the bluestone. Here is a tendollar bill, take it and get up these articles and keep the change for your trouble."

Mr. Smith said: "What have you got down there? Let me go and see it."

He who wanted to be called Smith said: "No, we can not permit you to approach any nearer, but do as we request you and your kindness will be appreciated, and we will call on you some future day and reciprocate your kindness by taking you on a trip."

Mr. Smith went and procured the oil and cold chisels, but could not get the bluestone. They had no change and Mr. Smith tendered them the ten-dollar bill, but was refused.

The man shook hands with him and thanked him cordially and asked that he not follow him to the vessel. As he left Mr. Smith called to him and asked him where he was from and where he was going. He replied "from anywhere, but we will be in Greece day after tomorrow."

> He got on board, then there was again the whirling noise, and the thing was gone, as Mr. Smith expressed it, like a shot out of a gun. Mr. Smith is perfectly reliable (Houston Post, April 25,1897, p. 13).

"Never mind about my name; call it Smith" is electrifying. (Read the San Francisco Call [p. 1, November 25,1896] interview with a California inventor named Smith in chapter 19.) Dr. C. A. Smith of San Francisco said he would fly around the continent in the spring of 1897 in a machine fitting this exact description. (See Smith's patent application for an airship, also fitting the description of the airship seen at Rockland, in appendix A.)

I think the statement that the airship would be in Greece "day after tomorrow" was a flippant retort. In all encounters with airship crew members, they typically attempted to keep private personal information about themselves and technical secrets about their airships. However, keeping in mind Dr. C. A. Smith's claim as detailed in the San Francisco Call account, perhaps, he really intended to traverse the Atlantic and visit the Mediterranean region. Someone in Greece may investigate local newspaper reports and determine if any airships were reportedly seen around Greece on or about April 24,1897.

THAT AIRSHIP

Farmer Near Josserand Conversed With the Crew

Josserand, Texas, April 24.—Considerable excitement prevails at this writing in the usually quiet village of Josserand, caused by a visit of the noted airship, which has been seen at so many different points of late.

Mr. Frank Nichols, a prominent farmer living about two miles east of here, and a man of unquestioned veracity, was awakened night before last [April 22] near the hour of 12 by a whirring noise, similar to that made by machinery. Upon looking out he was startled upon beholding brilliant lights streaming from a ponderous vessel of strange proportions, which rested upon the ground in his corn field.

Having read the dispatches published in The Post of the noted aerial navigators, the truth at once flashed over him that he was one of the fortunate ones and with all the bravery of Priam at the siege of Troy Mr. Nichols started out to investigate.

> Before reaching the strange midnight visitor he was accosted by two men with buckets, who asked permission to draw water from his well. Thinking he might be entertaining heavenly visitants instead of earthly mortals permission was readily granted.
> Mr. Nichols was kindly invited to accompany them to the ship. He conversed freely with the crew, composed of six or eight individuals about the ship. The machinery was so complicated that in his short interview he could gain no knowledge of its workings. However, one of the crew told him the problem of aerial navigation had been solved. The ship or car is built from a newly discovered material that has the property of self sustenance in the air (other than some type of gas, there is no physical property that admits of "self sustenance in the air") and the motive power is highly condensed electricity. ["Highly condensed" electricity can only mean batteries.]
> He was informed t\\2Xfive of these ships were built at a small town in Iowa. Soon the invention will be given to the public. An immense stock company is now being formed and within the next year the machine will be in general use.
> Mr. Nichols lives at Josserand, Trinity County, Texas, and will convince any credulous one by showing the place where the ship rested (Houston Post, April 26, 1897).

Mr. Nichols' description of the airship tallies with previous ones. This is the third account that gives a small town in Iowa as the place of the airships' origination. Was this airship one of five build in a quite Iowa village? The answer, given in the final chapters, will astound you. For now, we must let the story continue to develop.

FRIDAY, APRIL 23, 1897

There are six reported sightings for the night of April 23. The two airships are still in close contact with each other, as evidenced by the nearness of the sightings. Also, this is the first night since the crash at Aurora that airships appeared near their daytime base of operations, implying their far-ranging excursions in search for the missing airship is over. Let's continue.

THAT AIRSHIP

Said to Have Broken Down and at Kountze for Repairs

> Kountze, Texas, April 24,—The much talked of airship visited Kountze last night [April 23]. It was first seen by Captain H. A. Hooks and A. W. Hodges, who are both responsible men. In descending it punctured the "air department" and will have to stay over several days for repairs.
>
> Any one wishing to see it may do so by coming to Kountze any time before Monday night, as it will take until then to get it in flying order.
> The ship is fifty feet in length and about twenty feet wide; shaped somewhat like a cigar. There are two men on board her. They gave their name as Wilson and Jackson. They will move north after Monday (Houston Post, April 25, 1897; Terrell Times-Star, April 30,1897).

This is the second account we have encountered so far that gives a length of 50 feet. Was the airship 50, 75, or 150 feet long? Could this estimate be off by some 25 feet? It is hard to argue the estimate is off by 25 feet, as the witness saw the airship on the ground and apparently had ample opportunity to gauge the length. So, in keeping with the threeairship (flying-around-Texas) hypothesis, was each airship a different length? We will investigate this issue in the latter chapters.

SEEN AT LOGANSPORT

Logansport, La., April 23.—The much talked of airship passed over Logansport this morning [April 23] at 5:30 o'clock. W. F. Miller, W. H. Graham and J. C. Morse were up early doing some menial work for Chicago Lumber and Coal Company when they saw a large airship coming from the southwest and pass at the rate of 100 miles an hour. It must have been 1,000 feet high. The three men are all reliable men. They are true believers in the airship, now. J.W. Norman ("The Airship in West Texas," Galveston Daily News, April 24,1897, p. 3).

THAT AIRSHIP.

Seen At Logansport

Logansport, La., April 23.- The airship which has been soaring around the country for some time passed over Logansport this morning [April 23] at 5:30 o'clock. W. H. Miller, W.C. Graham and J. C. Morse were up early doing some special work for the Chicago Lumber Company when they saw a large object approaching from the south at a rapid rate. It was at a height of about 1500 feet and was moving at a very fast rate. The above men are the foreman and two workers for the Chicago Lumber Company and are reliable men (Houston Post, April 24,1897, p. 4).

THE AIRSHIP

Mr. Woodford Brooks Declares He Saw It—His Account of It.

Mr. Woodford Brooks, secretary and treasurer of the Polytechnic Street Railway, is the latest Fort Worth man to report having seen the famous airship, and he relates the circumstances with such seriousness and accuracy as to leave no doubt in the listener's mind that he tells facts.

> Yesterday morning [April 23] about 9:30 o'clock, while riding on a street car past the city park, Mr. Brooks saw the strange aerial visitor resting on the ground out in the park near the river. Accompanied by the motorman, Mr. Edwards, Mr. Brooks went into the park for a closer inspection of the ship, but was met some distance from the vessel by the captain who gave his name as Randall. Mr. Brooks had a short interview with the captain, who said that the destination of himself and crew, which was composed of twelve men, was the city of Mexico. Mr. Brooks inquired of the captain if he did not think thirteen an unlucky number to make the trip, when that gentleman laughingly replied that they were all protected by wearing Mexican opals.

> Mr. Brooks declared that the ship is a splendidly equipped machine propelled by electricity, which is supplied by a large storage battery. It appears that the captain and crew mistook the water works plant near the park for an electrical plant, and had descended from their great distance above the earth for the purpose of procuring a supply of electricity for their ship. Upon learning their mistake they decided to utilize what they had left in making the trip to San Antonio, and soon sailed away.

> Mr. Brooks telephoned The Register office last night (April 23] that he had just received a telegram from Captain Randall, who stated that the ship and crew had arrived in San Antonio safely and would leave at once for the city of Mexico, where they expected to arrive in two days at least. They expect to return by the way of Fort Worth in about a week (Fort Worth Register, April 24, 1897, p. 5).

If the motive power was storage batteries for at least one of the airships, as claimed in this and many other reports, then some means of renewing the battery charge had to be procured. This account has a great ring of truth to it as it explains how an airship crew could easily renew the battery charge while traversing the countryside.

Although Mr. Brooks claimed Captain Randall telegraphed his arrival in San Antonio, there is no known sighting in or around San Antonio for the night of April 23 or the early morning of the twentyfourth. Either the airship was not seen in transit between Fort Worth and San Antonio, newspapers did not consider any in-transit sightings significant enough to print, or Mr. Brooks was lying about the airship's destination and about the receipt of a telegram.

Mr. Brooks stated he saw the airship at 9:30 A.M. It took off for San Antonio shortly after Mr. Brooks came upon it. Since the airship was traversing the countryside in the daylight hours, it seems reasonable to assume someone along the flight path would have noticed it. I am concerned about the truthfulness of this account, as the airship pilots have firmly established a consistent habit of avoiding daytime flying. Yet, for Mr. Brooks to receive a telegram from Captain Randall "last night," the captain had to fly to San Antonio in the daylight.

Captain Randall and his relationship to the other airship members is of interest to us. We will see if we can connect him to any of the other airship characters in chapter 20.

THE AIRSHIP

> Several parties in the city declare they saw the famous cigar shaped airship pass over Gainesville last Friday night [April 23] about 11:30 o'clock. The noise made by its approach resembled the rush of wind which precedes a storm. The ship hovered above the city looking like a huge monster roaring through the air. It sailed in a circle and finally dropped alongside of S. Zacharias' big dry goods store where it remained about forty minutes, when it rose gracefully into the night and sailed due north. It is surmised the goods Mr. Zacharias is offering so wonderfully cheap at his special sale this week were freighted through New York by the airship {Gainesville Daily Heaperian, April 25,1897, p. 2).

The tone of this account smacks of heresy. In no other account does any airship alight near a store for the avowed purpose of unloading freighted goods. S. Zacharias is trying to get some free publicity for his store.

Seen by a Thoroughly Reliable and Well Known Citizen (To the Times.)

Deadwood, Tex., April 24,1897.—Seeing so much here of late in reference to the airship has put me on the look out for several days and nights , and my vigilance, much to my surprise, was rewarded on Friday night last, April 23. I was out about 8 o'clock in my Bermuda and clover pasture about 200 yards from my house, looking after some of my fine stock that seemed to be very much alarmed at something unusual, they running and snorting like regular broncos. On arrival in the neighborhood of where my stock were, I saw a very bright and varied light some 300 feet from the earth, coming from SW and headed NE. On its near approach to my surprise a vast search light, turning night into day, was cast down upon the immediate locality where I was standing. I recognized the airship as has been usually described so often, and began saluting the aerial travelers at the top of my voice. Much to my surprise, I received in reply a message dropped near me in a beer bottle bearing the trade mark of Anhuser Busch, put up at St. Louis. Enclosed in the bottle was the message stating that this was the ship recently landed near Beaumont ,Tex., and was one of five having covered nearly the whole of the northwest, and was now bound for St. Louis.

It was seen by a number of my neighbors, who will testify to the same, and as to my veracity in this neighborhood, where I have lived for the last forty years. Some very amusing scenes took place on sight of the ship. Many took it to be the coming judgment day. Within the past twelve months there have been many converts to the holiness faith in this community, and some of them claim that this is but a forerunner of nightly evidence that will soon come to the doubting Christians who still linger in benighted darkness of the old-time teachings of Christianity. Let us hear from the next. Very respectfully, H. L. Lagrome, Deadwood, Panola County Tex (Shreveport Times, April 29, 1897, p. 6).

SATURDAY, APRIL 24, 1897

There are five reported airship sightings for the night of April 24. All but one of the airship sightings are on the far-southern side of the state. One sighting is in the far-eastern part of Texas. It appears the two airships have separated and are combing new territory. Included in this chapter is Sheriff Akers' response to the chapter 10 newspaper article ("The Airship in West Texas Landed in the Town of Uvalde, Sheriff Baylor Interviewed the Men") about his acquaintance with one of the airships' inventors, a Mr. Wilson of Goshen, New York. Let us continue.

THE AIRSHIP AT EAGLE PASS

Sheriff Dowe Interviews Its passengers Mexicans Much Wrought Up by the Alighting of the ship on the Banks of the Rio Grande.

A Description

Eagle Pass,Tex., April 25.—Eagle Pass, though away out on the Mexican border, and a little slow on up-to-date civilization cannot be out done when it comes to real sound knowledge and alert county officials. The learned folks of the border have been watching with interest the various accounts of the airship seen at so many different places simultaneously and the various descriptions of it, and had come to the conclusion that there was a whole fleet of airships, else the whole thing was a huge joke perpetuated upon a defenseless public by the heartless newspaper fraternity.

To-day, however, all is changed. The whole border is in a state of excitement. The Mexican element is in a frenzy. Crowds of Aztec descendants are gathered on different corners discussing a strange occurrence of last night [April 24]. While the majority spend the hours on their knees begging to be saved, others expostulate and interpret the "vision" as an evil omen or a "good spirit" according to their own superior knowledge.

The Express reporters attention was attracted and he immediately went in quest ofSheriffR. W. Dowe, whom he found in a great state of excitement, relating his experiences to a group of substantial citizens. The reporter waited till the sheriff gained his equilibrium and got the following account of the cause of the commotion.

"Last night about 12 o'clock some Mexicans came running to my house and told me that a very strange thing of some kind had come down from above and stopped on the bank of the Rio Grande just below Fort Duncan. I went at once to the place and found an airship and three men on board. They were just from Uvalde and claimed that they have solved the problem of traveling by air. They are going from here to the Devil's River country to locate a herd of buffalo that was seen over there some time ago by Mr. Duval West and some hunters from Galveston. The men are all well known in West Texas, but do not care to have their identity known to the public just yet. One of the men inquired for Capt. C. C.Akers of this place, but was told Mr. Akers was over the river counting some sheep that Mr. Schrimpff is getting ready to ship to market. They filled their canteens with water from the Rio Grande and flew off. They invited me to accompany them, but district court being in session I could not accept.

Mr. Dowe says it was so dark he could not see the vessel so as to describe it, but he saw the men board it and fly away (San Antonio Express, April 27,1897).

The crew member's statement that they were just from Uvalde is very exciting, for, in fact, there is a report in chapter 10 from Uvalde (entitled "The Airship in West Texas") that states the airship landed and inquired after Captain Akers there. In that account the county sheriff advised the crew member that Captain Akers was in Eagle Pass, employed in the customs service. Seems like our crew member, perhaps the pilot and or inventor himself, decided to travel to Eagle Pass and search out the good captain.

The following article is included in this chapter because it is Sheriff Akers' (also known as Captain Akers) response to the newspapers concerning his knowledge of the alleged inventor, Mr. Wilson.

AIRSHIP INVENTOR WILSON WAS OF A MECHANICAL TURN OF MIND AND FORMALLY LIVED IN FORT WORTH REMEMBERED BY HIS FRIEND

Who says he promised to startle the world with his aerial invention

Eagle Pass, Tex. April 27. Noting that on the airship said to have been seen by Sheriff Baylor in Uvalde, was a man who gave his name as Wilson, I can say that while living in Fort Worth in '76 and '77I was well acquainted with a man by the name of Wilson from New York state and was on very friendly terms with him. He was of a mechanical turn of mind and was working on aerial navigation and something that would astonish the world. He was a finely educated man, then about 24 years of age, and seemed to have money with which to prosecute his investigations, devoting his whole time to them. From conversations we had while in Fort Worth, I think that Mr. Wilson, having succeeded in constructing a practical airship, would probably hunt me up to show me that he was not so wild in his claims as I then supposed.

I will say further that I have known Sheriff Dowe many years and know that any statement he may make can be relied on as correct. C. C. Akers

During a month past the daily papers all over the country have printed columns in reference to the airship and the supposed solution of the aerial navigation problem. News correspondents in different portions of Texas have contributed their quote to this class of interesting reading, much of it unquestionably pure fiction, and numerous accounts showing no trace of [?] between the lines. It is needless to say that a great deal of the airship matter offered The News was not published.

> Last Friday The News published an airship story from its correspondent in Uvalde in which it was stated that one of the crew of the ship gave his name as Wilson and inquired after a former acquaintance, captain C. C. Akers, former sheriff of Zavalla County, now connected with the customs service in Eagle Pass. The News immediately addressed Captain Akers enclosing the Uvalde account of the airship and requested him to let the public know through The News what he knew about Mr. Wilson. The above dispatch is his answer. The Uvalde item which called it out is as follows: (See the Galveston News, April 24) (Galveston Daily News, April 28, 1897).

The Uvalde and Eagle Pass accounts and Captain Akers' letter to the paper are three incredible pieces of the airship puzzle. Mr. Wilson's former acquaintance states in his letter his belief that Mr. Wilson, whom he knew twenty-one years ago to be working on an airship, has succeeded in perfecting a practical airship. Captain Akers also confirms the home of Mr. Wilson as New York state. Was there a New York-Texas, Wilson-Akers connection? The answer may "rock your airship," but other information must be developed before the answer is forthcoming.

THE AIRSHIP IN SAN ANTONIO PASSED OVER THE CITY EARLY YESTERDAY MORNING

Its Brilliant Lights Were Seen By Scores of People History and Voyage of This Aerial Mystery

> The airship that has been seen in Texas for the past several days has reached San Antonio, or rather passed over San Antonio between 12 and 1 o'clock yesterday morning [April 25].

The first impression that this monster mystery of the skies made on those who saw it was that it was some new comet moving slowly and close to the earth in the northwestern horizon. The course that the bright object took was from northwest almost due east, and then south, passing over the city apparently about two miles east of city hall.

The sky was heavily clouded and not a star visible. This brought out all the stronger the keen white light of the airship headlight, together with the shimmer that the strong illumination cast about it. It prevented, however, anything like a view of the structure itself, but as the strange object wheeled about and came nearer a dozen or more dim lights, among them a cluster of green lights on the side of the ship toward the city, and another immense cluster of red lights at the stern, plainly indicated its artificial nature ("The Airship In San Antonio," San Antonio Express, April 26, 1897).

This story appears in this chapter because the sighting is just after midnight on April 25.

"Red lights at the stern" indicates that the red lights were physically mounted on the rear of the ship. The observer's placement of the red lights matches other descriptions, as does the observation placing of the green lights on the side of the airship.

THOUGHT IT WAS A COMET

Shortly after midnight a telephone message was received from the International 8c Great Northern depot, calling attention to a large star or comet that could be plainly seen from this point, far in the northwest. Some ten or fifteen minutes previous to that, however, the motorman on the last car out to Laurel Heights had observed the strange solitary light.

The news of the appearance of what was supposed to be a comet spread rapidly over the city and soon a crowd of men gathered at the comer of Soledad and Houston streets to await the appearance of the body. In order to get a better view a number of the watchers went to city hall, where access to one of the upper galleries was gained, and a good view of the approaching light was had. The prevalent opinion was that the object was a small sized comet of unusually close proximity to the earth, but all doubts of the real nature of the phenomenon were soon set to rest.

As the object drew nearer and nearer, slowly to the watchers, but in reality at a marvelous speed, it suddenly swung around to the right, displaying, as it made its graceful curve, a number of lights that scintillated like a cluster of green stars. In addition to this numerous dim white and cream flickering lights reached from the headlights to the stern, which, it soon developed, was adorned with a cluster of brilliant little red sparks of light. (The little red sparks were emitted from the commutator brushes of the electrical motors that powered the propellers.]

> The maneuvering of the object in lowering and rising, as well as the arrangement and color of the lights left no doubt but that the object was the airship which has been hovering over the central portion of Texas for the past several days.

> No stop was made, but an almost southeasterly course was pursued by the ship. The aerial visitor passed out of sight by degrees, the red stern lights growing dimmer and dimmer until they seemed to gradually dissolve into the blackness of the night ("The Airship In San Antonio," San Antonio Express, April 26, 1897).

There are now a sufficient number of corroborating accounts to safely say the red stern lights designated the backside or rear of the airship. But why did the airship need to identify its backside if the skies over America were not occupied with other airships? Only an inventor concerned with the prospect of inadvertently colliding with another airship in the darkness of night would even think to place signal lights on the rear and sides of an airship. The placement of signal lights is persuasive evidence of additional ships going about the spring nights of 1897.

MADE ITS ESCAPE

Airship Fled When it Discovered it Was Observed at Lacoste

Lacoste, Tex., April 24—To the Express. I thought it would be interesting to you to give a description of a most curious object visible to the entire inhabitants of Lacoste, Tex., upon the night of the 24th inst [April 24].

What I suppose to be an airship appeared about 8:50 p.m. making a circuit in the heavens above Lacoste station, then gradually ascended and rushing off at a marvelous speed in a northern direction about 60 miles an hour.

The airship appeared to be about 40 feet long shaped like an acute angle and equipped with what appeared to be canvas, but from the distance, which was about half a mile, I cannot describe it exactly. By the aid of a telescope two men were plainly seen and the light which flashed could be seen at a great distance. When first seen the airship appeared to be alighting, as it circled the town for about ten minutes, but we were sadly disappointed when the object disappeared from our vision. Yours truly, James J. Jones (San Antonio Express, April 27, 1897).

The two men seen on this airship may or may not have been S. E. Tillman and A. E. Dolbear, mentioned in a previous account describing two men aboard an airship.

> Bay City, Texas, April 28.—The airship passed over Matagorda at 12:00 o'clock midnight, Sunday 25th instant. A little boy saw it, ran in the house and told his parents to come and see the big bird flying, they stepped out of the house and saw it: 'twas going in a westerly direction. Several other reliable persons saw the ship (Houston Post, April 30,1897, p. 7).

AIRSHIP AGAIN

The airship made its appearance again early yesterday morning [April 25]. At least three young men who were camping up on Bull Creek, at Huddle's point, say they saw it. Messrs. Geo Proctor, Ted Tobin and Jno Caldwell went up the lake Saturday afternoon for a couple of days' camp and pitched their tents at Huddle's Point. About 3 o'clock yesterday morning it began to rain, and the young men were compelled to get up and fasten their tent. It was at this time they saw the mysterious aircraft. They claim it was in sight fully fifteen minutes and are positive they could not have been mistaken. At intervals of every few seconds it would throw its searchlights, and the boys say the light looked as big as four ordinary arc lights. It made its appearance from behind Mount Bounell and traveled north. The boys broke camp last afternoon they say because it was raining so hard, but that mysterious light probably made the rain seen wetter than usual (Austin American Statesman, April 26, 1897, p. 3).

AIRSHIP LOCATED

> It is enroute to Cuba to Scatter Dynamite Among Weyler's Forces.
> Philadelphia. April 26.—A carefully planned expedition left for Cuba last night [April 25] from near Sea Isle, N.J. The supply of arms and ammunitions left New York Saturday on lighters and was placed on a tug between Barengal and Long Branch. The tug came steadily down the coast and was soon joined by another boat. In the way of munitions, the expedition took along a Hotchkiss gun, 1,000 rifles, 13,000 rounds of ammunition, 2,000 machetes, a lot of medicine and what is known as an experimental flying machine adopted to the use of dynamite (Austin Daily Statesman, April 27, 1897, p. 1).

The U.S. Army maintained an experimental airship program at an army balloon post outside Denver, Colorado. The reference to an "experimental flying machine adopted to the use of dynamite" is intriguing. This "carefully planned" expedition was probably a military expedition financed and sponsored by the Cuban rebels' political party, the Cuban Revolutionary Party, based in New York City. The use of airships for dynamiting cities seems to be a theme running through several airship accounts. Was the government involved in a secret project to bomb Havana? We cannot say with any degree of certainty at this point. However, Professor (and Captain) Tillman, crew member of an airship mentioned in chapter 7, held the occupation of instructor of chemistry at West Point U.S. Military Academy. Tillman later became superintendent of the U.S. Military Academy. Was Tillman's connection to the airship crowd a coincidence or part of a covert plan?

According to the U.S. Military Academy archivist, as quoted by Daniel Cohen, Tillman applied for and received a leave of absence from the academy from April 24 to an unknown date. In consulting with the academy historian, I have found through my research that he had no such leave in April. The only papers the current Academy historian found concerning a leave for Tillman were dated for a leave in September. Yet, Tillman was positively identified as one of the two individuals present at Stephenville on April 17 and he was seen checking into a hotel in New Orleans a few days later. Was Tillman on some type of detached orders, flying around the Texas countryside with the full knowledge and consent of his superiors? The latter explanation is the only one that makes sense unless we believe there are leave papers for Tillman with an earlier date and the archivist just could not locate them. Perhaps, there was a hidden (army) agenda. Or, maybe Tillman did not need leave orders, as it was the week of Easter, a holiday at the U.S. Military Academy.

ANCHOR OF THE AIRSHIP

> Merkel, Texas, April 26.—Some parties returning from church last night [April 25] noticed a heavy object dragging along with a large rope attached. They followed it until in crossing the railroad it caught on a rail. On looking up they saw what they supposed was the airship. It was not near enough to get an idea of the dimensions. A light could be seen protruding from several windows; one bright light in front like a headlight of a locomotive. After some ten minutes a man was seen descending the rope, he came near enough to be plainly seen. He wore a blue sailor suit, was small in size. He stopped when he discovered parties at the anchor and cut the rope below him and sailed off in a northeast direction.

> The anchor is now on exhibition at the blacksmith shop of Elliot & Miller and is attracting the attention of hundreds of people (Houston Post, April 28, 1897; Terrell Times-Star, May 7, 1897).

A California inventor by the name of Dr. C. A. Smith, when interviewed by a San Francisco Call reporter in November 1896, stated that his airship would possess just such an anchor and that he was planning a trip across the continent in April 1897.

Dr. Smith's presence in Texas in April 1897, associated with an airship similar in design to the one he patented in 1896 (see appendix A) and matching his description of the airship identified in the San Francisco Call interview, is proof beyond any reasonable doubt that these airships were not figments of people's mind, manifestations of mass hysteria, or the ghosts of railroad or newspaper hoaxes; but they and the men who flew them were real. (See chapter 19 for full Call interview with Dr. Smith.)

April 24, 1897, sightings

We can clearly see two areas of airship operations on the night of April 24. The distance from Matagorda to San Antonio is 203 miles. Airships were seen in both cities almost simultaneously. Obviously, one airship cannot be in two places separated by such distance at the same time. To account for the sightings, we conclude there must be two airships about on the night of April 24. One airship is ranging the east coast of Texas (Matagorda) while the other is exploring the southern portion of the state.

CHAPTER 15

SUNDAY, APRIL 25, 1897

The airships seemed to take the day off, as only one sighting occurs for April 25. And we continue ...

> Rosanky, Texas, April 26.—About 11:20 [April 25] last night the airship was seen passing Rosanky, Texas, about two hundred feet in the air. It made a noise something like a swarm of bees; the lights were bright; three lights were seen and it looked to be about twenty feet long. It caused quite an excitement and people do not understand the strange visitor (Houston Post, April 29,1897, p. 10).

The noise, "something like a swarm of bees," sounds like the humming of fans or propellers and electrical motors.

MONDAY, APRIL 26, 1897

There are two sightings for April 26. The airships are getting scarce. Let's continue.

ANOTHER AIRSHIP STORY

Stockman From Devine Says It Passed Over His Ranch

Mr. W. B. Adams, a prominent ranchman and merchant of Medina County, came to town yesterday and after transacting the business that brought him here, spent the rest of the day in telling about how the airship passed over Medina County.

"The ship flew directly over my ranch near Devine, last Monday [April 26]," he said to an intensely excited group in front of the Southern Hotel, "and was plainly seen by myself and several other people on the ranch. It was about forty feet long, about 300 feet high, and in the matter of appearance tallied pretty closely with descriptions given by people in other sections who have seen it. It was going in the direction of Mexico, and making pretty good time. As nearly as could be made out it contained seven or eight people. As it passed over, a piece of paper was thrown over, which fluttered down to following in plain legible English: "This is the best part of Texas we have passed over. The climate seems delightful, the air pure and the scenery picturesque. In fact, we are prone to pronounce this the finest country that a flying machine ever flew over. Tell them that you saw us."

Mr. John Herring of San Antonio here interposed to remark that Mr. Adams was never in politics, and that he would back any statement Mr. Adams might make or words to that effect.

"There is great excitement down that way over the appearance of the aerial monster," continued Mr. Adams.

"At first it was believed by many to be of supernatural origin, but when its occupants throw over their opinion of that part of Medina County, we were reassured somewhat, deciding it to contain a part of prospectors who know a good country when they see it" (San Antonio Express, April 28,1897, p. 5).

ANOTHER AIRSHIP

Conductor Sam Betters and Brakeman Harry Babcock, of the Southern Pacific, are of the opinion that there is a whole fleet of airships wandering about the skies, or that the one particular airship, which nearly everyone claims to have seen at another place at the same time is a fast traveler. As Messrs. Betters and Babcock were out on their run Monday night [April 26], Babcock was sitting on the brake of a box car, while the train was passing Spofford. The train was speeding along, when something struck Babcock on the shoulder and almost knocked him from his perch. He only heard a humming noise and as he turned to see where the mysterious blow came from he saw the white winged airship making fast time for the west (San Antonio Light, April 29, 1897, p. 4).

HISTORY OF THE SHIP

So many contradictory reports as to this airship have been published that the public has almost come to believe it a hoax. In many instances particularly bright clusters of stars have been mistaken by feverish imaginations for the ship, and in others romancing space writers have spun fabulous yarns in regard to this mysterious vessel.

Little in reality is known of the exact nature of this airship, except that it is the product of 'two American inventors.

The ship was completed probably on Nov. 27 of last year and was seen for the first time on the evening of that day as it rose from one of the numerous rock ridges or islands off the California coast. For several days it hovered over San Francisco, creating a profound sensation. The columns of the San Francisco Express were filled with the news of the aerial mystery. The correspondents of the San Francisco journals all over California were instructed to keep watch of the movements of the mystery, in hopes that a man might be on the spot should the navigator make a descent to the earth. The Examiner finally succeeded in ferreting out the island where the ship had been put together, and from whence it had started on its aerial voyage. By degrees a general idea of the structure of the ship was secured.

> The investors were Hiram Wilson, a native of New York and son of Willard H. Wilson, assistant master mechanic of the New York Central Railroad, and a young electrical engineer, C.J. Walsh of San Francisco. The men had labored on their project several years, and when their plans were matured they had the parts of the ship constructed to order in different sections of the country, whence they were shipped to the rendezvous at San Francisco and were assembled on the island ("The Airship In San Antonio," San Antonio Express, April 26, 1897).

I do not think the Wilsons and Walsh were "investors" in the sense that they invested their money into the airship project. I think "investors" in this account implies that they put their time and sweat into designing and building the airship, that is, they were the inventors.

The fact that there were many contradictory reports would be expected if multiple airships (perhaps each designed somewhat different from the other), with varying lengths and encompassing various numbers of crew members, were flying about every night.

In the final chapters we discuss Hiram Wilson, Willard Wilson, and C.J.Walsh.

ITS VOYAGE TO TEXAS

After some experimental navigation in California [in November 1896] an attempt was apparently made to cross the continent and the ship was traced as far East as Utah, after which nothing was heard from it for months. [Then the airships suddenly appeared over the Midwest in the spring of 1897.]

The most plausible theory of the sudden disappearance of the ship [in 1896] is that some defects were developed and that a rendezvous was made in some out of the way section of the West until changes could be affected. It is believed that the present trip of the machine is for further experimental purposes.

The story of the renewed movements of the airships is well known to the readers of The Express, accounts of its passage over New Mexico and the West having been given from time to time in the press dispatches. [Accounts from New Mexico papers for the year 1897 would certainly shed additional light on the subject].

Since its advent in this state, it has coursed about indiscriminately for several days. In that time it has been seen by hundreds of people and two descents are known to have been made. It was thought that a descent was intended in this vicinity on account of the ship's close proximity to the earth in passing the city, but none was probably made, as the ship was seen some time after midnight (April 26th?] by Papio Guerra, an employee on the Yturri ranch, about fourteen miles southeast of the city. The ship at that time was high in the air and rapidly speeding in a southeasterly direction ("The Airship In San Antonio," San Antonio Express, April 26, 1897).

APRIL 27-MAY 12, 1897

There are eleven sightings reported for the period April 27 through May 12. I suspect there were many more sightings, but few were reported to the newspapers, and few newspapers printed the reports they received. Why? Because airships were becoming common sights and just were not newsworthy anymore. We finish the tabulation of Texas airship sightings with this chapter. The remaining chapters are devoted to exploring the information we have collected from these reports. To complete this portion of our story, we continue with the reports .. .

TUESDAY, APRIL 27,1897

THOUGHT IT WAS AN AIRSHIP

People at Van Alstyne Mistook a Central Special for the Aerial Tourist.

Denison, Tex. April 28.—The people of Van Alstyne thought they had captured a real airship last night [April 27] when the Central special [a passenger train] bearing Gen. Hubbard and party passed through there about 9:30 o'clock. They had been reading about the airships touring the country, and the big electric headlight on the engine was something new to them. The train was coming down grade at a rate of speed that would have made even an airship envious. Some one saw the headlight, and as there was no train due at that hour, he at once announced the airship was about to alight at Van Alstyne. The news spread like wildfire, and when the train stopped at the station the platform was thronged with people to see the sight. Superintendent L. A. Daffan, who was in the party, went out and talked to those assembled at the station, and tells the story of how they mistook the train for an airship with a great deal of gusto (Dallas Morning News, April 28, 1897).

THE AIRSHIP

MR. McGOLDRICK NOW HAS AN ORDER TO FILL

Is Acquainted With The Navigators But is Oath Bound—They Use Gas And Weights

> Mr. W. H. McGoldrick, superintendent of the gas department of the San Antonio Gas and Electric Company, says of the famous airship which has been so often of late in various parts of Texas that he is well acquainted with the promoters of the same and has been in constant communication with them, up to the last four days ago. He is under oath, however, not to divulge their names or the plan upon which their airship is constructed, but he is free to say that the ship is lifted by gas and operated by gas and the same agent is used in the culinary department of the airy travelers. They use acetylene gas and he has now an order for a quantity for them which they can store for a journey of thousands of miles. The gas in use is contained in a large silk bag in the center of the ship. Inside the silk bag is a bag of rubber which holds 28,700 cubic feet of this gas at one filling. As to the sails, rudder and construction Mr. McGoldrick will give a description later to the Light. He says the machine is raised and lowered with weights (San Antonio Light, April 28,1897, p. 5).

Two thousand pounds can be lifted by 28,700 cubic feet of hydrogen gas. Acetylene will only lift about 90 percent of the amount lifted by hydrogen. Therefore, the airship mentioned in this account could only lift approximately 1,800 pounds. If the 28,700 cubic feet number is correct, the airship observed in this account must have been one of the smaller (50 or 75 feet) airships . The dimensions for a 28,700 cubic foot airship would be approximately 75' x 20' x 20' or some combination thereof. These dimensions are in close agreement with some of the observations made in previous accounts.

The method of using weights to raise or lower the airship involves shifting the weights forward or rearward to force the vessel's nose up or down, as appropriate.

In November 1896, Dr. C. A. Smith said he was constructing an airship that used acetylene gas and he would be flying it around the continent in April 1897. Also, he stated that the lights would be battery operated. What better place to set your airship down than next to a company that can replenish your supply of gas and recharge your batteries? (See the "Supplies for Airship" account in chapter 12 and the November 1896 San Francisco Call interview with Dr. C. A. Smith in chapter 19.) However, Dr. Smith said his airship would be 160 feet long, much longer than the one identified in this account. Is there another explanation? Of course, there is, but we will delve into the particulars in the latter chapters. You may be getting tired of hearing that refrain, but we must develop the story in a coherent fashion, else it gets too confusing to keep track of who, what, when, where, why, and how.

Of great interest is McGoldrick's comment that the "promoters" have been "in constant communication with them, up to the last four days" or since April 23 or twenty-fourth. Why did McGoldrick lose contact with the airships? Could it have been because of the crash in Aurora and the subsequent statewide search (by the other vessels) for the lost ship?

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 28,1897

THE AIRSHIP SEEN HERE

IT PASSED OVER THE CITY EARLY YESTERDAY MORNING IN A RAIN MOVED SLOWLY, PLAINLY VISIBLE

Seen by More Than One Person. Work of Hiram Wilson, Son of the Master Mechanic of the New York Central.

The airship, carrying a large headlight, passed over the city yesterday morning [April 28], apparently 300 or 400 feet above the earth. It moved slowly at first, traveling in a northwesterly direction, but its speed seemed to be greatly increased when it reached a point probably over Shoal Creek.

A gentleman out north of the capitol saw it, and a colored man living on Robertson Hill had a sight of the aerial visitor.

A fine view of it was had by Mr. Otto F. Porsch, an intelligent and wholly reliable gentleman living at the corner of Colorado and Second Streets and doing a grain and feed business at 402 East Sixth Street. He is well known and has a large circle of friends. A Statesman reporter saw Mr. Porsch at his place of business yesterday, and he told the following story:

"I was aroused from my sleep by my dog barking and growling, and I went to a window and looked out. It was very cloudy and dark, and I saw the glare of a big light on the clouds. I thought a large fire was in progress and hastily put on my clothes and went out into the yard to see where it was. As I opened the door to go out, my young dog, greatly scared at something, pushed by me and went into the house. My old dog stayed in the yard, and I noticed he was barking at something overhead, and I looked up and saw a great light slowly moving over the Salge Hotel. It was coming from the southeast and moved in a northwesterly direction. It appeared to me to be about 300 or 400 feet above the hotel, and it traveled very slow, the light be so blinding that I could not see the shape of the vehicle or whatever it was carrying. I watched it carefully, and after it had gone some distance and had passed me I could see the shape of the rear end of the vessel, and it appeared to be in this shape," and Mr. Porsch arranged his hands in a Vshape, somewhat like the tail of a fish. "It was still moving very slowly, but as I watched I saw a movement on each side of it like a bird flapping its wings, and its speed was at once greatly increased, and I watched it until it disappeared, which was not long after it began to increase its speed. It was drizzling a little, and it rained pretty hard after the light disappeared."

Asked if he saw any colored lights, he said:

"No, I did not. It was just a very large, ordinary light and very blinding until it passed me."

Mr. Porsch said that a gentleman living out north of the capitol told him yesterday forenoon that he had seen the ship at the same time Mr. Porsch did.

Mr. Porsch said: "After it had disappeared I went back into the house and looked at the clock, and it was exactly fifteen minutes after 4.

A colored man named Gray saw the ship as it passed over yesterday morning.

The Galveston News of yesterday contained a story that the vessel landed in Uvalde a few days ago near the residence of Sheriff H. W. Baylor. Two men were aboard, with whom Mr. Baylor talked, one of them giving his name as Wilson, and he said he had lived in Fort Worth, and the News of yesterday confirmed the story and shows he did live in the Panther City, where he worked on an airship ("The Airship Seen Here," San Antonio Express, April 29,1897).

The description of the airship's rear in this account, "V-shaped," agrees with Dr. C. A. Smith's description of the same: "the furstrum of a cone." Dr. Smith described such an airship in a November 1896 San Francisco Call interview six months prior to the date of the sighting given in this account. (See Dr. Smith's San Francisco Call interview in chapter 19.) Was this the same ship carrying Mr. Wilson? If so, were Mr. Wilson and Dr. Smith collaborators? (See the account in chapter 12 titled "Supplies for Airship."

THE AIRSHIP

Panola County Farmer Talked with the Navigators To the Editor of the Post

Seeing so much about the airship in the papers put me on the look out, and much to my gratification my vigilance was rewarded, not only in seeing the airship, but also had the pleasure of meeting a party of aerial travelers.

About 8 o'clock p.m. [April28?] I heard my horses—old gentle work stock—snorting, running and bucking around like a drove of broncos on a regular stampede. On going out to my lot to see what could have alarmed them, I sighted about a quarter of a mile off and seemingly about 300 feet from the earth a very brilliant and a variegated light, coming from SW and headed NE, traveling rapidly. It would occasionally make a circle, and now and then be reflected down to the earth, virtually turning a very dark and cloudy night into day.

After hovering around for a few minutes it gradually descended in an open field nearby. I, having by this time recognized it as an airship, went directly to the place of landing, and on arrival found the ship of about the same make up as given by various correspondents. Its ere w was composed of five men, three of whom entertained me while the other two took rubber bags and went for a supply of water at the well, 100 yards off. They informed me that this was one of five ships that had been traversing the country over recently; and that this individual ship was the same one recently landed near Beaumont, in this state, after having traveled pretty nearly over all the northwest. They stated that these ships were put up in an interior town in Illinois.

> They were rather reticent about giving out information in regards to the ship's manufacturer and since they had not yet secured everything by patent, but stated that they would soon be secure in this, and expected to establish a factory in St. Louis at an early day, and would at once enter into active competition with the railroads for passenger traffic, especially in transcontinental travel. They stated that they could shorten time from Atlantic to Pacific two or three days. The ship's crew were careful not to forget earthly things, though traveling in the heavens. They were all supplied with edibles of all sorts—likewise drinkables; had a good supply of beer and champagne. Also had a full supply of musical instruments.

> The ship was seen by a number of people in this section and some very amusing scenes took place. A good many of the semisuperstitious thought it had close connection with Judgment day. It passed near a camp meeting being held by the sanctified people, some of whom went into paroxysms of alarm, while others hailed it as a special messenger sent in a divine and providential way to throw light into the minds of their benighted neighbors who are yet wandering in the darkness of religious theories taught by the old school churches. The ship left my farm at 8:30 p.m., bound for St. Louis, so the party told me. H. C. Lagrome, Deadwood, Panola County, Texas (Houston Post, April 30, 1897, p. 7).

This account was first printed in the Shreveport Times on April 24. The sighting actually occurred on April 23. (See chapter 13, "The Airship Seen by a Thoroughly Reliable and Well Known Citizen (To the Times)" account.) The Shreveport Times credits an H. L. Lagrome of Deadwood for the story, while the Houston Post credits an H. C. Lagrome. There are wording differences between the two accounts but no substantive differences.

Several previous accounts have stated that the airship was but one of five manufactured in Iowa, but this one states that the crewman said this was one of five ships built in Illinois. Of course, Iowa is but a great stone's throw across the Mississippi River from Illinois. But, I think the crewman must have said Iowa and either the observer or the reporter "heard" Illinois.

This observer noticed the crew were "well supplied with musical instruments." Maybe Walter Williams (of the "Has a Music Crew" account in chapter 7) really did hear the crew playing music while sleeping on Mount Calm.

> Conroe, Texas, April 29.—B. F. Hord, night operator, a most respectable gentleman,. reports seeing the much talked of airship last night [April 28], which was at a great height and traveling southwesterly (Houston Post, April 30, 1897, p. 7).

THURSDAY, APRIL 29,1897

AIRSHIP COMING WILL BE IN TOWN NEXT TUESDAY NIGHT

Passed Over Main Plaza Yesterday Morning And Will Come Back Next Tuesday Night

> The famous airship which has recently created so much talk all over the country, passed over San Antonio yesterday morning [April 29] and will again visit us next Tuesday [May 4].

> Yesterday morning between one and two o'clock a waiter at the Southern Hotel was going across Main Plaza when he heard something heavy fall near by and turned to see if someone had not thrown a stone he discovered a small piece of iron with a tag and a letter attached thereto. He then looked up to see from whence it came and says he saw a large, cigar shaped object moving through the air almost over Wolfson's store, going north, but could distinguish no lights on the object as the airship is reported to carry.

The object which had fallen was a lock used for holding a rope to prevent it from slipping and bore evidence of having been removed from some freshly painted surface, white paint adhering to it in several places. To this, "attached by a hempen cord, was an ordinary ship ping tag, bearing the inscription "Just from the airship 'Sacramento.'"

A letter enclosed in a small envelope, was also tied to the weight and addressed "To the public."

These the boy gave to another waiter named Pablo Remedios, who took them to Mr. Chas. A. R. Campbell, the druggist, where they were given to a Light reporter this morning.

The following is the letter contained in the envelope attached to the weight and which is self explanatory and is given verbatim, even to some incorrect spelling:

"On board the Airship 'Sacramento,' April 27, 1897. As we have just landed and received our mail and papers we have noticed from articles in the papers, that there is some doubt in the minds of the people as to the existence of an airship sailing over the country; in order to convince the people of your city, we will sail over San Antonio on May the 4th between 6:30 and 8 o'clock P. M. going in a westerly direction, entering the city near Government hill and going west following the line of the S. P. Railroad as near as possible.

"If the people are on the lookout we will try to give as pretty a display as possible for our small ship. If the weather is not fine you need not look for the ship, as we always land in case of storms and on dark nights. We expect to have our ship ready for general use, in carrying passengers and freight by fall, until then we will be very secret in regard to our movements. We will make three copies of this and drop them in different parts of the city, as we pass over tonight, in the hope that one may be found for publication. 'First Mate L. S.^{m}

The letter is written in a clear, bold hand, in ink, on ordinary paper and occupying the first and second pages. It was either written by some practical joker and thrown from the roof of one of the tall buildings in the vicinity and the finder's imagination about seeing the > object moving off was somewhat stretched, or is a genuine message from the navigators of this strange air craft.

> The truth, however, will be known next Tuesday might, when the airship will either put in its appearance and prove itself a reality or will not show up and prove the note to be a fake (San Antonio Light, April 30,1897, p. 5).

Well, there is no known report of the airship's appearance over San Antonio on May 4. Either the note was a fake—which is entirely possible, as there were other notorious fake notes from the aircrew—or the airship found "other fish to fry."

The remark about landing on dark or stormy nights is consistent with the reported sightings of the airship.

AERIAL NAVIGATION

San Antonio is the latest station passed by the airship, and the Express vouches for it as a bona fide craft. That there really is such an invention now seems beyond doubt. Numerous reputable citizens have caught sight of it, passing through the air over various parts of the state, giving unimpeachable testimony proving the fact. The great feat of navigating the air seems beyond all doubt to have been accomplished. That which has been the dream of men for many generations, which was attempted by the scientists many centuries ago, has been done through the tireless efforts of the genius of the present day. It is a fitting crown for the innumerable great and wonderful inventions which have marked progress of this nineteenth century, now so fast drawing to a close. It is also a fitting triumph for our proud republic that this last great turn of the wheel of progress has been made by American genius.

A flying machine that will fly is no longer an impossibility—it seems beyond all doubt an established fact. What has so long been considered the futile effort of a class of cranks will most probably soon be disclosed to the wondering world as an ingenious contrivance made by intelligent effort, which will rank its producer with Fulton, who so astonished the world with the steam boat, with Morse who electrified the world with the telegraph, with Edison, Teale, and countless others who have given to man such productions of their genius and labor. Who knows? The revolution in present methods of travel and communication between distant lands which the accomplishment of aerial navigation will produce is too vast, and involves too varied possibilities to be grasped in a moment. Its contemplation affords infinite matter of dreams and speculation as to what man may do, how space and time may be annihilated— when the air may be made to transport one whither one lists.

What next will the divine gift of genius contribute towards the onward progress of the world {Brownsville [Texas] Daily Herald, April 29,1897, p. 2).

AIRSHIPS MAY BE UNCLE SAM'S.

He Has Been Experimenting With Dirigible Balloons.

It may be that those people out west who have for the last six months have been filling the papers with accounts of a mysterious airship which they have seen in the sky are not monumental liars after all. It is possible that experiments now being made by the United States government with a view to producing a dirigible, a controllable balloon—in other words, a genuine airship—may be responsible for their visions.

For several years the government has had in its employ a well known aeronaut, who gets, it is said, a salary of $10,000 a year, and constant work and experiment has been going on. Every great nation has a balloon department in its army organization and a balloon depot. The balloon depot of the United States is at Fort Logan, near Denver, and the whole balloon business is in charge of the signal service of the army.

A profound secrecy has been maintained as to what has been accomplished, even army officers themselves only getting vague inklings of what is going on. The captive balloon problem seems to have been pretty well solved by all nations, and in the next war among other powers there is no doubt that the movement of each other's armies will be watched from balloons sent in the air and held by a rope 1000 feet long. But it is the airship, the dirigible balloon, that the nations are after, the United States among them. It will be remembered that Fredrick Allen Gower, Nordical's first husband, thought he had solved the problem of a dirigible balloon capable of being used for war purposes, and lost his life in attempting to cross the British channel in an airship of his own invention.

About a year ago it was announced that the Italian government had been successful in its airship experiments, and had constructed dirigible balloons, which, in case of war, would be let loose over the devoted heads of hostile armies. These airships were said to be arranged so as to drop dynamite in the camps and forts of an enemy or on his soldiers marching in the field, captain Phillip Reade, not long ago in an article in one of the service magazines, stated that the United States had made extensive experiments with dirigible balloons, and that the results had been most encouraging, but would not be made public except in case of war. There have been rumors of late of an airship in process of construction at Fort Sheridan, near Chicago, but they were rumors of the baguette kind, and Fort Logan would be the natural place for the construction of such a dirigible balloon.

There is hardly any doubt that the United States has in its possession an airship which is regarded by the officers of the signal service corps as fairly successful. For all that is known definitely on the subject by outsiders it may be several. It is possible that it is one of Uncle Sam's dirigible balloons -which has been so exciting the western folk.

The most tangible thing which has come from the west about the mysterious airship so many declare they have seen, or else the greatest "fake," is a photograph taken by Walter McCann last Sunday from a suburb of Chicago, which shows an airship in the sky. Experts who examined the two negatives taken by McCann were unable to detect any tampering with them, and believed the photograph to be genuine. Also several people were ready to swear that they saw the airship in the city at the time McCann took the picture, and saw McCann operate his camera. At any rate, there is one interesting thing about his picture: the airship shown in the photograph is not so unlike the German war balloon in shape. At the last maneuvers of the German army a balloon was used, which was pronounced the most successful of its kind. It was cigar-shaped, with a rudder aft and a projection below the after part of the body on the machine like the keel of a vessel. The airship which McCann says he photographed was very like it.

The German balloon, however, was not of the dirigible variety, but was held captive by a long rope. In these days of submarine torpedo boats and aerial dynamite throwers war is assuming a new and interesting phase. Is this western airship a reality and the forerunner of Tennyson's vision in Locksley Hall:

"Heard the heavens filled with shouting and there rained a ghastly dew;

From the nations' airy navice, grappling in the central blue far along the world-wide whisper of south wind rushing warm;

With the standards of the nations plunging through the thunderstorm (Galveston Daily News, April 29, 1897, p. 10).

Recall a previous article ("Airship Located," chapter 14) that claimed an experimental airship adopted for dropping dynamite was on board a ship that was part of a military expedition headed for Cuba. When considered in light of Captain Tillman's presence in the airship arena, this article lends some credence to the supposition that the airships flying about in the spring of 1897 may have been the product of a secret government project.

MAY2-MAY12,1897

> Editorial comment: The airship appears to be a purely Western invention this time, and the East is taking no interest whatever in it. Possibly gentlemen who are out late in the East are simply too full to look up (Houston Post, May 2, 1897).

THE AIRSHIP

A Very Reliable Citizen of Medina County Vouches For It.

Mr. Nato Villareal, of San Antonio, yesterday received the following letter from Mr. Ed. Krause, a well known merchant of Medina Station, which Mr. Villareal has given the Light for publication:

Kind Sir and Friend: After wishing you well, I will tell you that much wrote of airship paid our city a visit. I have been reading and hearing a great deal about the air motor, but have always believed it to be a fake, but now I am convinced that it is so, as last night [the letter is not dated so we do not know when "last night" is] it hovered over my place and finally came down just back of the Hermann gin.

There are two men and a woman and child with the ship. The child is very sick, and one of the men (he says his name is Jones) came over to get some milk. I told him to go over to your ranch and your people treated him nicely.

As it was very dark last night, and you know our street car line has no headlight, it came pretty near striking Mr. Jones, as it was returning from the opera house. I wish it would have struck Mr. Jones, as then I would have been in possession of his airship.

Well returning to the airship, they also wished to have a doctor so I got Dr. Bywater. He gave them the necessary medicine. After we had the child O.K I asked Mr. Jones over to the saloon, and we had a few scoops of Lone Star beer. He bought a corkscrew and some bottle beer. So we walked back to where the airship was.

When they were ready to ascend, Katherine Garza came up, (Mr. Arnold will tell you who Katherine is) and roped the airship. The poor fellow hung to the rope a while, but soon had to leave all holds go and drop. The airship is cigar shaped and from the way she sailed is surely a good success. When you come out again will tell you exactly where the ship landed and show you the print on the ground. Your friend, ED KRAUSE, PS. Our street car is in fine shape. Send out some headlights as we don't want any damage suits to pay (San Antonio Light, May 7, 1897, p. 7; Houston Post, May 7,1897, p. 4).

AIRSHIP SEEN AT LLANO

Rumor that It Is A Spanish War Scout Seemingly Confirmed

Llano, Texas, May 9.—(Special.)—The much talked of airship was seen at this place last night [May 8] about 10:00 o'clock by several persons who are perfectly reliable in every way. When first seen it was just over the city and moved slowly in a northwesterly direction. When almost directly over the Algona Hotel it was seen to pause for a short time as if inspecting the buildings which are to be used for a military school, then continued to sail serenely in a northwesterly direction. The ship was visible for about twenty minutes, and was seen by ten or twelve persons (Austin Daily Statesman, May 10, 1897, p. 2).

MYSTERIOUS AIRSHIP

Edison Denounces It as a "Pure Fake"—Thinks It Absurd Believes, However, That airships Will Be Successfully Constructed in Future—Will Only Be Toys at Best

Thomas A. Edison doesn't think much of airships. He was seen recently in his West Orange, laboratory in regard to a late account of the movement of the airship, according to which a letter was dropped from it on a farm near Astoria, Ill., with a cipher enclosure addressed to Edison and signed "C. L. Harris, electrician airship No. 5."

Mr. Edison paused from a luncheon of sandwiches, pumpkin pie and tea to observe: "You can take it from me that that is a pure fake. I have had several men named Harris in my employ, but I know nothing of C. L. Harris."

> "I have no doubt that airships will be successfully constructed in the near future, but there has been too much talk about this suppose airship out west. I have always found that there is much talk before these airships are tired and very little afterward.

> "It is absolutely absurd to imagine that a man would construct a successful airship and keep the matter secret. When I was young we used to construct big colored paper balloons, inflate them with gas, and they would float about for days. I guess some one has been up to that same game out west.

> "When an airship is made it will not be in the form of a balloon. It will be a mechanical contrivance, which will be raised by means of a very powerful motor, which must be made of very light weight. At present no one has discovered such a motor, but we never know what will happen. We may wake up to-morrow morning and hear of some invention which sets us all eagerly to work within a few hours, as was the case with the Roentgen rays. Their success may come. I am not, however, figuring on inventing an airship. I prefer to devote my time to objects which have some commercial value. At best airships would only be toys (San Antonio Light, May 13,1897, p. 3).

Well, our best nineteenth-century minds did not have crystal balls or clairvoyant brains. Thomas Alva Edison did not have a high regard for the notion of men flying. From our perspective, of 100-plus years in the future, we can say with a great degree of certainty that he was wrong about airships only being toys.

> Editorial comment: There is this to be said for Prof. Barnard's airship—he isn't afraid to show it (Houston Post, May 13,1897, p. 4).

See chapter 20 for an account of Professor Barnard and his airship.

THAT AIR SHIP.

Some Kind of Object Passed Over the City. Fort Worth May 12.

Captain Scobie said last night (May 12] that about 8 o'clock Mrs. Scobie called him to see something strange passing over the city and on going into the yard he could observe something that might have been an airship or balloon.

> It was high up, being above the small clouds flitting through the sky at that time. It was a dark object with a wonderfully bright light on top of it and it was going rapidly in a southeastern direction.
> The captain said it had no appearance of being a meteor or star, but moves as balloon would. What it was he could not undertake to say, but that he saw it there is no doubt.
> Many others report having seen the sky flyer at the same time (Dallas Times Herald, May 13, 1897, p. 6).
> Editorial Comment: As lightly as we may treat the airship problem, there are thousands of wise people who think that the next century will be the age of utilization of the atmosphere for transportation purposes as the present century has been the age of steam and the beginning of electric inventions and discoveries. Those of us who are living now are just a century too soon to witness man's greatest triumphs, but we have the advantage of our greatgrandfathers (Houston Post, May 14,1897, p. 4).

We can say the same thing about ourselves, and so it is with each succeeding generation as the years tumble on by. There were some conflicting opinions in 1897 about the ability of man to design and build a successful flying machine and about what conquering the air might bring in terms of future benefits to humankind. Recall the article that gave Edison's opinion of flying. This editor was right. Too bad he never lived to see the Concorde fly faster than the speed of sound.

Although occasional references to airships continued in some newspapers around the country, the mysterious flying machines were never seen again in Texas, nor were the airships mentioned in any Texas newspaper after May 13,1897.

CHAPTER 18

SOLUTIONS

We have sifted through the pertinent newspaper stories focusing on the great 1897 airship mystery and have sorted a considerable amount of wheat from the chaff. Now, we have six choices to make regarding the origin of the airships.

1) THE GREAT MASS-HYSTERIA PANDEMONIUM

According to Profs. Robert E. Bartholomew and George S. Howard (former chair of the psychology department at Notre Dame University), in their book UFOs and Alien Contact: Two Centuries of Mystery (Amherst, NY: Prometheus Books, 1998), the answer lies in "conventional theories of social psychology"—the airships are a figment of peoples' imaginations resulting from mass hysteria. (Whatever that is—perhaps, a "scientific" construct to explain something scientists cannot explain because they did not trouble themselves to find out who Samuel Tillman, A. E. Dolbear, Hiram Wilson, Elmer Benjamin, U.S. Marshal Williams, etc. were?)

Bartholomew and Howard say, "the phantom airship wave of 1897 can be explained using theories of social psychology." He goes on to state how unreliable human perception is and how it is greatly influenced by the person's frame of reference at the time of a perception. Bartholomew does not offer any convincing empirical evidence that people did not see anything other than what they claimed to see in 1897. He only offers suspect theories.

What can be said about the existence of such a social construct as mass hysteria? The term "mass hysteria" is a refuge for weak-minded individuals who do not understand how to analyze their data. So-called scientists do not do their homework, or they do a shoddy job of it, and summarily jump to the "mass hysteria" conclusion. In their minds, only with perfect proof, embodied in the presence of a physical specimen, can there be safety in admitting to something other than "mass hysteria."

Too many reputable and reliable eyewitnesses, such as engineers, scientists, doctors, judges, and lawyers, saw the flying machines for anyone to summarily dismiss them as hysteria. Sure, there were bound to be falst reports generated from the quill of morose, bored, and idle newspaper correspondents, motivated by pressing deadlines and the desire for a paycheck. Also, one cannot discount the existence of false accounts resulting from the publicity- and thrill-seeking element of society. However, even tossing out the suspect accounts, there are still too many stories given by respectable individuals to dismiss all of them as hysteria.

2) A SECRET GOVERNMENT PROJECT AND SUBSEQUENT COVER-UP

Within the body of one Texas airship newspaper article, an individual who is a professor of chemistry at the U.S. Military Academy is mentioned as a member of the airship crew. Capt. Samuel E. Tillman is identified as a crew member of the airship found upon the ground at Stephenville ("The Great Aerial Wanderer," chapter 7) on April 17. Another Louisiana article (see chapter 10, "The Airship/One Man Saw It in New Orleans Last Night) identifies Tillman and Dolbear staying at a New Orleans hotel on the same day an airship was seen in New Orleans. The connection between Captain Tillman and the airship appears to be a strong one. The U.S. Military Academy historian cannot find any leave papers for Tillman dated April 1897. Therefore, for Tillman to be absent from his post at West Point and roaming the country in an airship, he must have been either AWOL (a serious infraction of military law, punishable by imprisonment) or participating in the flying experiments with the knowledge and approval of his superiors. Since he went on to serve in the army, including a tour of duty as superintendent of the U.S. Military Academy, until he retired with no known disciplinary actions, it is probable the U.S. government was knowledgeable of his participation in the flying experiments. To what extent the government participated in the experiments is unknown. Why the government did not use the technology for gainful purposes may lie in the genesis of the Spanish-American War. A book exploring the use of the airships after the spring of 1897 is planned for publication sometime in 2004. Why was a professor of the U.S. Military Academy aboard the airship? Was the government involved in the design and manufacture of the airships, and did the government subsequently cover up the airship project? The answers to these legitimate questions are found in the remaining chapters.

For thirty years, I have worked on numerous classified government projects and am very much aware of the military's ongoing experimentation with new technology. For obvious reasons, the military does not go around test-flying state-of-the-art experimental aircraft in daylight. They test those weird-looking machines at night at varied locations during certain times in the test program. What many people see and believe to be UFOs are really experimental or prototypical military aircraft. For examples, look to the early days of the stealth fighter and bomber. What would you have believed you saw if you had encountered one of them (and many people did) for the first time at midnight in 1976? A extraterrestrial UFO, of course.

The military may test more than one experimental aircraft at a time, so even multiple sightings of two or more weird-looking airships may be attributed to military test-flying. Also, the military experiments with all kinds of beyond-leading-edge technological devices—not just funnyshaped aircraft, but also different kinds of propulsion systems, even antigravity systems.

Will the military admit that one of its latest and greatest creations has been spotted and classified as a UFO? No, they will not. However, the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) admitted, in 1997, that the United States military establishment deceived the American public for many years in an effort to conceal information concerning high-altitude spy planes. The spy planes, first the Lockheed U-2A and then the Lockheed SR-71, accounted for over half of the UFO reports during the late 1950s, 1960s, and 1970s.

The military still flies the SR-71 and other experimental planes. It is reasonable to believe that many UFO sightings today can be attributed to secret military aircraft going about their nightly business. I am not privy to all the weird and crazy things the military experiments with, but I have been associated with enough strangeness to realize many UFO sightings in this country are the result of various governmental bodies performing "magic" in the air. Just as most UFO sightings have a plausible explanation, so too does the great airship mystery of 1897.

3) THEY WERE FROM ANOTHER WORLD

Profs. Robert E. Bartholomew and George S. Howard further theorize that, "The maneuvers described by witnesses were far above any technology of the period—even by today's standards." If this is so, were the occupants of these airships visitors from another world? A published firsthand account of an encounter between an earthling and the "supposedly unearthly" visitors gave credence to the supposition that the flying machines were from another world. Was the manufacturing of these airships done in this world by human hands and guided by an alien knowledge far superior to our own? Remember, this was a time of great, even frenetic, invention in Western society.

Well, with all due respect, these professors are wrong when they say the airships performed maneuvers "far above any technology of the period—even by today's standards." Bartholomew and Howard may be great mass-hysteria proponents, but apparently they know little about aviation or technology. In fact, the maneuvers (simple up, down, and forward maneuvers that helicopters routinely perform today) were quite within the bounds of the technology of the period, albeit the reliability of the machines would be questionable.

There are numerous accounts of individuals coming upon the airships as they reposed on the ground. These accounts often describe the vessels in some detail. In every case, the descriptions of the airships are consistent with 1890s technology and the descriptions of the crew members are consistent with earthly beings. There is not a single, reliable description of an airship with greatly advanced technology (like what you would expect from an alien spaceship that had to pass the boundless distance of space) in all the accounts of airship sightings. Nor is there an account of a live, extraterrestrial crew member.

Although most observers admit that they do not understand the underlying technology that propels the ships so fast and high, the descriptions still include the technology of the period. Not a single observer remarks on any advanced machinery beyond that already known to exist on earth. Additionally, all firsthand accounts of contact and interviews with the ship's crew members speak of men and women from this planet and assumed to be English-speaking, else the person remitting the story would have mentioned the method or language they used to communicate. We cannot reach any conclusion other than the crew members were from earth, not from Mars or any other world.

The evidence points to machines that incorporated nineteenth-century technology. However much we may wish to attribute the sightings to an alien presence among us, it is unlikely the Martians, or any other galactic neighbors, are going to traverse the void of space using vehicles clearly incorporating nineteenth-century human technology. The accounts describe the airships' construction in terms of aluminum framework, oil-soaked, cloth-covered wings, copper (or brass) bearings, woven baskets, mechanical capstans and iron anchors, and simple mechanical propulsion systems. Batteries and internal combustion engines provided motive power and lift was accomplished using hydrogen or, perhaps, acetylene gas—hardly the technology one would use for interplanetary or galactic travel.

While some people from the time period may be inclined to attribute the mysterious sightings to beings from another planet, it is technologically immature for us, in 2003, to assume beings are going to fly through space in vehicles that are composed of typical nineteenth-century machinery. The firsthand technical descriptions of the craft do not even come close to admitting of interplanetary travel of any sort. An interesting aside is the possible relationship between the great 1897 airship mystery and the genesis of one science-fiction classic. Given the publicity of the strange vessels, and the speculation that the visitors were from Mars, is it any wonder that Herbert George Wells wrote The War of the Worlds, published in 1898?

The two remaining conclusions left for us to consider are (1) they were products of a great newspaper or railroad hoax or (2) they were inventions of this planet.

4) A GREAT RAILROAD HOAX

Because numerous airship sightings were reported by railroad employees, at least one investigator claims the whole airship business was a hoax perpetuated by the railroads. Keep in mind that in 1897 railroads were the equivalent of our interstate highway system. They comprised the major transportation arteries linking the economic centers of the country. Roads outside of major population areas were still not much more than wagon trails.

The viewpoint of those who support the railroad-hoax theory fails to comprehend the importance of (at least) two strings of copper wire, part of a communications system called the telegraph (strung from post to post adjacent to every railroad line in the nation): every railroad depended upon the telegraph for managing its rail traffic. The combined lines of all the railroads formed a communication grid covering virtually the entire country. The railroad telegraph was the foundation of mass communication in America.

Without radio beacons to guide them, the airship captains followed the paths of the railroads to navigate from town to town in the night. Therefore, it is reasonable to believe railroad employees and passengers would see the airships more frequently than any other segment of the population. Whenever railroad employees or passengers sighted an airship, it was only natural for them to breathlessly recount the circumstances to the telegraph operator at the next railroad station. News of the sighting then spread very quickly across the region and nation via the widespread telegraphic system.

Since the railroad telegraph was not used continuously for rail-management purposes, the lines were available for fee-based public use. The railroads sold access time much like we purchase access time on the Internet today. That is, people could send telegrams across each railroad's telegraph lines for a per-word fee. The railroad telegraph lines were the only outside communications link most communities had.

The numerous companies owning the railroad lines stretched across the nation precludes the possibility that far-spread telegraphers working for different employers could coordinate and weave such a convincing hoax and maintain it for a seven-month period. The railroad telegraphers were only reporting what they were asked to report, namely, the airship stories as told by eyewitnesses and reporters.

Also, the railroad hoax explanation fails to account for the involvement of men such as George D. Collins, William Henry Harrison Hart, Elmer Benjamin, Willard Wilson, Prof. Samuel E. Tillman, Dr. Amos Dolbear, and the other airship characters who designed, built, and flew the airships. The existence of these men and their contribution to the airship story is well documented in the newspaper stories of the day. In chapter 20 additional information regarding their participation in the airship story is presented.

5) A GREAT NEWSPAPER HOAX

In the late nineteenth-century, newspapers, typically large metropolitan papers, knowingly printed fake stories whose subjects were typically of some supposed scientific achievement or discovery. These hoax stories, generally quite detailed and seemingly factual, would require several weeks for their entire plot to be presented. These types of stories became known as serials. The reading public was never sure of the serial's veracity until the end of the last installment, when the author would expose the plot for the fiction it was. Such was entertainment before the age of the television. Was the great outpouring of airship stories in 1897 a series of newspaper hoaxes?

There were some (infamous) airship stories that are clearly identified as hoaxes. One fake story involved an airship's supposed calf-knapping near Yates Center, Kansas. Several local citizens decided one day to humor themselves and the population with a fictional airship story. The conspirators boldly told the false account to the local newspaper. The gullible editor printed the story without questioning the facts. Taken as it is, the story might seem factual. However, within the context of several thousand airship stories, it stands out as singularly false.

Virtually every community had its jokesters who were quite willing to deceive the public and the newspapers. The newspapers themselves occasionally ran fake stories (on other topics) as weekly serials. It is entirely possible that some newspapers ran deliberately fabricated airship stories for one reason or another. However, to believe that all the newspapers and all the people west of the Mississippi were joined together in one great brotherhood of hoaxers stretches credulity.

Conspiracies are difficult to maintain when the number of conspirators is small and impossible to keep up when the number of participants exceeds more than two. It seems, in the heyday of the telegram, impossible for a great number of newspapers to hoax the public for over seven months. Let us not forget that many of the accounts include the names of the people who claimed to see the airships and talked to the crew members, and these were real people who lived in the respective communities.

As mentioned earlier, when a newspaper ran a serial, it typically identified it as such at the end of the last installment. No newspaper ever identified any airship story as a serial, and many was the number of newspapers that ran airship stories across the West, Midwest, and Southwest. Most of these papers were small, locally owned and published papers. It doesn't seem probable that all of them would join together in one great hoax on the American public. What else can be said, other than most of the stories were about real places, real people, and real airships?

6) THEY WERE INVENTIONS OF THIS WORLD

Impossible as it may seem, the airships could have been inventions of this world designed and built by enterprising individuals who were well financed. An airship that could travel over 100 miles per hour and attain an altitude of 10,000 feet in 1897 certainly sounds incredible today. Does it sound any more incredible than the feat of a young man who, on July 2,1982, sat down in an aluminum lawn chair tenuously tethered to several helium-filled weather balloons, untied the restraining ropes, promptly shot up to an altitude of 16,000 feet, and unwittingly became a UFO for two hours? This man won the country's admiration as a daring man of adventure, albeit with a goodly dose of reckless courage. Does the airship story seem any more incredible than the story of the inventor from Perth Amboy, New Jersey, who demonstrated, in 1863, for President Lincoln's War Department, an airship he flew over 100 miles per hour and at an altitude greater than 15,000 feet?

Steven Robson, an experienced heavy aircraft (Boeing 747) driver for a major airline, confirms that upon final approach a heavy aircraft's altitude will generally be between ^{X}U mile and V2 mile, with a speed of 135 to 145 miles per hour. Of course, the actual speed and altitude of a heavy jet may differ from this typical speed and altitude, depending upon many factors, including the type of jet and the terrain, wind speed and direction, barometric pressure, etc. But, the 135-145 miles-per-hour speed is a good yardstick with which to compare the recorded speed of the airships.

If you observe a heavy aircraft at night as it passes from horizon to horizon, on final approach, it will remain visible about ten minutes as it makes its way across the night sky. Of course, the exact length of time an airplane is visible depends upon cloud conditions, the angle the craft makes between you and the horizon, and other factors—such as on what terrain you are standing. But, the observations recounted from the 1897 Texas airship sightings and the typical nighttime airplane sightings today are remarkably similar for the area (Plano, Texas) where I live. So, what may be said of the detractors who still advocate that the witnesses in 1897 were seeing meteors or shooting stars flying across the night sky? The only shooting star known to take ten minutes to get from horizon to horizon in Dallas is a Hollywood star.

The numerous statements that the airships exceeded the speed of the "fastest passenger trains," or was in excess of 90 miles an hour, may seem inconceivable. However, read the New York Herald account of the September 1863 flight by Dr. Solomon Andrews. (See chapter 20 for additional information regarding Dr. Andrews.) It shows that at least one well-documented flight in excess of 120 miles per hour occurred thirty-four years previous to the April 1897 flights over Texas. (By Dr. Andrews' calculation, the maximum speed was more than 200 miles per hour.) It is not difficult to imagine similar flights occurring thirty-four years later.

As in the 1896-97 airship sightings, Dr. Andrews' amazing feat was not so much the design and fabrication of an airship that could actually fly, but the speed and altitude at which it could navigate. These are the things that cause people to question the truthfulness of such accounts today. Only if we build and fly such a machine now will we ever put to rest the doubts raised by the skeptics. (Note: A small group of retired naval officers constructed a replica of Andrews' airship in the 1960s, but I do not know if it was successfully flown.) But for all other readers, even if they remain unconvinced of the story's veracity, the New York Herald articles on Andrews will at least shed additional light on the subject.

The body of evidence points to a true airship story of terrestrial origin, with test flights beginning in California in the fall of 1896 and proceeding across the country to the Midwest before turning south and arriving in Texas in April 1897. A group of well-financed, secretive individuals, based in a remote California community, a quiet Iowa village, and a small New York town have left behind a wondrous story of daring accomplishment. It appears they did not just suddenly appear out of the thin mists of time but may have been secretly building and flying machines for over forty-eight years. Their fanaticism for secrecy has left a puzzle, as Dellschau claimed, for "wonder weavers" to piece together.

Who were the men who built and flew the airships? Where did they come from? What became of them? Why didn't the inventors step forward and receive the acclaim and financial rewards of an adoring country? We will examine these questions in the remaining chapters.

We have just completed a penetrating review of a remarkable body of information offering substantial evidence that the great 1897 airship mystery was, actually, factual events that occurred over the night skies of the immense Lone Star State. It is only now that some of the puzzle pieces are falling into place, and the story of these incredible inventions can be told.

THE CALIFORNIA STORY (OCTOBER 1896-JANUARY 1897)

The numerous airship sightings of 1896 and 1897 began with the observation of a clearly identifiable airship over Sacramento in November 1896, well documented in the Sacramento Bee and the San Francisco Examiner. But, a month before the Sacramento sighting, residents of Nevada, California, in the early evening of October 22, witnessed a "triple-connected meteor" ("Three Meteors in Line," San Francisco Examiner, October 23, 1896, p. 7). Said to have appeared over the western horizon at "ten minutes past 6:00," the oddity soon disappeared a "little north of east," in the general direction of Oroville, a community that will assume some importance in the airship story.

A San Francisco attorney claiming to represent the interests of a California airship inventor whose last name was Benjamin announced, in November 1896, that the inventor had successfully built three airships. Could the "triple-connected meteor" have been the three airships performing a test flight or just out on a joyride, astounding the good citizens of northern California? In the same paper, the Examiner, there is also a report of "A Queer Thing in The Sky" seen by the San Francisco residents "shortly after 6:00" (October 22, 1896). Nevada, California, is sixty-eight miles northeast of Sacramento. So began, in the fall of 1896, the great California airship mystery.

There were no more California reports of weird atmospheric sightings and odd flying visions until Wednesday, November 18, when the Sacramento Evening Bee published an account titled "Voices in the Sky" (Sacramento Evening Bee, November 18,1896, p. 1). The account focuses on the appearance over Sacramento, between the hours of 6 and 7 P.M., on Tuesday, November 17, of an electric arc lamp propelled by unknown forces and accompanied by the sound of voices. "It came out of the east and sailed unevenly toward the southwest, dropping now nearer to the earth, and now suddenly rising into the air, again as if the force that was whirling it through space was sensible of the dangers of collision of objects upon the earth." One eyewitness claimed to have heard a voice on board the vessel shouting, "Lift her up, quick! You are making directly for that steeple."

A meteoric path is a fixed path and is defined by the physical laws of the universe. This description of the flying arc lamp does not come close to describing the path of meteors. Meteors don't go up and down, deliberately trying to avoid earthly obstacles. And it seems quite unreasonable to associate a human atop a meteor, shouting directions for its guidance.

The Bee goes on to say, "That much hundreds of the people saw it." Witnesses "living at points of the city along a rough diagonal line, yet far distant from each other" claim they "heard voices issuing from it in mid-air—not the whisperings of angels, not the sepulchral mutterings of evil spirits, but the intelligible words and the merry laughter of humans." This description of the sounds associated with the flying arc lamp hardly admits of alien beings, meteors, or anything else other than the presence of earthly beings flying along with the electric arc lamp and somehow connected to it.

Apparently the sight of the flying arc lamp also caused "great consternation," and who wouldn't be concerned? Yet there is no evidence in the Bee account of a mass-hysteria reaction to the odd atmospheric object. Remember, this was 1896. Although there was much public debate and newspaper space given to the idea of human invention and the possibility of human flight in the era, the only objects people had previously witnessed in the skies before were either birds, astronomical phenomena, kites, or balloons. A new, strange object would cause concern. But hysteria? Just doesn't seem likely and the account, as written by the Bee, certainly does not contain any hint of mass hysteria. Instead, the tone of the account is one of awe and even gratification, similar to the blessed birth of a long-expected baby. The much-talked-about and long-awaited event, the invention and successful flight of an airship, had finally occurred.

In the same article, under the heading "Coming to California," the Bee states, "Last night's Bee contained a telegram from New York announcing that a man [Wilson?] had perfected an airship and would on Friday [November 20] of this week, accompanied by one or two friends, ascend from a vacant lot in the metropolis and go directly to California [a distance of 2,830 miles], which he promised to reach in two days." Additionally, the telegram included a description of "an apparatus which was electrical

For the inventor in this article to reach California in two days, his ship had to average a speed of fifty-nine miles per hour. Any invention of mankind flying in the skies before the Wright brothers sounds preposterous to most of the postmodern generation, and anyone claiming to fly across the continent at an average speed of almost sixty miles per hour seems the same. But, who was making claims to fly from New York to California in two days? This could only be the Wilson airship that was identified in a Beaumont sighting and said to have possessed an electrical means of propulsion.

But, to continue the California story. The presence of an "electric arc lamp," dipping then rising as it bobbed around the housetops and dodging the church steeples and office spires as it made its way along its course, seems odd. If such a device was attached to some type of airship, then surely the craft must have been sufficiently visible for some description to be gained. And so it was. On November 19, the San Francisco Call, a morning paper, ran an account titled "Strange Craft of the Sky/Sacramento Men Describe the Aircraft/Claim They Saw Its Occupants and Heard Them in Conversation" and datelined Sacramento, California, November 18: "As far as can be learned by eyewitnesses, the body of the craft was oblong and egg-shaped with fan-like wheels on either side, whose rapid revolutions, beating the air, served to propel the vessel directly against the wind, and in so doing caused the vessel to sway from side to side with a wavering motion, similar to that of a boat being forced against the rapid current of a stream" (San Francisco Call, November 19, 1896, p. 1).

The northern California sightings continued virtually unabated, until January 23,1897. The last-known account of a California airship sighting was reported on the twenty-second by the Sacramento Evening Bee ("And Now Lodi," January 22,1897, p. 1). The airship was seen at Lodi, about thirty-six miles southeast of Sacramento. According to the Bee, "The ship seemed to be under perfect control" and "was heading southeast." After this date, the airships began to be seen in states east of California.

It is not my desire to reiterate all of the California airship newspaper stories. The descriptions associated with the airships are very similar and even identical, in most cases, to the Texas accounts. What is of great interest, however, are a few articles whose topics relate to the identities of the airship inventors.

On November 21, 1896, a San Francisco attorney by the name of George D. Collins claimed to represent the inventor of the airship. His interview in the San Francisco Chronicle follows:

A LAWYER'S WORD FOR THAT AIRSHIP

George D. Collins Says It Flies It Hails From Oroville Safely Housed Now Near San Francisco The Attorney Says He Has Seen The Queer Craft And Promises an Exhibition

San Francisco, Cal., Nov. 22.—The mystery of the airship which has been amusing the State and puzzling some worthy citizens of Sacramento has made a change of base and now there are plenty of reputable people in and about San Francisco ready to make oath that they have seen the strange thing in the heavens and that in appearance and motion it was identical with the ship of dazzling lights and buzzing machinery which menaced a church spire at the capital.

More than that, there is a San Francisco attorney, George D. Collins who asserts that the airship exists, that the inventor is his client, that the strange craft sailed without mishap from Oroville to San Francisco, that it did pass over Sacramento on its way to the bay, and that within a few days this invention, which is the solution of one of the world's oldest and toughest problems, will be navigated in daylight, so that all San Francisco may see it, and that it will circle and rise and sink over the central part of the city.

And yet, there are wicked skeptics who chuckle and make rude jokes about an epidemic of humbug, and who poke all manner of fun at the good people who think they saw an airship in the sky.

Attorney Collins, who occupies offices on the second floor Crocker Building, was seen about the matter at his home in Alameda last night.

He said:

"It is perfectly true that there is at last a successful air ship in existence and that California will have the honor of bringing it before the world. I have known of the affair for some time and am acting as attorney for the inventor. He is a very wealthy man who has been studying the subject of flying machines for fifteen years and who came here seven years ago from the State of Maine in order to be able to perfect his ideas away from the eyes of other inventors. During the last five years he has spent at least $100,000 on his work. He has not yet secured his patent, but his application is now in Washington. I cannot say much about the machine he has perfected, because he is my client, and besides he fears that the application will be stolen from the Patent Office if people come to know that his invention is practicable.

I saw the machine one night last week at the inventor's invitation. It is made of metal, 150 feet long, and is built to carry fifteen persons. There was no motive power as far as I could see, certainly no steam.

It is built upon the aeroplane plans and has two canvas wings 18 feet wide and a rudder shaped like a bird's tail. The inventor climbed into the machine and after he had been moving some of the mechanism for a moment I saw the thing begin to ascend from the earth very gently. The wings flapped slowly as it rose and then a little faster as it moved against the wind. The machine was under perfect control all of the time.

When it got a height of about ninety feet the inventor shouted to me that he was going to make a series of circles and then descend. He immediately did so, beginning by making a circle about 100 yards in diameter, and gradually narrowing in till the machine got within thirty feet of the ground. It then fell straight down, very gracefully and touched the earth as lightly as a falling leaf.

"The reports from Sacramento the other night were quite true. It was my client's ship the inhabitant's saw. It started from Oroville, in Butte County, that evening and flew sixty-five miles in a straight line directly over Sacramento. After running up an down once or twice over the capital, my friend came on a distance of another seventy miles and landed on a spot on this side of the bay, where the ship now lies, guarded by three men. The inventor found, during this trial trip, that his ship had a wave-like motion that made him seasick. It is this defect that he is now remedying.

In another six days several defects will be done away with and it is then his intention to immediately give the people of San Francisco a chance to see his machine will fly right over the city and cross Market street a dozen times. I cannot tell you where he is housing the ship or what his name is, as I am under a pledge of secrecy but it is a fact that the machine does its work perfectly, and will astound the world and revolutionize travel when it has been displayed before the public. The inventor can fly with it to New York to-morrow if he wants to.

He has forsaken the idea of Maxim and Langley entirely in building the machine and has constructed it on an entirely new theory" (San Francisco Chronicle, November 22, 1896, p. 16).

Recall the shape of the rudder variously depicted as a broad sail, steering sail, tail of a fish, etc., that was described by the airship observers on April 15 at Denton ("The Airship Again"), April 16 at Paris ("Seen at Paris"), April 16 at Greenville ("C. G. Williams Saw It"), April 16 at Ladonia ("Two Gentlemen View It"), and April 28 at San Antonio.("The Airship Seen Here"). Each of the descriptions of the airship's tail is similar to Collins' description of the airship in the Chronicle account.

In the San Francisco Chronicle article, Collins claimed the airship "wings flapped slowly as it rose." There are several Texas newspaper articles detailing eyewitness descriptions of airships that either flapped or fanned their wings. The articles and the description of the wing movement are "fanned the breeze" (chapter 4, "Looks Like a Passenger Coach"), "with wings flapping regularly" (chapter 6, In Texas), "wings flapped regularly" (chapter 7, "Airship Seen in Galveston"), "flapped very rapidly" (chapter 7, "A Judge Sees It"), "flapping its wings" (chapter 17, "The Airship Seen Here").

Collins gave the length of the airship as 150 feet. The Texas newspaper articles that give a similar length for the airship are "it must have been 200 feet long" (chapter 5, "Seen at Paris?"), "about 150 or 200 feet long" (chapter 6, "Flight of the Airship"), "about 150 feet long" (chapter 7, "The Airship"), "length must have been 150 to 200 feet" (chapter 8, "Landed on the Brazos").

The San Francisco airship Collins describes is very similar to the airship(s) described by various Texas newspaper articles. Was the San Francisco airship(s) responsible for the wave of Texas airship sightings during the spring of 1897? It certainly seems so.

George D. Collins claimed in this and other California newspaper interviews to represent the airship inventor. In a November 22 Chronicle article, Collins said the larger parts of the airship had been manufactured back east then shipped to Oroville and Stockton for assembly. Collins goes on to identify a six-foot-tall, approximately forty-year-old dentist who resided in the 600 block of Ellis Street as the airship inventor whom he represented. Dr. E. H. Benjamin was identified in the article as the only person matching Collins' description and who lived in the 600 block of Ellis Street. According to the article, Dr. Benjamin lived at 633 Ellis Street. Collins told the reporter the inventor had friends and a relative in Oroville. In this same article, it is mentioned that (former) Attorney General William H. H. Hart met with Collins to discuss the airship and its Oroville inventor. Hart told the reporter he believed Collins, and "I have no doubt," the general said, "that the affair is bona fide" ("Collins Sticks to His Airship Story," San Francisco Chronicle, November 22, 1896, p. 12).

Collins' statements aroused the curiosity of every newspaperman in the area, and they quickly encamped on Benjamin's front porch, desiring additional interviews and details ("A Lawyer's Word for That Airship," San Francisco Chronicle, November 22,1896, p. 16). In another newspaper interview, Collins identified the airship inventor as hailing from Oroville and about forty-seven years old ("A Winged Ship in the Sky," San Francisco Call, November 23, 1896, p. 1).

In a Call interview (printed in the Examiner and the Chronicle also) at his San Francisco residence, 633 Ellis Street, on November 24, Dr. Elmer H. Benjamin denied the role of airship inventor. He did state that George Collins was his legal representative, but for the invention of dental appliances. He mentioned he had an uncle, Dr. Francis Wakelee Benjamin. In the same article, George Collins back-pedals and starts claiming he knows nothing of the airship or its inventor ("The Apparition of the Air/Benjamin Talks," San Francisco Call, November 24, 1896, p. 1; "Have You Seen It in the Sky?" San Francisco Examiner, November 24, 1896, p. 9; "Coy Mr. Collins and His Airship," San Francisco Chronicle, November 24,1896, p. 9).

Collins was sequestered with Benjamin for several hours at Benjamin's residence on Sunday, November 22. On Monday, Benjamin journeyed to Collins' office in the Crocker Building. Afterward, both men denied any knowledge of airships and any association with any airship enterprise. In the Chronicle article, a dispatch from Oroville confirmed Dr. Francis Wakelee Benjamin was the uncle of Dr. Elmer H. Benjamin and that Dr. Elmer H. Benjamin was originally from Carmel, Maine, and he had been in California about seven years ("Coy Mr. Collins and His Airship," San Francisco Chronicle, November 24, 1896, p. 9).

Maybe because of Benjamin's reservations about Collins' ability to represent his interests adequately or due to second thoughts of another nature—whatever the reason—Collins began to back off his original statements and denied that he ever made the claim to represent the airship inventor ("Coy Mr. Collins and His Airship," San Francisco Chronicle, November 24,1896, p. 9). Finally, in another interview published in the San Francisco Examiner ("Have You Seen It in the Sky?" November 24, 1896, p. 9), Mr. Collins stated that his original comments were misconstrued by the Chronicle reporter.

Collins went on to say that the only contact he had with any airship inventor was the previous week, when a stranger entered his office and asked him to file a patent application. But as the inventor had no model, Collins sent him away and told him to come back when he had completed one. The lawyer then said that the Chronicle reporter must have confused this "model" story with the story of Dr. Elmer H. Benjamin, a dentist whom Collins represented. Dr. Benjamin invented dental devices. However, in the same San Francisco Examiner article, the reporter told of an old friend and law-school classmate of Collins, attorney Frederick Bradley, who claimed that Collins told him several days previous to his interview that he (Collins) represented the airship inventor, had seen the airship, and was preparing the legal papers for the inventor's patent application.

In another San Francisco Call article ("Benjamin Talks," November 24, 1896, p. 1), a dispatch from the paper's Oroville stringer claims that Dr. Elmer Benjamin was originally from Carmel, Maine. (According to the 1890 Butte County Great Register, Benjamin's Oroville uncle, Dr. F. W. Benjamin, was born in Maine. See "The Oroville, California, Benjamins" section in chapter 20.)

It seems Collins' eagerness to publicly discuss the airship and its inventor was counter to his client's desire to maintain a strict code of secrecy surrounding his awesome machine. The attorney was now backpedaling as fast as he could in a fruitless attempt to undo the damage to Benjamin's interests, which he had unwittingly performed. But, apparently, Collins, by now, had publicly said too much.

Then Arty. George Collins told the reporter he could not speak freely about the airship, as the inventor was his client and he (the inventor) was concerned about his patent being stolen. So, one wonders why Collins chose to speak up on the matter in the first place? Perhaps, like many people, he could not refuse his fifteen minutes of fame. The extent of the inventor's distress became evident the next day, when Collins informed the papers that he was no longer representing the inventor.

A Call article dated November 25 states that (former) Attorney General William H. H. Hart assumed the legal responsibilities of the airship inventor "yesterday," Tuesday, November 24. Hart states he assumed the legal duties "due to the loquacity of Mr. Collins." The article states Hart assumed the responsibilities because "The inventor, who is said to be extremely desirous of maintaining his incognito, thinks that Collins talked not wisely and too much." Hart, not exactly a paragon of discretion himself, goes on to identify the airship inventor as a Dr. Catlin (Dr. C. A. Smith—See "An Inventor's Opinion," below) who was assisted by Dr. E. H. Benjamin and a George Applegate ("Mission of the Aerial Ship," San Francisco Call, November 25,1896, p. 1).

Mr. Collins, a young and brash attorney, lost possibly his best client. In a San Francisco Call article ("Mission of the Aerial Ship," November 25, 1896, p. 1), the reporter states that the legal interests of the airship inventor were transferred from George Collins to William H. H. Hart, a former California attorney general. Collins' previous comments concerning the airship and its inventor, followed by his attempt to camouflage the truth with misleading information concerning Dr. Elmer Benjamin and the dental inventions caused the newspaper reporters to look at Benjamin as the airship inventor. Mr. Collins' denial, quoted from the newspaper, reads, "This Dr. [Elmer] Benjamin referred to is a dentist. He is a client of mine and an old friend and I am trying to help him get out a patent on a new sort of gold crown for teeth. He has been experimenting for some time and calls upon me frequently. He has nothing whatever to do with the airship project."

Under the byline "The First Trip" (San Francisco Call, November 25, 1896, p. 1), the Call reporter, quoting an unidentified source, wrote that some copper bearings became overheated during the maiden voyage flight that Dr. Elmer Benjamin made alone. After Dr. Benjamin moved out of his boarding-house room, numerous copper filings were found in the carpet. Dentists typically did not use quantities of copper large enough to leave such a large deposit of filings in the carpet. And several individuals who knew Benjamin claimed he never practiced his profession while residing in California. Either the good doctor was making bearings or copper bushings. The Call reporter hints that his unidentified source is a stockholder in the venture, who refers to the inventor by "doctor."

Copper is soft, too soft to be very useful for bearings or bushings. Perhaps, the material found in the carpet was not copper, but brass. Good quality brass can be mistaken for copper by the uninformed and brass bushings were, and still are, commonly used.

Did Dr. Elmer Benjamin ever practice dentistry? For about eight years, Benjamin roamed the California countryside, ostensibly as an agent for a piano company called Sherman, Clay, and Company, a San Francisco firm. He occasionally passed through Woodland, a community about nineteen miles northwest of Sacramento, and would assist Dr. Fred Holmes, a local dentist, in some procedure. According to Dr. Holmes, Benjamin also assisted a dentist in San Francisco named Dr. Hill. On one occasion, Benjamin made a comment to Dr. Holmes that he had an invention that would revolutionize the world ("Aerial Navigation," Woodland Daily Democrat, November 23, 1896, p. 3).

Two months prior to the first appearance of the airship over San Francisco, Dr. Benjamin quit the piano company and set up a dental office at 113 Powell Street, San Francisco, a home owned by Dr. S. W. Dennis and occupied by him and his son. Dr. Dennis stated that while occupying a portion of his home, Benjamin was engaged in several inventions of which Dr. Dennis presumed were of a dental nature.

On November 23, Dr. Benjamin left word at the rooming house where he was boarding, 633 Ellis Street, that he was going out of town and would not return for a week. Where did the good doctor go? According to the San Francisco Examiner, he apparently went to Oroville, as the paper received a telegram from the him on the evening of the twenty-third advising the newspaper that he was not a party to the airship ("Have You Seen It in the Sky?" November 24, 1896, p. 9).

In the Oakland Tribune ("A Clue at Last," November 24,1896, p. 1), a George Carleton, city electrician, claimed a friend told him he knew the airship inventor and that it was constructed near Oroville. Dr. Elmer H. Benjamin's uncle, Dr. Francis Wakelee Benjamin, lived in Oroville ("Coy Mr. Collins and His Airship," San Francisco Chronicle, November 24,1896, p. 6). According to the reporter, Benjamin moved from Maine to California around 1884. Dr. Elmer H. Benjamin was also known to be in Oroville on November 15 and sixteenth, visiting his aunt and uncle. So, we can place Dr. Elmer Benjamin in the immediate vicinity of Oroville, the supposed origin of the airship, shortly before it was seen over Sacramento.

In "Mission of the Aerial Ship" (San Francisco Call, November 25, 1896, p. 1), it is reported that former attorney general William Hart admits his new responsibilities for representing the airship inventor and his interests. William H. H. Hart made public announcements of patent applications and other business matters pertaining to the airship inventors. In this article, Mr. Hart stated that the purpose of the airship is to travel to Cuba in support of the insurgents and bomb targets in Havana. This is undoubtedly the origination of all the stories concerning the airship's Cuban destination. For throughout the remainder of the airship sightings, newspapers across the country continued to speculate that the airship was headed for Cuba.

Was the United States military interested in using airships for bombing? One newspaper referenced a bill of lading from a New York port concerning one military supply ship bound for Cuba and laden with one "experimental" airship. It is known that the U.S. Army was trying to develop an airship at a facility near Denver, Colorado. I suspect any experimental airship packed away on a military cargo vessel was one manufactured by the government and not any of the airships sighted in the fall of 1896 and the spring of 1897. Why? All the airships sighted during the covered time period were quite capable of flying across the open water (from any number of places Florida, Georgia, Mississippi, Louisiana, or Texas) to get to Cuba without requiring disassembly for shipment. However, if the military had succeeded in developing an airship and wished to keep the matter secret—a typical military strategy— then the machine would have been transported in a disassembled state, thereby providing some degree of protection from prying eyes and inquisitive minds. But, the implications of such a government strategy are frightening, as the United States government was not at war with Spain in April 1897.

Did the makers of the flying machines intend to use their devices as machines of war or were the "bomb Havana" comments designed to mislead the uninformed as to their real purpose? After the first airship was seen, a year would pass before the United States declared war on Spain. Certainly any American bombing of Cuba in the fall of 1896 or the spring of 1897 would be viewed by the Spanish and the rest of the world as justification for declaring war on the United States. So, one wonders why newspapers would be advocating a "bomb Havana" strategy in 1896? Could it be that certain powerful economic and political forces in the United States had a vested interest in starting a war with Spain? Was the government secretly planning to bomb Havana? In February 1898, when the United States did declare war on Spain, one individual was virtually single-handedly responsible for the declaration. His name was William Randolph Hearst, a powerful economic and political force in both San Francisco and New York City in the spring of 1897. He was also one of the very few men in the country with sufficient financial resources to fund airship research and development.

Continuing with the Hart interview in the San Francisco Call, Mr. Hart told the reporter there were actually two such flying machines, one developed in the East (with which he had been involved for some time) and one developed in the West (of which he had just assumed the legal responsibilities for). In the same article, the reporter adds that a "Dr. Catlin" was the actual inventor of the airship and Dr. Elmer Benjamin and a George Applegate were his assistants. The reporter did not state where he got this new information.

A seemingly innocent comment of William Hart's is interesting. In the interview, he said he would use the airship for warlike purposes, but before it could be so utilized, two modifications were required. One necessary modification was providing armor to the undercarriage for some degree of protection from small-arms fire. The other modification required some provision to allow the machine to float in case it should crash while traversing open water. The inability of the machine to float may have played a large role in the reason why the great airship story died before the machines were ever put into practical commercial use. We will discuss the probable disappearance of two airships over open water in the last chapter.

Mr. Hart also makes the claim that the motive power was supplied by electric batteries. Based on the nature of his comments, Hart seems to be talking about the California airship and not the airship constructed "back East (the rural New York town?)," with which he claims to have been previously associated. But in later interviews he specifically states that the Eastern airship's motive power was supplied by electrical batteries. In one account, Hart advised the reporter that his interest in a new storage battery, called the Fargo battery, was responsible for his assuming the legal responsibilities for the East Coast airship.

"The High Speed Worm" (San Francisco Call, November 25,1896, p. 1) features an interview with a William J. Kenney of Kenney and Payton, model makers and bicycle dealers. Mr. Kenney stated that "a man about 45 years of age (Dr. E. H. Benjamin?), wearing a gray mustache, and appearing to be a professional man" came into his shop three or four weeks previous, laying before him the plans for "an unusually large and high-speed worm" and its gear. The man asked Kenney to make the worm and gear practically frictionless. Mr. Kenney thought the purpose of the device was to improve upon the cyclometer, a gasoline motorpowered bicycle. But second thoughts caused him to realize the worm and gear were too sophisticated for this; he then concluded that the device might be used to run a dynamo. The manufacturing required two weeks, and the cost was something greater than S145. Kenney stated that one bill alone was for f 145, a large sum of money in 1896. After the appearance of the airship, he became convinced that the device was built to perform some function on the vessel.

Recall the "Was Aboard an Airship/The First Description of the Modern Invention to Be Published" account {Dallas Morning News, May 16, 1897) in chapter 9, which featured George Dunlop. Mr. Dunlop wrote to his good friend Dr. D. H. Tucker of his conversation with the airship inventor:

> "That there was a receiver made of aluminum (and of this metal the engine and everything connected with the ship so far as I saw was constructed), from which pipes passed to what appeared to me to be a square box, at each end of which was a cylinder with an exhaust chamber, in which worked a piston attached to a very singularly constructed driving wheel like the sprocket of a bicycle, except that there were four wheels, one within the other, and these Mr. Wilson called the accumulators. There were two sets of such wheels with a combined velocity surpassing anything heretofore constructed. By the peculiar arrangement of the wheel within a wheel the balance of the centripetal and centrifugal forces was preserved in the presence of 65,000 revolutions a minute; that is, the velocity of revolutions in these wheels would equal 65,000 revolutions of an ordinary wheel ten feet in diameter in one minute if such a thing were possible."

Sounds like "high-speed worm and gear" are needed to transfer the power from these "accumulators" to the driving fans (or propellers). But, if two accumulators were used, then two worm and gears were necessary. So, if all the parts were made "back East" then perhaps one worm and gear failed during initial testing, requiring the speedy manufacture of replacements by the local San Francisco firm of Kenny and Payton.

Perhaps in an attempt to deflect the spotlight from himself, Dr. Benjamin walked into the Chronicles office on November 24 ("Mars and Venus Under Suspicion," San Francisco Chronicle, November 25, 18986, p. 16) and confessed he was the inventor of the airship. He said he had worked on perfecting a machine for seven years. From the tone of the article, the Chronicle staff apparently did not take his claim too seriously. They failed to grill the good doctor on any details of the airship and its manufacturing and let him walk out of the office without acquiring any additional information. Perhaps the staff was too awe-struck by the doctor's admission to ask any coherent questions.

Remember, this was a time when anything other than birds and kites flying about in the atmosphere was unknown, and the idea of manned flight was considered a superhuman achievement. We can equate the feeling of the times with our thoughts about the first man on the moon— a heroic and seemingly impossible accomplishment for the times.

In the account titled "Supplies for Airship" (chapter 12), an airship crew member advised the observer to just call him Smith. It seems like such an innocuous remark on the surface, yet if the circumstances are probed further, it is amazing what may be uncovered. Let us assume the man's real name was Smith. Can we connect someone by this name to the airships? Not only can we connect Smith to the airships, but we can also connect him to the Sonora Aero Club.

In the same paper as the initial Collins interview, there is an interview with a locally renowned inventor named Dr. C. A. Smith. This Dr. C. A. Smith is the same "Dr. Catlin" identified in the William H. H. Hart interview.

An Inventor's Opinion

Dr. C.A. Smith Has No Doubt That An Airship Is Being Tested

> "Have I an airship? Well, I can't say that I have," said Dr. C.A. Smith, the inventor, when seen in his office in the Spreckles Building last night, "but, I have not reason to doubt that it is an airship the people in this city and other cities have seen in the heavens for the past few nights.
> I have been experimenting on air machines for the past fortyeight years and have invented no less than thirty useful machines some of which have been used in every State of the Union. I know of its practicability as I have had a model running through the air."
> "I expect to have machinery ready for business in the beginning of next April to make a trip across the continent. It will be 160 feet long from bow to stern and 125 cylinder. The main body will be 125 feet long. The front end will be a cone, as it is a scientific fact that a cone presents less resistance in passing through the air than any other solid body. The gas compartments will be in the upper portions of the cylinder and cone, and after being filled with hydrogen and acetylene gas, recently discovered, they will be hermetically sealed. The sheet aluminum to be used is lighter per square foot than the oiled and varnished silk used in making balloons."

"The rear end of the ship will be made like a frustrum of a cone and the air will thus pass freely back to the propeller, which will drive the ship. In the interior will be a cabin for passengers 35 feet by 40feet, entirely portioned off from the gas. In the bow inside of the shell will be a pilothouse, from which the rudders will be operated and controlled. It will have windows, so that the pilot can see in all directions."

"A horizontal rudder of sufficient dimensions will steer the ship up or down, and a vertical rudder will steer it to right or left. Both will be on the stern. The wings will extend the full length of the cylinder and in flight will be used as aeroplanes, like the wings of the larger birds, and in crossing currents of air they will be closed, when in a light atmosphere, too light for the gas, the wings can be utilized to carry the ship up into the atmosphere."

> "There will be a wellhole in the bottom for an anchor and above will be a capstan on which the rope will be wound. The ship will land by deflecting the wings and the horizontal rudder; the propeller will drive the ship forward, the aeroplane, wings and rudder steering it to earth. It will pass above a platform where an anchor rope will be fixed and the captain will then draw it down onto the platform."
> "I can get a Maxim engine which weighs 320 pounds and produce 180 horsepower. The ship will carry from twenty-five to thirty passengers. I calculate the ship will run at a speed of 100 miles per hour and perhaps more."
>
> "As to light, we can have a storage battery to give all that is necessary. The gas will be enclosed in aluminum compartments, so that it cannot escape, and this will insure permanent buoyancy, and as a consequence, absolute safety."
> "I do not know who is the inventor of the airship that people say they see flying through the atmosphere. When it is placed before the public, I think, be seen that it is identical with the one I have described."
> San Francisco Call, ("An Inventor's Opinion," San Francisco Chronicle, November 22, 1896, p. 16).

The appendix A includes an airship patent submitted by a Charles Smith of San Francisco in 1896 that agrees in every detail with the above pronouncements. Either Charles and Catlin Smith are one and the same, or they are father and son.

A description of the horizontal and vertical rudders is detailed in the Chronicle account featuring Smith, along with a description of the vessel's wings and a well hole and capstan that was to be used for an anchor. Recall the story in the Houston Post titled "Anchor of the Airship" (April 28, 1897), which told of an airship losing an anchor in Merkel, Texas, on the night of April 25,1897. That article, as well as the Chronicle article, mentions the rope connecting the anchor to the airship. It was Dr. Smith's intention to use the anchor and capstan to actually pull or lower the airship to Earth upon landing. It appears that was the same maneuver attempted by the airship operators the night it was spotted in Merkel (where it lost its anchor).

Was Dr. Smith an original Sonora Aero Club member? We don't know for sure, but his statements lend a great deal of weight to the supposition. If Dr. Smith had been building airships for forty-eight years, that places him in the right spot (Northern California) and the right time to be an original member of the Sonora Aero Club.

Taking the description of Dr. Smith's airship at face value, it sounds like the firsthand accounts of at least one of the airships encountered in the pastures of Texas in April 1897, five months after Smith's San Francisco Chronicle interview. Did Dr. Smith fulfill his prediction to have an airship ready to fly over the continent in April 1897? And did he fly over the Texas countryside in the early spring of 1897? After examining the necessary records, we can state with a great deal of certainty that Dr. Smith kept his word and he was a participant in the spring 1897 airship mystery.

Continuing the California saga, we now go to a San Francisco Examiner article dated November 25,1896. In this article, William Hart told the reporter he went back east because of some interest in a new light-weight battery. This interest led him to the inventor of the Eastern airship. Although he would not divulge the name, Hart did say the inventor was located in New Jersey and his name had appeared in the California paper in the last three weeks. Mr. Hart stated that it was remarkable that two men working at the opposite ends of the continent should develop two flying machines so much alike. Perhaps, Mr. Hart had never heard of the Sonora Aero Club, which seems to be the connection between the two inventors.

Mr. Hart curtly informed the reporter that he had advised both parties to consolidate their interests, advice Hart claims they heeded. If such a claim is true, we have possibly identified at least three of the airships seen in Texas in April 1897. The Oroville (or Western) airship of Dr. Elmer Benjamin, the New Jersey—Perth Amboy or Goshen, New York—(or Eastern) airship of this new aforementioned inventor, and the San Francisco airship of Dr. C. A. Smith.

The New Jersey inventor by the name of Dr. Solomon Andrews, of Perth Amboy, designed and built a flying machine in 1863! Dr. Andrews submitted the plans for his airship to no less an authority than the United States War Department in the spring of 1862 ("Aerial Navigation," New York Herald, September 8, 1863, p. 3). The War Department was not sufficiently interested and showed no desire to purchase any airships from Dr. Andrews. So, he set about to build the airship with his own funds in the fall of 1862. The New York Herald visited the doctor on several occasions during the airship's manufacturing. When Dr. Andrews made a successful test flight on September 4, 1863, the New York Herald was there to cover the story. According to the accounts, the airship traveled in upward, sweeping spirals at a speed sometimes exceeding 200 miles per hour! Exaggerated? Probably. Truthful? No doubt about it! The incident is too well documented to be denied. Chapter 20 includes the newspaper account of Dr. Solomon's invention.

And what about the fourth airship seen in the skies of 1897 America? In a San Francisco Call article titled "It Flitted Over San Jose" (November 28, 1896, p. 1), former attorney general William Hart announced to a group of professional friends that the inventors intended to immediately start building a second airship in the vicinity of Bolinas. Bolinas is thirty miles northwest of San Francisco. George Collins stated in an interview that the airship, on its maiden voyage on November 17, came to rest on a farm outside San Francisco. Perhaps, it came to rest on the same farm near Bolinas. But, the fourth—and possibly the fifth through the eighth—airship may have been manufactured in "a quite Iowa village."

In another Call article ("Hart's Aerial Inventor Has Three Aerial Fliers," November 29, 18986, p. 1), Hart makes the astounding claim that the inventor he represents actually has three airships. The larger one could accommodate three people and the smaller only one person. The third airship was currently being constructed. According to Hart, this machine was designed to be powered by both gas and electricity.

Several statements of Hart's make this article particularly interesting. The small ship accommodating only one person, presumably the pilot, could be the airship that crashed and burned in Aurora, Texas. Recall the body pieces recovered at Aurora were thought to belong to only one individual. But, I don't think this airship crashed at Aurora. All of the airships that flew in Texas accommodated more than one person. The small, one-man airship may be the airship that exploded in Michigan.

In a Dallas Morning News article ("Was Aboard an Airship," May 16, 1897), George Dunlop states he was introduced to Mr. Scott Warren, a passenger on the airship, and a friend of the inventor—a Mr. Wilson. Of great interest is whether or not any possible relationship existed between Scott Warren and a Mr. W. H. Warren of Hayward, California. Hayward is twenty-seven miles southeast of San Francisco. In a Grass Valley (California) Morning Union article ("Built an Airship," November 29, 18986, p. 4), Mr. Warren states that he built and successfully flew a one-man airship.

Another interesting statement of Hart's is his description of the inventor. Hart described the inventor as a dark-skinned man who was employed as an electrician to a Spanish surnamed general. Other than a reference to a Mexican cook, no other dark-skinned individual is mentioned in any of the airship accounts. This statement seems to be a deliberate falsehood designed to get the reporters off Dr. Benjamin's front porch. Up until the November 29, 1896, San Francisco Call article, reporters were camping on the front porch of the boarding house where Benjamin previously lived. On the thirtieth, Dr. Benjamin packed all his belongings and moved out.

In a San Francisco Examiner article ("Airships Now Fly in Flocks," November 25, 1896, p. 1), General Hart discloses the existence of an East Coast airship, distinct from the Benjamin airship. Hart proclaimed that his interest in the East Coast airship was due to a storage battery used in the airship. He called the battery a Fargo battery. Hart professed he united the East and West Coast airship interests because the two airships' designs complemented each other. When asked where the East Coast inventor was located, he replied, "Well, I think there is no harm in telling you. He is in New Jersey. His name has been printed in the papers within three weeks. I shall not come closer to identification of him than that. I saw him and saw his airship while I was East. My interest in the storage battery that he uses brought us together."Thomas Alva Edison's Edison Battery Company was located in Bloomfield, New Jersey. Edison was the most prolific battery inventor, receiving 147 patents for battery design and development. Was Edison the inventor of the "Fargo battery?" Hart's comment "I saw him and saw his airship" implies the inventor of the battery and the inventor of the (East coast) airship were one and the same. Yet, Edison publicly proclaimed, "At best air ships would only be toys" (chapter 17, "Mysterious Airship").

Tantalizing questions concerning the California connection remain to be answered. Who was the mysterious New Jersey inventor? Was Dr. Smith a founding member of the Sonora Aero Club? Also, could Dr. Elmer H. Benjamin's uncle have been an original Sonora Aero Club member? Was the George Collins client who assembled his airship at his aunt's home near Oroville also the nephew of Dr. Francis Wakelee Benjamin? Seems like all fingers point toward Dr. Elmer H. Benjamin.

The first California sighting occurred on November 17. The last California sighting occurred on the twenty-second. Benjamin was known to be in Oroville on the fifteenth and sixteenth. His whereabouts between the sixteenth and twenty-third are a mystery. On the twentythird, he packed his things at his rooming house at 633 Ellis Street ("Have You Seen It in the Sky?" San Francisco Examiner, November 24, 18986, p. 9) and left for Oroville. Perhaps Dr. E. H. Benjamin had nothing to do with the airships, but it is easy to place him in the right places at the right time. And if we integrate the comments of former attorney general William Hart with these suspicions, it is even easier to finger Benjamin as airship inventor extraordinaire. Toward that end, we will investigate the backgrounds of the individuals identified in the airship accounts and see if a sensible story emerges.

IN SEARCH OF THE AIRSHIP PLAYERS

The airship accounts mention various individuals—witnesses and crew members. It is not my intention to positively confirm the existence of every airship witness. Others have performed that tedious task and confirmed that the witnesses were real people who lived and worked in the places mentioned. Because previous investigators quickly leapt to the conclusion that the airship mystery was either a hoax or a mass hysteria phenomenon, no other researcher seems to have closely followed the historical trail left behind by the crew members We will examine the personal, professional, financial, and political relationships of the individuals identified as crew members in the newspaper accounts. From what is left of the scant paper trail, we will attempt to determine how the airship crew members relate to the airship story and to each other.

Were these real people? Who were they? Where did they come from? What were their personal and professional relationships to each other? How did they come to be together in the fall of 1896 and spring of 1897? Were they employed in the capacity identified in the newspaper articles? Did they live and work where the newspapers indicated? Or, were they figments of reporters, or telegraphers, overtaxed imaginations? It seems very reasonable to believe that if these men were who they were portrayed to be in the newspaper accounts, then the airship story gains an incredible amount of authenticity. In that case, the airship story moves from the realm of lore, legend, and reputed hoaxes into the sphere of truth, reality, and history. With this prospect in mind, we begin our search for the people.

While some crew members left a moderate paper trail to follow, others left little, and still others cannot be sufficiently identified at this time to even determine who they really were. The information in this chapter stitches together the pieces of the crew member's lives that were unearthed while investigating this mystery. The colorful mosaic of seemingly disparate lives comes together for a brief moment of historical glory.

Several researchers have poked into the background of a couple of the main characters, namely, Wilson, Dolbear, and Tillman. The meager results of their searches makes it obvious that no one has seriously reviewed the historical records that these individuals left behind. Else they would have discovered various interconnections between the individuals and interesting facets of their lives. For example, was there any way that the East Coast Wilsons could have met the West Coast Benjamins long before their interests in airships united them in 1896? The answer is yes. I will demonstrate the likelihood of their meeting thirty-plus years before they flew the skies of Texas in 1897 via not just one possible venue of contact but two.

Evidence places Dr. F. W. Benjamin forty-two miles from Goshen, New York (purported home of the Wilsons), in 1864 when he reenlisted in his Civil War military unit. Is this just a coincidence? Did F. W. Benjamin meet any of the Wilson clan while so near Goshen? Answers to such questions are speculative, but by now, the coincidences are becoming far too many to ignore. We will explore many more such coincidences in this chapter.

Various historical documentation was searched for information concerning the airship members. Where information was found, the source is noted.

LOOKING FOR THE WILSONS

We have several clues for identifying the Wilsons involved in the airship mystery. In the chapter 10 "Navigator Wilson/Left a Message for His Friend Akers" account, we have the Wilson place of residence: ". . . who gave his name as Wilson, and place of residence as Goshen, N.Y.,..." In the chapter 16 "History of the Ship" account, the observer claims that "The investors were Hiram Wilson, a native of New York and son of Willard H. Wilson, assistant master mechanic of the New York Central Railroad,. .."

Since the Wilsons were father and son, we would expect to find them together until Hiram reached his majority. The New York U.S. census data for 1840 to 1860 yields the following information:

1860 WILSON W. H.	New York County NY	1043 19 W. Nyc District 2
1860 WILSON HIRAM	New York County NY	229 18 W. Nyc District 6

Note: Wilson's census records are abbreviated.

The Willard and Hiram Wilson identified in these New York census records are probably brothers or uncle and nephew, not father and son, and the Hiram involved with the airship seems to be relative young in 1898—say, in his mid-thirties to mid-forties. Our Hiram was probably born sometime in the 1850s. Recall Sheriff Akers thought Hiram to be about twenty-four years old when he met him in 1876.

So, we clearly have a Willard and a Hiram Wilson residing in New York at the outbreak of hostilities leading to the War Between the States. An examination of the Yankee muster records for Willard Wilson includes two entries of interest:

Willard Wilson #1 was discharged for disability at Belle Plain, Virginia, on March 31, 1863. Disability in those pre-modern medicine days typically meant an amputated arm or leg or some other such debilitating cause. It is not likely such an individual would, thirty-four years later, design, build, and fly airships around the country. Therefore, we can estimate the Willard Wilson of interest to us is Willard Wilson #2.

When looking at the war records of the people associated with the 1897 airships, the 24th New York Infantry Regiment and the Third New York Light Artillery Battalion appear regularly. The 24th New York Regiment served in the same army as the Third New York Light Artillery throughout the war. Both outfits served in the Army of the Potomac and fought in the major eastern-theater land battles. However, both units were assigned to different corps. The Third New York Light Artillery served primarily in the Sixth and 24th Army Corps, while the 24th New York Regiment served primarily in the Third Army Corps. The 24th New York Regiment also saw some detached duty in the army of the Shenandoah. It does not seem likely —given that a typical corps usually numbered around 20,000 men—that Wilson, serving in the Twenty-fourth, would have met any members of the Third New York Light Artillery Regiment during the war, but it is possible.

Where was Wilson after the war? According to comments made by Hiram Wilson in the airship accounts, as substantiated by Sheriff C. C. Akers, Willard and his son were in Texas in the mid-1870s. Looking for the Wilson duo in the 1870 census record, we do not find them in Texas. However, we do find that the 1870 California census shows a Hiram and a Willard Wilson living in California.

The 1880 census yields a W. H. Wilson in Texas. Hiram stated they lived in Fort Worth. Therefore, the 1880 Texas census listing a W. H. Wilson for Tarrant County must be our man.

From the census data it appears Willard and Hiram Wilson left New York State for California sometime after the Civil War before journeying to Texas in the mid-1870s. Wilson was said to be the master mechanic for a New York railroad. The New York Central Railroad is now part of the Conrail system. Employment records for Wilson are not available. Did railroad business take him from state to state, or was he going about airship business? In 1868, the nation's shores were connected via iron rails. It is entirely plausible to find a railroad man looking for opportunity in northern California around 1870.

THE OROV1LLE, CALIFORNIA, BENJAMINS

In several California newspaper accounts, George Collins claimed he represented the interests of the airship inventor Elmer H. Benjamin. Collins stated that Benjamin hailed from Carmel, Maine, and had relatives living in Oroville, California. According to the published information, E. H. Benjamin migrated to California around 1889. (Benjamin "came to California seven years ago to perfect his design.")

We will go in search of Benjamin and his relatives by examining pertinent historical documents both in Maine and California. A search of the census records for Carmel, Maine, yields the following data from the 1880 census record.

1880 United States Census

Occ = occupation

From the census record, we can ascertain Elmer H. Benjamin was born in either 1860 or 1861, depending upon the date the census was enumerated (June 5, 1880) and his day and month of birth. Note his father's profession as a physician.

The International Genealogical Index-North America contains a listing for an Elmer E. Benjamin, born August 27, 1872 in Carmel, Maine, to the parents of John and Orilla (Austin or Osmand) Benjamin. John and Orilla were married on March 3,1856, in Carmel, Maine. This information is noted here since future researchers may ponder if there is any relationship between the two Elmers.

A search of the California census records for Elmer H. Benjamin produces the following data from the 1930 census record.

The 1930 U.S. Federal Census lists an Elmer Benjamin living in Palo Alto, California. His age is given as fifty-nine. Since the date of the census is April 5, 1930, Benjamin's birth year, according to the census record, would be either 1870 or 1871. His occupation is listed as dentist. Furthermore, his birthplace is given as Maine. Although I think his age is incorrectly stated on the census, this appears to be our man! His spouse's name is Marie and her birthplace is Mississippi.

There is a discrepancy among the Elmer H. Benjamin data we have. The discrepancy is Elmer Benjamin's age in 1897. The California newspaper accounts place his age variously as either forty or forty-seven (see chapter 19). The 1930 census gives his age as fifty-nine, making him twenty-five in 1897. There is no doubt the Elmer Benjamin identified in the 1930 census is the correct Elmer Benjamin. I think the 1930 California census lists Benjamin's age incorrectly. The 1880 census identifies his birth year as 1860 or 1861; therefore, in 1930, he would be sixty-nine, not fifty-nine. If such is the case, when Benjamin was flying airships in the fall of 1896, he was approximately thirty-five years old. I cannot fathom why George D. Collins identified Benjamin's age as "about 40." Perhaps, he appeared to be about forty in 1897.

I did not find Benjamin in the California Death Index (1940-1997), so either he died between 1930 and 1940, or he moved from California.

We know from the California newspaper articles that Dr. Francis W. Benjamin of Oroville was Elmer H. Benjamin's uncle. We will look around Oroville for Benjamin's relatives. Besides establishing the existence of Dr. Francis Benjamin, we have an ulterior motive for exploring this topic that will soon be clear. Oroville is in the physical, political, and administrative domain of Butte County. The 1860 California census index for Butte County lists the following Benjamins (residences are not given): was born in New York in 1823. We do not know when John migrated to California, but the Butte County census does place him in the county in 1860. Why did he migrate from New York? Was it because of gold fever, or was he in some manner connected with the Sonora Aero Club? Recall Dellschau's cryptic comments about the strong association between the Sonora Aero Club and the NYMZA, an unidentifiable acronym. The NYMZA was a mysterious New York organization involved in scientific research of a—what would now be called—dubious nature, such as "free energy."

There are no Benjamins listed in Butte County in the 1870 census. There are eleven Benjamins in the 1880 California census, but John is the only one with an Oroville place of residence. This is not the same John Benjamin enumerated in the 1860 census. The John listed on Table 32 is identified in the census as black. The John given on Table 31 is identified as white. Given the stated differences in race and the differing ages (two years), the two men are not the same individual.

We cannot peruse the census records to see which Benjamins lived in northern California in 1890, because, unfortunately, the 1890 census records were destroyed in the Commerce Building fire. However, another source for the records of 1890 is the Butte County Great Register.

Dr. F. W. Benjamin first appears in Oroville in 1884, when he registered to vote (according to the 1890 Butte County Great Register). The Dr. Francis Wakelee Benjamin listed in the table is the uncle of one Dr. E. H. Benjamin, formerly of Carmel, Maine, and San Francisco and the inventor/builder of California airships. Dr. F. W. Benjamin practiced medicine in Oroville for a number of years. While we cannot determine exactly when he arrived there, it is clear from the historical record that he was living and practicing his profession in Oroville in the 1880s. Note that Elmer's father and uncle shared a common profession as physicians.

Possibly our most fruitful source of information concerning Dr. F. W. Benjamin is his Civil War muster record. The roll data clearly shows Benjamin working during the war as an assistant surgeon. The unit he served with was U Co., 3rd New York Light Artillery (LA) Regiment. Note the roll lists his place of enlistment as Poughkeepsie, New York. Poughkeepsie is forty-two miles northeast of Goshen, New York, in Orange County. As you will see, Dr. Benjamin's muster record may be the glue that binds the pieces of this story together.

Note: F. W. Benjamin is conspicuously missing. One would think the local physician would be buried in the town cemetery. But he is not. Is it possible his remains lie at the bottom of the Atlantic Ocean, somewhere near Beaumont or Staten Island as the result of an airship disaster?

To recapitulate, in 1897 three Benjamin's of some interest to us lived in Butte County, California: John was seventy-two, Hector was age 75, and Francis was 56. It is entirely possible that these three Benjamins were brothers or cousins or some combination thereof (born in Blooming Grove, Orange County, New York). The census records show all three men residing near each other in Orange County at differing times.

What is important about Orange County, New York? It is the purported home of another family of great interest in this story: the Wilsons (who did not leave a well-documented paper trail in Orange County). Note the distance from Blooming Grove, New York, to Goshen New York: a mere 8.3 miles. It appears that the Orange County, New York, Benjamins migrated to Butte County, California, between 1860 and 1870. Goshen is located in the political subdivision of Orange County, and the Wilsons claimed residence in or near Goshen before the Civil War.

So, it also seems entirely probable that the Benjamins and Wilsons were intimate acquaintances long before the country was startled by the sight of flying machines in the nightly skies. Some of the older Benjamins weathered the War Between the States in New York, while others left for California in the 1840s and 1850s, perhaps seeking their fortunes in the gold fields. The fact that, in the 1890 Butte County Great Register, two of the Benjamins listed their occupations as miners lends credence to the theory that the Benjamins migrated from New York to Oroville to seek their fortunes in the California gold fields.

The Yuba, Sutter, Colusa, Butte, and Tehama Counties, California Directory, dated 1885, lists a Francis W. Benjamin working in Oroville as a physician and surgeon. This Francis W. Benjamin is the uncle of one Elmer H. Benjamin.

Francis Benjamin's Oroville Record

Name	Occupation	Location	City	State	Year
Francis W Benjamin	physician & surgeon	office adjoining Roger's drug store	Oroville	Ca.	1885

We know John Benjamin of New York was not Elmer H. Benjamin's father, as the 1880 census data shows Elmer's father was born in Maine. Was John Benjamin of New York a relative of F. W. and E. H. Benjamin? I cannot prove or disprove any family connection at the moment, but I strongly suspect there is one. The very fact that the New York Benjamins migrated to Oroville around 1850, then later Francis and, still later, his nephew Elmer appear in Oroville lends credence to the suspicion these Benjamins were family.

I do find the fact that Prof. Samuel E. Tillman, another character involved in the airship mystery, retired to Maine interestingly coincidental.

LOOKING FOR WILLIAM H. H. HART

William H. H. Hart's existence in 1897 is easy to prove. He had recently completed a four-year term as California's attorney general. Holding such an esteemed position in the state government should suffice to prove beyond any doubt that William H. H. Hart was a real person with more than passing political connections. But, we want to explore in greater depth who Hart was and where he came from. We are motivated to dig deeper into Hart's past for several reasons. One author scoffs at William Henry Harrison Hart's claim to have been a boy-soldier. Because the author does not believe Hart's claims of being a fighter and soldier when he was thirteen years old, he does not believe his claims to represent and unite the various airship interests. I will demonstrate Hart was everything he claimed to be.

We are discovering that as we delve into each of these individual's backgrounds, we stumble across more and more similarities and intersections of their lives. While some of the material concerning the individuals may seem irrelevant, ultimately you will see the relationships.

The following is Hart's official California state biography:

> An English immigrant at age four, he was captured by the Blackhawk Indians, then later orphaned at age 11. With his turbulent upbringing, he directed his youthful energy and desire for danger by joining the Secret Service at age 14. He bravely fought in the violent battlefields of the Civil War. Elected as Attorney General on November 4, 1890, and took office January 5, 1891. Died on May 12,1903, at the age of 55 (A History of the California Attorney General's Office [Sacramento: State of California, 1983]).

William H. H. Hart was born in Yorkshire, England, on January 25, 1848. The James Hart family emigrated from Yorkshire to Iowa on the ship Columbia, arriving in New York on January 2, 1857. According to the ship's manifest, young William was seven years old, not four as stated in his official California biography. But, given a birth year of 1848, he was in fact twenty-three days short his ninth birthday. His father, James, continued to Illinois where relatives awaited him and his family.

The Blackhawk Indians captured young Hart in 1861 and held him captive for six months. In the raid upon their homestead, young Hart's father, mother, and siblings died. Hart supposedly joined the secret service when he was either thirteen or fourteen. The secret service, as we know it, was not organized until 1865, when Hart would have been about fifteen. There is no doubt young Hart joined the federal service at thirteen. According to one source (Builders of Our Nation: Men of 1913. Chicago, IL: np, 1914, p. 236), Hart enlisted in the army on January. 23, 1862.I cannot find that muster record. However, I do find two other muster records for Hart.

It is known Hart fought at the battles of Vicksburg, Fort Donelson, Shiloh, Champion Hill, and Missionary Ridge. At Missionary Ridge, on November 25, 1863, Hart was wounded in three places while carrying dispatches from General Grant to General Sherman. Only trustworthy men were selected as dispatch riders. The fact that Hart was on the commanding general's staff as a dispatch rider implies he already had an established reputation as a young man of distinction at the age of thirteen. His assignment to General Grant's headquarters may have been associated with his "secret service." The Overland Quarterly (1896) says he was "under special orders" when he served General Grant.

After the Civil War, Hart studied criminal law in the office of Judge W. E. Leffingwell in Lyons, Iowa; commercial law in office of Hon. A. R. Cotton of Lyons; and real-estate and corporate law under Boardman and Brown in Marshalltown, Iowa. Hart received his law degree in 1870 then served as city attorney for De Witt, Iowa, from 1870 to 1871.

Lyons is now a suburb of Clinton, Iowa. It is 1.5 miles north of downtown Clinton and rests on the banks of the Mississippi River.

De Witt is in Clinton County. De Witt is 22 miles west of Lyons.

Marshalltown is in Marshall County. Marshalltown is 150 miles west of Lyons.

Keokuk, Iowa, is 158 miles south of Lyons.

Hart migrated to San Francisco in 1873. His law partner in San Francisco was Julius Foster Fassett. William and Julius were also brothers-in-law. William married Loretta Hedden sometime before 1880, and Julius married her sister, Anna Hedden. Both Loretta and Anna were born in Iowa. On August 11,1888, William and Loretta gave birth to their only child, Lowell J. Hart.

William Hart was elected California attorney general in 1890. He served from January 1891 until January 1895.

The following two tables list Harts of interest to us in the census records:

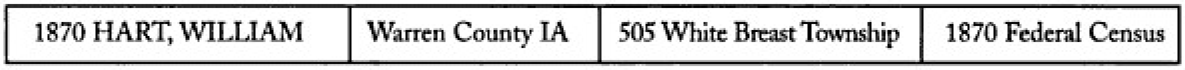
Harts in Iowa



1870 HART, WILLIAM	Warren County IA	505 White Breast Township	1870 Federal Census

White Breast, Iowa, is 53 miles south of Des Moines.

Hart enlisted in the army January 23, 1862, and was honorably discharged February 1866. Note the day of Hart's enlistment—two days before his fourteenth birthday, assuming he was born on January 25,1848. This is our man. Supporting this premise is Attorney General Hart's contention he served in the Union forces when he was thirteen years old. However, I can find no official muster record for Hart in January 1862. Hart's official state biography says he joined the secret service at the beginning of the war. Yet, the secret service, as we know it today, was not founded until 1865. It is known Hart was a courier for Grant until he was wounded at Missionary Ridge. Between November 26, 1863, and May 1864 when he joined the 44th Iowa Infantry Regiment, Hart was probably recovering from wounds received at Missionary Ridge.

Hart's widow applied for a pension in 1910. She included on the pension form the two regiments in which he served, the 44th Iowa Infantry Regiment (May 16, 1864-September 15, 1864) and the 147th Illinois Infantry Regiment (February 03, 1865-January 20, 1866). Muster records vouch for Hart's service in these two regiments. Both of these regiments were "homeguard" types of regiments. "Homeguard" regiments were garrison units and saw little field action. "Homeguard" regiments generally consisted of young, old, and infirm recruits. Such home guard service may indeed confirm the supposition Hart was recuperating from the wounds he received at Missionary Ridge.

Initially, in the race to swell the ranks of the army, and because no one—North or South—thought the war would last long, men were enlisted for ninety days only. After the first battle of Bull Run, July 21, 1861, Northern war planners realized the war was probably going to last somewhat longer, initiating variously 100-, 120-, then 180-day enlistments before finally settling into two- or three-year enlistments. However, homeguard-type units still enlisted men for short periods of time as determined by real or imagined risks to hearth and home. Young Hart, enlisting in May 1864, was a 100-day warrior before reenlisting in the 147th Illinois.

Hart's enlistment age is somewhat exaggerated on the 44th Iowa muster record, perhaps to convince a skeptical recruiting officer of his fitness for service.

Notice Hart claimed residence in Clinton County when he enlisted in 1864. De Witt is in Clinton County. After the war, Hart studied law in De Witt. Perhaps, Hart was living in De Witt when he enlisted.

The 44th Iowa Infantry was a 100-day regiment. Of 867 officers and men, one man was killed and 18 died of disease. The regiment mustered in at Davenport on June 1, 1864, and mustered out at Davenport on September 15, 1864. The regiment did garrison duty at Memphis and La Grange, Tennessee. Hart's company, Company F, was recruited from Clinton and Jackson Counties.

Because he did not believe Hart's claims of being a fighter and soldier when he was thirteen years old, Daniel Cohen, author of The Great Airship Mystery, scoffed at William Henry Harrison Hart's claims to have represented and united the various airship interests. He asserts that William H. H. Hart is a liar about his military service, and therefore, everything he professes to know about the airships is a lie. Cohen forms his opinion of Hart on Hart's claim to be in the military at age thirteen—something that seems impossible today. The biographical sketch of Hart given in Important Men ofNineteen-Thirteen buttresses Hart's claim, with him having enlisted two days prior to his fourteenth birthday on January 23,1862. His official state biography states he originally went into the secret service in 1862. Although many young boys served in the Northern army in such capacities as drummer, bugler, or other primarily noncombatant roles, it would be remarkable for a thirteen year old to serve in the secret service. In any case, from the public record, we know that young Hart saw a good portion of the war looking out from the serious end of a musket, certainly from 1862 onward.

Connecting the airship players together is important to building a strong case for the airships' existence. In 1849, a John H. Hart of Goshen, New York (the Wilsons' hometown) and his cousin Matthew traveled to the California gold fields via ship (John Linville Hall, Around the Horn in '49: The Journal of the Hartford Union Mining and Trading Company (San Francisco: The Book Club of California, 1928), 189). I have not ascertained the familial relationship, if any, between this John Hart and the Harts of Iowa. Did William Hart have relatives in California prior to his migration to the state? One Augustus L. Hart of San Francisco was a California attorney general in the 1880s. Was William Hart related to him? The tendency for people to migrate where their relatives had gone before was a constant theme in the 1800s in America. That said, it should be no surprise that young Hart, motherless and fatherless by 1873, would move to the Golden State to be near his father's brother. A question looking for an answer: Was Augustus L. Hart an uncle or near relative of William H. H. Hart?

There are forty-six William Hart's listed as residing in Iowa in the census records from 1790 to 1890. There are no Francis or Elmer Benjamins listed in those same Iowa censuses. It is unlikely that the Harts (William's immediate family) and Benjamins were acquainted, because one family lived in Iowa and the other in New York. However, there may be a connection between the Benjamins of Goshen, the Wilsons of Goshen, and the Harts (John and Matthew) of Goshen.

Another important connection to be made in the airship mystery's foundation is the location of the "quiet Iowa village." Where did William Henry Harrison Hart's father settle in Iowa? A "quiet Iowa village" named Keokuk. James Hart's 1860 census record, given in Table 41, documents his residence in Keokuk in 1860. Later on, we will discover another airship inventor named Marcellus McGary, who lived in Memphis, Missouri. McGary built an airship in Keokuk, Iowa, in 1893 and flew in it in a public demonstration in November 1896, the month the California boys chose to introduce their airships to the good citizens of northern California.

The 1889-90 San Francisco directory clearly shows William H. H. Hart living and practicing law in that city. According to a descendant of Hart's law partner, Julius Foster Fassett, who was married to an Anna Hedden, Hart was married to Loretta Hedden. Loretta and Anna were sisters, making Julius and William brothers-in-law. Though the search to contact Hart's descendants has been unsuccessful, Fassett's descendants revealed that there are no known papers or records from the law practice.

The 1889 San Francisco city directory lists Hart as the secretary of several mining companies. The "A. T" in the second column of the bottom row of Table 43 stands for Arizona Territory. Any guesses as to who was the principal owner of these two mines? None other than George Hearst, perhaps the richest man in America in 1890.

While living and practicing law in San Francisco, Hart became a member of the Grand Army of the Republic (G.A.R., Geo. H. Thomas Post No. 2, of San Francisco), Masons, I.O.O.F., and the California Bar Association. His residence when he died was Palo Alto and his office was located in the Monadnook Building, San Francisco, California.

A patent application for an airship by Samuel West of San Francisco, patent number 553,634, dated January 28,1896, is included in the appendix. The West patent application is noteworthy because William H. H. Hart of San Francisco is assigned one-half of the patent rights. Hart was, in truth and fact, the legal representative of airship inventors.

Immigrant; Indian captive; orphan; boy soldier; student; attorney; migrant; settler; California attorney general; member of the board of directors of prestigious and financially lucrative companies; active in Union veterans' movements, charitable and professional organizations; and esteemed community leader, William Henry Harrison Hart was an influential and powerful attorney in 1896 San Francisco. Apparently, Hart was everything he claimed to be, including the legal representative for the East- and West-Coast airship interests.

LOOKING FOR AUGUSTUS L. HART

Born in Bloomfield, Indiana, on October 15, 1849, Augustus Loring Hart apparently resided in Linn County, Iowa, for some period of time before journeying to California He was a former California state attorney general from January 5, 1880, until January 7, 1883. Could he have been related to William H. H. Hart? Perhaps, William is Augustus's nephew. It seems reasonable to believe young William Hart would migrate to a city where an influential relative could assist him in his profession.

Augustus Hart's father died sometime between 1860 and 1870. The exact date and cause of his death was unavailable. Augustus died in Livermore, California, in 1901.

LOOKING FOR U.S. MARSHAL WILLIAMS

In the chapter 3 account "McKnight's Airship," the paper reported that "A man named McKnight has been working on an airship at U.S. Marshal Williams' ranch . . ." (Dallas Morning News, April 10, 1897, p. 4). In the chapter 11 account "At Conroe," the newspaper reported,"... they were disturbed by a call from three strangers who said they were from San Francisco, Cal. They were most reliable gentlemen ... They had left the ship at Williams ranch near town and walked in to get supper by way of a change." Is this ranch owner the same U.S. Marshal Williams of Paris, Texas? Conroe is near the home of the Texas state prison system at Huntsville.

But, just who is Marshal Williams? John Shelby Williams was appointed U.S. marshal of the Eastern District of Texas for a period of service from January 15, 1894, to February 28,1898. Marshal Williams' territory included Conroe. Perhaps he owned a second ranch near Conroe. John Shelby Williams, Jr., was born in Sonoma County, California, in 1848, the son of John S. and Maria Louisa (Gordon) Williams. In 1849 John and Maria moved to Butte County. His father died in May, soon after moving. In 1850 Maria married Lindsay Carson, a Butte County man, and they were living in Sonoma County in 1880. U . S. Marshal John Williams, Jr., was raised in Butte County and left for Texas in 1870. A birth year of 1848 would place him in the same age group as many other airship characters, such as William Hart and Dr. Elmer Benjamin, who also have strong Butte County connections. The information source for John Shelby Williams (Sr. and Jr.) comes from the California Pioneer Register and Index 1542-1848, page 384. From the historical record, it appears extremely probable that U.S. Marshal John Shelby Williams and the Butte County, California, airship crowd were longtime acquaintances.

The 1880 census record shows that John Shelby Williams, Jr., was living in Lamar County, Texas, and additional information has him living in Red River County in 1890—a county immediately east of Lamar County. Paris, Texas, is located in Lamar County.

For the record, a John S. Williams is listed in the 1870 Fannin County census. Fannin County is immediately west of Lamar County, but this Williams, apparently, is not our man. According to Tom Scott, county historian, this Williams died in 1871, had a brother named Thomas, and was from Virginia. But, there may have been a family connection between John Shelby and the Fannin County Williams.

It is reasonable to believe the airship captains would choose to keep their vessels out of sight on the secluded ranch of a longtime friend who could legally enforce a no-trespassing edict. A search of Fannin County deed records reveals several Williams' who owned property in and around Bonham. Only one John Williams with sufficient acreage during the right time period to be of interest to us shows up in the deed records. This John Williams, who owned seventy-six acres located between Bonham and Ladonia, appears to be the owner of the "Williams ranch" reported in the newspaper account. In the illustration giving the location of Williams' ranch, it is identified by the circle between Ladonia and Bonham.

The legal description of the Williams property is "P.A. Hulsey, E. H. Sebastian, and Frank Sebastian to John Williams for $200.00 part of the survey of one league and one labor granted to Daniel Davis ... on the waters of the Sulphur River 76 acres. November 29, 1880" {Fannin County Deed Book 10, p. 378).

We estimated the general area of the airships' daytime lair using a tried-and-true mathematical method called triangulation. The estimate pinpoints the lair somewhat north and west of Bonham. This estimate comes from shooting a back azimuth using sighting information from the newspaper accounts—an approximation, as several factors influence the results. The most obvious problem with shooting a back azimuth is the assumption that the object was traveling in a straight line. Wind and course changes can make such an approach to determining the flight origination of airships somewhat inaccurate. The back azimuth estimate is a "in the ballpark" estimate. We were certainly in the ballpark with this one. The back-azimuth estimate was off by only about fifteen miles! The evidence identifying John Shelby Williams' ranch as the location of the airships' daytime lair is incontrovertible.

LOOKING FOR SOLOMON ANDREWS

While the thought of an airship flying around the sky in 1897 at speeds of 100-plus miles per hour and at altitudes of 10,000-plus feet may seem astounding, the fact is that others were flying the skies of America and Europe sometime before 1897. The first "officially recognized" airship to be powered by a mechanical engine was built and flown by a Frenchman, Henri Giffard, in 1852.

In the United States, Dr. Solomon Andrews would serve as an early inventor of airships. Andrews, thrice mayor of Perth Amboy, New Jersey, was born in 1806 and died on October 20, 1872. Obviously, Dr. Andrews was not a member of the 1897 airship team. But he may have contributed greatly to their organization and achievements, and it is even likely that he was their mentor and inspiration. Like several other characters in this saga, Dr. Andrews was a prolific inventor.

Solomon Andrews was an M.D. and served on the Sanitary Commission during the Civil War. He was, for a time, health officer of his hometown, Perth Amboy, New Jersey, where he developed the town's first sewerage system to help fight cholera and yellow fever. Andrews created, among many other useful items, a lock, a sewing machine, a barrel maker, a fumigator, a velocipede, a gas lamp, forging presses, a kitchen stove, an airship (called the Aeron), and a pipe that would "filter out harmful substances" from tobacco.

He purchased the old army barracks in Perth Amboy, New Jersey, in 1847 and converted the dilapidated wooden structure into the Inventor's Institute, where he was joined by many other inventors. Because of his great interest in flying, Dr. Andrews later changed the name (and the focus) of the organization to the Aerial Navigation Company. This company was probably responsible for one somewhat famous 1849 New York Herald advertisement that offered airship transportation to the California gold fields. According to the advertisement, a prospective miner could be in California in just a couple of days versus the threemonth boat trip or the six-month overland journey. A question worth asking: Was the Inventor's Institute, or Aerial Navigation Company, the precursor of the Sonora Aero Club? Andrews had an office in New York City at 11 Walker Street. It is known that men of wealth visited with Dr. Andrews and invested their money with him. The Inventor's Institute may very well be the mysterious NYMZA Dellschau mentioned as the financial sponsor of the Sonora Aero Club.

Also, in 1847, Dr. Andrews performed an incredible publicity stunt that gained the attention of the country. A successful inventor, he chained a locked trunk containing $1,000 (a huge sum in 1847) to a lamppost in downtown New York City. Then he advertised for any person to pick the lock and claim the $1,000 as their reward. For three months, many people tried—perhaps, every safe cracker and locksmith in the city. No one succeeded. From this triumphant demonstration, he secured a lucrative contract to supply locks to the national government. There can be no doubt the demonstration gained Andrews many new contacts and investors in the business world, which probably helped him obtain financing for his aerial navigation experiments.

In a letter dated August 9, 1862, Dr. Andrews wrote President Lincoln, suggesting he could "produce an aerostat for reconnaissance, if nothing more, in aid of the armies of the Union" (Mary Kingsley, "The Flying Jerseyman, Dr. Solomon Andrews of Perth Amboy," Proceeding of the New Jersey Historical Society (July 1954): 169). Lincoln liked the idea and asked the War Department to keep him informed of Dr. Andrews' progress. Lincoln further requested eyewitness accounts of the progress and test flights of Dr. Andrews' airship.

"The machine was completed and made her first flight in June, 1863" (Roger B. Whitman, "He Flew an Airship Before the Wrights Were Born!" Popular Science, (January 1932): 13) Dr. Andrews' airship flew into the wind on its maiden voyage, reaching an altitude of 200 feet and landing safely. The motorless airship worked and was navigable but had some problems with control. After completing refinements, Andrews tested it again, with promising results. Determining the ship ready for public observation, and probably keeping in mind the president's desire to have eyewitness accounts of the airship's success, Andrews invited the press to witness a flight of the Aeron on September 4, 1863. A reporter from the New York Herald was obviously impressed:

> AERIAL NAVIGATION. / An Extraordinary Invention— The Air Navigated Successfully-The Great Air Ships— Incidents of Their Trial Trips.
> We have this week the pleasure to record the success of the most extraordinary invention of the age, if not the most so of any the world ever saw—at least the greatest stride in invention ever made by a single individual.
> In October last Dr. Solomon Andrews, of Perth Amboy, NJ, commenced the construction of a war aerostat, for reconnoitering purposes, on his own personal responsibility, not being able, after submitting his plans to the War Department, to make the honorable Secretary of War "see the utility" of a machine which would go over into [] and reconnoitre the force and position of the enemy. His plan showed on the face of them to any one not stupid that the machine could not do otherwise than go ahead in any direction in which the bow was pointed, and that, too, with any amount of power or force which might be desired, and which greenbacks would readily procure. The power required and the propelling apparatus added but little weight to the aerostat, whether of large or small dimensions; consequently it did not increase the dimensions of the aerostat beyond that of balloons of ordinary construction, much less in size than many that are now made. The machine made by Mr. Andrews would carry up three men in addition to all the fixtures and paraphernalia for its forward movement. IT contained twenty-six thousand cubic feet of hydrogen gas. It carried him, weighing one hundred and seventy-two pounds, and to hundred and fifty-six pounds of ballast.

Upon his invitation last spring we have sent our reporters at three different times to witness his experiments with his machine, and have watched his progress with great interest.

Its form was that of three cegars pointed at both, secured together at their longitudinal equators, covered by a net, and supporting by one hundred and twenty cords a car sixteen feet below under its center..

The car was twelve feet long, made of basket work, and was 16 inches wide at the bottom. The aerostat, or cylindroids, were made of varnished linen, like ordinary balloons.

On Friday, the 4th instant, he made his last experiment, and demonstrated to an admiring crowd the possibility of going against the wind, and of guiding her in any and every direction with a small rudder having only seventeen square feet of surface. He made no long flight in one straight line, lest his modus operandi aboard be divulged; but by a most ingenious plan demonstrated her capabilities beyond all possibility of doubt, whilst he prevented a public knowledge of his method of propelling.

After a few short flights, to satisfy himself and a few friends that all was right, and that she would do all he had contemplated, he set her off in a spiral course upward, she going at a rate of not less than 120 miles per hour, and describing circles in the air of more than one and a half miles in circumference. She made twenty revolutions before she entered the upper strata of clouds and was lost to view. She passed through the first strata of dense white clouds, about two miles high, scattering them as she entered in all direction. In her upward flight could be distinctly seen her rapid movement in a contrary direction to the moving clouds, and as she came before the wind passing by them with great celerity. As she was distinctly seen thus to move, both below and above the clouds on the clear blue sky at 5:00 o'clock p.m., with the sun shinning clear upon her, there could be no mistake or optical delusion to consider.

As to her propelling power and motive apparatus, it behooves us not now to speak. It might be considered contraband of war, or affording aid and comfort to the enemy, for with such a machine in the hands of Jeff Davis the armies around Washington would be powerless to preserve the capitol.

We think Dr. Andrews deserves more praise for the patriotic ingenuity with which he has preserved his secret, and yet tried his grand experiment in the open air before the public, than even that manifested in the conception and construction of his machine. Of that and its beautiful simplicity we may have occasion to speak hereafter. We have the documents (New York Herald, September 8,1863, p. 38).

Aerial Navigation. / TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD

Perth Amboy, New Jersey

Sept 8,1863.

Will you have the goodness to publish, for the information of scientific men, the fact that the twenty revolutions made by my aerial ship in her spiral circle of half mile diameter were made in time of fourteen and a half minutes. To me the most astonishing thing was that the material of which she was constructed withstood the resistance of the air at so great a velocity. It was, however, prepared for it, by being brought to a point at the bow ends of the three cylindroids over conical pieces of cork five inches in diameter at their base. Strong cord secured these points to the apex of light strips of wood, extending along the sides of each cylindroids, and meeting together at that point.

Your reporter has spoken within bounds as to the rate of her speed. The first eleven revolutions were made in seven minutes and few seconds. The last three revolutions were made in three and a half minutes. A gradual diminution of velocity was a matter of course. The circles did not diminish in diameter, for they appeared larger to the view as she ascended, and they must have increased in size from her slower movement, owing to a diminution of motive power, as well as the rarer air acting upon her rudder. Hence the calculations made by your reporter on the whole number of revolutions, in the whole period of time before she was lost to view in the upper strata of clouds, falls far short of her greatest velocity. It must have been over two hundred miles per hour at the earlier portion of her spiral movement. Very respectfully, yours, Solomon Andrews {New York Herald, September 9, 1863, p. 4).

Dr. Andrews was frustrated in his efforts to promote his airship with the War Department, but he finally was able to schedule an appointment with President Lincoln and report to him personally. Lincoln ordered Secretary of War Edwin Stanton to form a congressional committee to investigate the invention and make recommendations for its acquisition. Congressional hearings were held in March 1864. The committee recommended the airship be purchased by the War Department immediately. Apparently, Edwin Stanton, a man of limited vision, squashed the recommendations, and on March 22,1865, Andrews received a letter from the House Military Affairs Committee stating they were really not that interested, and besides, the war was over, seemed to be their laconic attitude.

The Records of the Committee on Military Affairs, 17th-79th Congresses (1822-1946) lists Solomon Andrews and his flying machine: "Many petitions are pleas from American inventors who sought congressional approval of their inventions. During the 19th century, the committee was asked to consider the following inventions: . . . The petition promoting Dr. Solomon Andrews' 'aerial ship' with inflatable cylinders includes a photograph of the machine (38A-G12.13)."

I suspect Dr. F. W. Benjamin and most of the other airship crowd read in the fall of 1863 the stirring exploits in the New York Herald of Solomon Andrews and his flying machine. Newspapers were an eagerly sought-after commodity on the Civil War battlefield, as the war-weary soldiers were hungry for news. The newspapers were held in high esteem by the soldiers, as they brought to the battle-scarred veterans not only news of home and even battle results, but also a sense that in some place people still lived normal lives. Perhaps, sitting around a campfire somewhere in the Virginia forest, they read the story of Andrews and determined to duplicate his feats when the war was over.

Of interest is the fact that Dr. Andrews served with the Sanitary Commission during the fall of 1864. He was stationed at Pittsburg Landing and Harrisburg Landing on the James River near Petersburg, Virginia. A medical doctor, he may have personally met Dr. F. W. Benjamin while performing his duties during the siege of Petersburg. Considering such members of the Sanitary Commission routinely inspected and assisted field hospitals, it is probable the two men met. Andrews may have even met some of the airship crowd who were wounded during some period of the war.

LOOKING FOR MCKNIGHT

Recall the comment from the "McKnight's Airship" account: "A man named McKnight has been working on an airship at U.S. Marshal Williams' ranch ..." Unfortunately, all we have is McKnight's last name. Utilizing the scant information we have, let's see if we can connect a McKnight to the airship crowd. Several McKnights from Orange County—the political division where Goshen, New York, is located—are listed on various census records. What is absolutely electric is the discovery of a Charles McKnight in Orange County, New York, in 1860 and a Charles McKnight in Sherman, Texas, in 1870. A Charles McKnight is identified in the 1870 federal Texas census as living in Sherman in Grayson County. Charles McKnight is not listed in any other census for Texas other than that of 1870. Sherman is forty-seven miles northwest of Ladonia, Texas, site of Williams' ranch and the airship lair.

The Charles McKnight identified in the 1860 federal New York census in Orange County is listed as living in New Windsor. New Windsor is about sixteen air miles from Goshen (home of the Wilsons). Charles McKnight is not listed in any other census for New York other than that of 1860.

Is the Orange County, New York, Charles McKnight the same Charles McKnight of Grayson County? We cannot say for certain, but isn't it strange that a Charles McKnight would show up in the same two places as Hiram Wilson, on or about the same time? We do not know where Charles McKnight was between 1870 and 1897.

LOOKING FOR PROF. (CAPTAIN) SAMUEL E. TILLMAN

Samuel Escue Tillman was born in 1847 in Tennessee. He graduated from the West Point Military Academy, class of 1869, and eventually returned to the esteemed halls as a professor of chemistry, mineralogy, and geology in 1880. He was the author of Elementary Lessons in Heat; and Essential Principles of Chemistry. Tillman also authored Academic History of the Military Academy, 1802-1902 (The Centennial of the United States Military Academy, 2 vols., Washington: GPO, 1904). Tillman led an eventful life as a soldier, inventor, and educator. By 1902, he was promoted to the rank of colonel. He served as superintendent of the U.S. Military Academy from August 13,1917, until his retirement from the army on June 11,1919. He was promoted to brigadier general upon his retirement. He died in 1942.

The 1860 federal census data lists Tillman as a thirteen-year-old youth in Bedford County, Tennessee. The 1870 federal census lists him as a twenty three year old in Jersey City, Hudson County, New Jersey. Note that Jersey City and Perth Amboy (home of Dr. Solomon Andrews) are about eighteen air miles apart. Solomon Andrews did not die until 1872. Did Tillman meet Dr. Andrews? We don't know, but aren't the coincidences mounting in this great story?

LOOKING FOR PROF. AMOS E. DOLBEAR

Amos Emerson Dolbear was born in Norwich, Connecticut, on November 10, 1837. He graduated from Wesleyan University, Delaware, Ohio, in 1866. In 1867 he graduated from the University of Michigan with the degree of M.E. He received the degree of Ph.D. in 1883, also from the University of Michigan. From 1866 to 1867 he was instructor of chemistry at the University of Michigan. From 1867 to 1868 he was assistant professor of natural sciences at the University of Kentucky in Lexington. From 1868 until 1874 he was professor of natural sciences at Bethany College, Behtany, West Virginia, and mayor of that city from 1871 to 1872. In 1874 he was appointed professor of physics and astronomy and chairman of the department at Tufts College, College Hill, Massachusetts.

One hundred years ago, Prof. Amos E. Dolbear of West Virginia published his formula for telling the air temperature from the rate of treecricket chirping. A man of many interests, Dolbear clearly demonstrated in his book Modes of Motion, or Mechanical Conceptions of Physical Phenomena that he was a leading physical-science theorist at the turn of the century.

He made valuable contributions to science. Among the inventions that he has perfected are the electric gyroscope, used to demonstrate the rotation of the earth, in 1867; tuning forks, for the exhibition of Lissajous curves, in 1872; and the opeidoscope, for the exhibition of vocal vibrations. In 1873 he began to study the convertibility of sound into electricity and, in 1876, perfected and patented his magneto electric telephone (the basis for his lawsuit against Alexander Graham Bell for patent infringement), and the static telephone in 1879. He published The Art of Projecting (Boston, 1876), The Speaking Telephone (1877), and Sound and its Phenomena (1885).

In 1882 Professor Dolbear communicated over a distance of a quarter of a mile without wires. (This fact is particularly noteworthy because it proves Professor Dolbear preceded radio pioneers Hertz and Marconi.) Professor Dolbear received a U.S. patent for a wireless telegraph in 1882 and obtained a patent for an induction method of wireless telegraph in 1886. He was recognized for his contributions to science at both the Paris Exposition in 1881 and the Crystal Palace Exposition in 1882. Dolbear retired from Tufts College in 1914.

Dolbear, throughout the latter half of the 1800s, acquainted himself with all of the leading scientists of the country. One such associate of Dolbear's, Moses Gerrish Farmer, was a prolific inventor in the mid1800s. In September 1859, Farmer discovered the law of the self-exciting dynamo, a necessary device for the electrical propulsion of airships. Farmer completed the first dynamo machine in 1868, lighting a house to demonstrate its usefulness.

At the dawn of the new century, Professor Dolbear applauded Farmer's achievement, commenting that the dynamo was "an invention which has made possible all the electrical industries of today." Between 1864 and 1868, Farmer perfected a rechargeable thermoelectric battery (the Fargo battery?) and, in 1868, constructed the largest one ever built for the deposition of copper upon steel to produce the American-compound telegraph wire. Professor Dolbear was in good company. A man with such an inquiring mind would certainly find great interest in the flying machine of Dr. Andrews. Dolbear and Tillman probably knew each other through their professions, as each was a leading educator, author, and inventor during the historical period of interest.

LOOKING FOR MR. WALTERS

In the chapter 9 account "Was Aboard an Airship," the writer stated that one of the crew members was identified as Mr. Walters, airship engineer. Other crew members aboard were identified as Mr. Wilson and Mr. Scott Warren. Let us assume that the Mr. Wilson referred to was the same Mr.

Wilson identified in other accounts, namely, Mr. Hiram Wilson. Then, the Mr. Walters on this flight may have been Mr. Wilson's grandfather or other close relative. Hiram Wilson's mother was named Luna (Walters) Wilson. Her father was James P. Walters. The familial relationships are documented by The National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution (vol. 149, p. 113).

LOOKING FOR C. C. AKERS

Not much information surfaces regarding C. C. Akers. I imagine the counties and organizations he served as a law-enforcement officer contain archived records of his service. It is sufficient for us to place him in or near Fort Worth around the time Hiram Wilson was a young boy living in or near the community. Other aspects of his life are of no great interest to us. The only Texas census record for an Akers is the 1880 census, which lists a C. C. Akers living in Maverick County. Akers and Wilson say they knew each other in the 1870s in Fort Worth.

LOOKING FOR GEORGE APPLEGATE

Recall attorney Hart's comments concerning George Applegate and the assistance he provided Dr. Smith and Benjamin during the construction of an airship. Others have claimed Hart was a liar for various reasons. Let's see if we can associate Applegate with any other airship characters in some context outside the airship story. Perhaps, if such an association were found, it will establish further proof of the airship story's veracity. California census records only list one George Applegate:

George W. Applegate can also be found in Civil War muster records:

Applegate served in the same light-artillery regiment as Dr. Francis W. Benjamin for over nine months. Considering most Army of the Potomac artillery and infantry regiments, originally numbering anywhere from 1,000 to 1,800 men, after a battle or two numbered 250 men or less, it is very likely the two men knew each other.

George Applegate's name does not appear in the newspaper accounts other than in Hart's inconsequential remark concerning Dr. Smith. With such scant information concerning the subject, we have to dig to find additional information on Applegate.

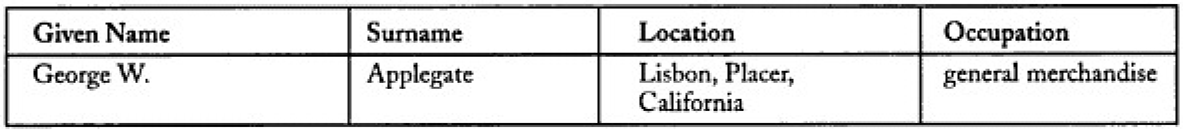
Pacific Coast Directory Entry for George Applegate



Given Name	Surname	Location	Occupation
George W.	Applegate	Lisbon, Placer, California	general merchandise

Although Applegate lived in California he served in a New York regiment. A discerning individual may ask how that was possible. Well, bounties in 1864, the year George enlisted, were paid by states to fill their enlistment quotas. The states, as a natural consequence of the bounty system, began to bid for the bounty men (e.g., paid volunteers). By the end of the year, bounties as high as $1,500 (an incredible sum in 1864) were being paid. Perhaps, he enlisted in a New York regiment to obtain as much bounty money as possible. But, more likely, he joined the 3rd New York Light Artillery because he already knew the Benjamins from Butte County, California, and wanted to serve with men he knew.

There is no doubt George Applegate was a real person who served with Dr. Francis W. Benjamin for nine months in the Army of the Potomac. Was Hart making up a fanciful story to amuse the newspaper folks and get his name in the paper as one author has suggested? Ask yourself, how could Attorney Hart fabricate a story that was over forty years in the making?

LOOKING FOR GEORGE D. COLLINS

There does not seen to be any doubt that George Collins was a real person in 1896. However, just to make it formal, a check of the San Francisco directory for the years 1889, 1891, and 1895 does show a George Collins in San Francisco in 1870, practicing law.

George married both Agnes and Charlotta Newman on May 15, 1889. Perhaps, George was Mormon? According to a reference in a San Francisco newspaper account, George Collins resided in Alameda in 1897. Agnes died in May 1901. In 1905, Charlotta Collins sued for divorce, desiring maintenance, alimony, and child support. George testified he was not married to Charlotta, apparently having lived only with Agnes during the intervening years before her death. In any case, Charlotta produced a marriage certificate, whereupon George was indicted for perjury. George fled to Canada and was subsequently extradited to the United States in 1906. He was found guilty of perjury and sentenced to fourteen years in prison. Besides making headlines during his perjury trial, he stirred the populace with an attempted escape from California's infamous San Qyentin prison.

By 1930 George is out of prison and living in San Francisco, married to Clarice. From the 1930 census record we can see George was born in Kentucky. This information is corroborated by the California Death Index. From the death index, we also learn George was born on July 4, 1864. Armed with his place of birth and birth date, we find George in the 1880 Kentucky census record.

Why was Collins the airship inventor's legal representative? This is a legitimate question that does not have a clear answer at the present. Benjamin said he used Collins for his legal business because they were old friends. Suffice it to say Collins was closely related to a very powerful and rich man. I suspect this man was the airship financier. If this is the case, then it seems reasonable that he would give business to a relative. The data at this juncture is somewhat speculative, but an additional work is planned that will explore the financing of the airships.

George Collins, attorney at law, airship legal representative, husband and father, died May 4, 1944. Perhaps, a descendant will come forth with documentation to prove beyond any doubt that the airship story was factual.

LOOKING FOR JAMES RANDALL

There are few clues to follow when attempting to discover the identity of the airship captain "Randall," named so in the chapter 13 Fort Worth Register account titled "The Airship," (April 24,1897, p. 5). Other than this surname, there is not much information that can be used to identify this person. But if we look for a Randall in all the places we find the other airship characters, right off we discover a James Randall from Butte County. See Table 56.

James Randall's California Census Record

Now with a first name, James, we can check Civil War muster records. Is it a coincidence we find a James Randall serving in the same New York light-artillery regiment as Dr. F. W. Benjamin and George Applegate?

Looking for James Randall in San Francisco directories, we discover one James Randall in the 1889-91 directory.

We find two James Randalls in the 1898 Shasta County, California, Register. One Randall is too young to be the one of interest. The other James Randall's age is given as fifty-eight. The Civil War muster record for James Randall listed his age as twenty-three in 1864, making this James Randall fifty-seven or fifty-eight, depending upon when his birth month and day occurred, in 1898. Considering the regiment James Randall served in, it is likely we have identified the correct James Randall. Note that in the Shasta County, California, directory, Randall's birthplace is listed as New York.

Shasta County, California Register, 1898

Name	Occupation	Age	Nativity	PO Address
3800. Randall, James B.	Miner	33	Rhode Island	Knob
3801. Randall, James H.	Carpenter	58	New York	Bayles

The Shasta County James Randall's occupation is listed as carpenter. From the numerous airship newspaper accounts, we discover or infer parts of the airship are made from wood. It seems logical to me that the airship crew would include a man with such skills to repair broken parts and make improvements in the design.

The James Randall, carpenter, identified in the 1898 Shasta County Register (see above) seems to be the same James Randall identified in the 1870 Census (see below). Although the census lists his marital status as married, no other Randall's are listed for Township 2. If the information is accurate, then Randall's wife was not living with him at the time.

The birthplace of the James Randall listed in the 1870 census is given as New York. The birthplace for Randall in the census agrees with the Shasta County Register birthplace. After searching the New York census records, I found several James Randalls born in New York. Without a town for reference, I could not identify any of them as the James Randall of interest to us. There were no James Randalls from Orange County, a site of particular interest to us because of the Wilsons. The James Randall in the 1870 census does not appear in any other California census records.

Although I am certain the James Randall identified in the previous California directories and census records is the Randall of interest to us, I found a James Randall living in Keokuk County, Iowa, in 1880 (1880 History of Keokuk County Iowa, Warren Township). I find this information intriguing due to the connection between Hart and Iowa. I do not know if the Keokuk, Iowa, James Randall is the same individual as the California James Randall, but the information is included here for your contemplation. As there is no James Randall listed in the 1880 California census, it very well could be the same individual.

LOOKING FOR WILLIAM H. WARREN

Information about Warren is scarce. A William Warren from San Francisco enlisted in the 2nd Cavalry (California) Regiment in 1864. This may or may not be the Warren of interest.

Another William H. Warren was a professor of engineering at Sidney University, Australia, from the 1870s to the 1900s. Although I cannot place him in San Francisco, or more specifically, Hayward, in the fall of 1896 or spring 1897, an official at Sidney University advised me he passed through San Francisco in the fall of 1897. What is intriguing is Professor Warren's specialty: strength of materials. Given the known composition of the airship team and the talents of the various individuals, a strength-ofmaterials engineer is exactly what they needed to succeed.

LOOKING FOR SCOTT WARREN

Looking in the places in which other characters were located, we find a Scott Warren in Iowa.

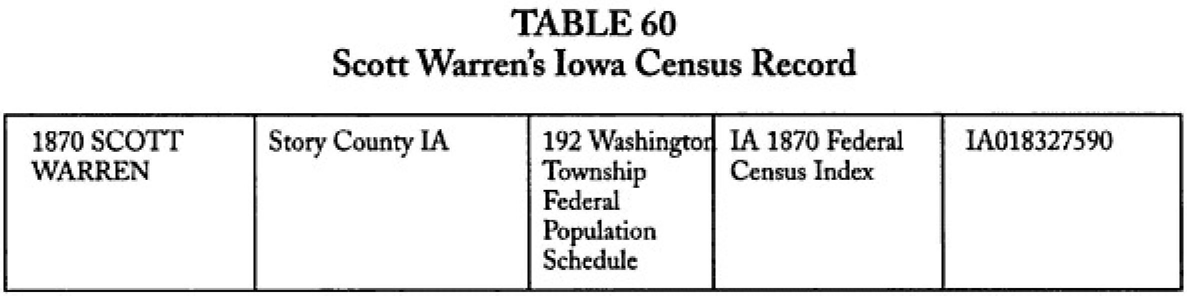

TABLE 60
Scott Warren's Iowa Census Record

1870 SCOTT WARREN	Story County IA	192 Washington Township Federal Population Schedule	IA 1870 Federal Census Index	IA018327590

Scott Warren's home—Washington, Iowa—is seventy-four miles north and a little west of Keokuk. However, Washington is near Wapello, Iowa, the location where William H. H. Hart received part of his law training. The chapter 9 newspaper account, "Was Aboard an Airship," identifies Scott as an engineer. Perhaps, Scott Warren is a close relative of William Warren? Perhaps, but insufficient information at the moment precludes any additional speculation.

LOOKING FOR C.J. WALSH

In the chapter 16 account titled "History of the Ship," one C. J. Walsh, an electrical engineer from San Francisco, is identified as one of the "investors" in the airship. There was a prominent Walsh family living in San Francisco at the turn of the century. One member of this family, Jane C. Walsh, was a San Francisco deputy coroner around 1903. She was the first female in the United States to hold this position.

I have not come across any information with which I can link C. J. Walsh to any other member of the airship team. However there is an interesting observation to be made in the transposition of letters between the initials of Jane C.Walsh and C.J Walsh. Could Jane C. and C. J. Walsh be the same person? Maybe, maybe not. Women were observed participating in the spring flying extravangza. However, being an electrical engineer required a significantly different education from someone performing the role of coroner. But, many people are doubledegreed. It is certainly an interesting thought to ponder.

Looking for Other Airship Inventors

Were other unidentified individuals involved in the 1897 airship mystery? Several accounts mention the presence of nameless crew members. We don't know who these men were but we may uncover something fruitful by indulging in a little guesswork. What about other known inventors going about the business of inventing airships in the latter half of the 1890s? A survey of these individuals reveals several intriguing possibilities.

LOOKING FOR MARCELLUS MCGARY

Was the airship an invention of a local Texas boy named Charles McKnight? I don't think so. But, as the airship(s) moves about the country, we see reports concerning local individuals who are attempting to complete and fly some type of airship that will solve the problem of "aerial navigation." It seems like every community, great and small, had at least one local individual working on the problem. And why not? It was generally agreed by all that great wealth, fame, and fortune awaited the first successful individual.

One such local fellow who experimented with airships was Marcellus McGary, who died on October 22, 1927, at Helmer, Idaho. Marcellus was not originally from Idaho, having moved there in 1907 from the area around Memphis, Missouri. McGary is remembered in Memphis for having demonstrated, in Memphis, on November 26, 1896, his airship. You may recall November 1896 was the month the California boys chose to introduce their airship(s) to the good citizens of northern California.

Of great interest is the method of propulsion McGary adopted for his airship and the location of his manufacturing facility. McGary's idea of propulsion was to have the wings move, or flap, in a birdlike motion, and as stated earlier, he manufactured his airship in Iowa. The following newspaper articles mentioned airships employing the exact same method of propulsion: "Seen at Paris?" (chapter 5), "Another Man Saw It" (chapter 6), "In Texas" (chapter 6), "Airship Seen in Galveston" (chapter 7), "Something More about Airship" (chapter 10), and "The Airship Seen Here" (chapter 17).

The Iowa connection to the airship story is by now a strong one. Amazingly, we discover that McGary manufactured his airship in Keokuk, Iowa. Perhaps Marcellus was one of the unidentified pilots or crewmen flying with the airships in 1897 Texas. And Keokuk, a recurring location in the airship story, just may be the location of the "quiet village in Iowa."

On March 16, 1893, the Farmington (Iowa) Herald reported that the editor of the newspaper, in the company of E. A. Musgrave, while walking down a Keokuk street, was invited by Marcellus McGary to view a working scale model of the airship he was building. The editor—after offering some detail concerning how McGary came upon the idea for propelling his airship by studying the flight of birds and the swimming offish—explained that the airship is propelled by "a system of wings and fins operated by an electric motor capable of producing great velocity." The editor went on to say that McGary was leaving for St. Louis, where he would construct a ship capable of carrying six people. On September 2, 1893, McGary left Memphis for Burlington, Iowa, where he was to perform a test flight. According to the Memphis Reville, McGary could not find any gas in Burlington and therefore could not fly the machine.

For some reason he went on to Chicago, perhaps looking for a source of gas to inflate the "air department." According to the Reville, McGary left the airship in Chicago with a Mr. Baker—for exhibition. While the Reville admitted to seeing the McGary airship model work, it does not say McGary ever successfully flew the real thing. However, the account does include a photograph of the McGary's airship floating some distance in the air.

By November 1896, it is known McGary had his airship finished. He christened it the Columbus. According to other sources (Eugene Dodge, A City Called Memphis, [Eugene Dodge, 1975], 373), he successfully demonstrated that the airship could perform its intended function on November 26, 1896.

The airship seen by Walter L. Norwood and Bob Tevis ("In Texas," chapter 6, and "Airship Seen in Galveston," chapter 7) and Judge Love ("A Judge Sees It," chapter 7) was said to have wings that flapped like a bird. Such an airship was designed and built by Marcellus McGary. In the Memphis Reville articles, McGary's airship was said to be able to carry six passengers and crew. Judge Love said he found five men reclining upon the ground when he came upon the airship while hunting one afternoon.

Airship stories concerning McGary s attempts to conquer the skies were printed in the Memphis Reville on the following occasions:

December 29, 1892	McGary is waiting for airship motor.
March 16, 1893	McGary demonstrates airship model.
August 3, 1893	McGary has completed the airship gondola.
September 21, 1893	McGary takes airship to Burlington, IA.
October 26, 1893	McGary's airship is displayed in Chicago.
November 26, 1896	McGary demonstrates his airship in Memphis, Missouri.
September 18, 1941	Summary of previous articles.

The Reville celebrated its centennial birthday in 1941 by printing summarizations of articles it had printed the past 100 years. In a September 18, 1941, article, "McGary's Airship —Built in 1892 by M McGary," summarizes the previous Reville articles.

Was McGary part of the exclusive 1897 Texas aviators club? Did he know Hart, Benjamin, Wilson, Dolbear, Tillman, McKnight, and the other members of the airship crowd? You may recall several Texas news stories, including "A Judge Sees It," where the pilot, although interviewed, was not identified. It is not beyond the realm of possibility one of the unidentified pilots was Marcellus McGary. While there is not any known piece of evidence directly linking any of these men to McGary, it is safe to say there is an extremely good chance they all knew each other and that McGary was a participant in the spring 1897 flights over of Texas and Louisiana.

LOOKING FOR MICHAEL MCMAHON

Another possible but unidentified player in the airship mystery is Michael McMahon. McMahon was born in 1840 and died on September 10, 1929. In 1884 he invented and successfully flew an airship while living in or near Minneapolis, Minnesota.

LOOKING FOR PROF. ARTHUR C. BARNARD

This account demonstrates that other inventors were feverishly at work trying to solve the problem of aerial navigation. Barnard was partially successful.

AIR SHIP THAT MOVES

Prof. Barnard Gives an Exhibition of His Machine at Nashville and Sails Fifteen Miles

Nashville, Tenn., May 6. (1897) Today at the Tennessee centennial exposition Prof. Arthur Barnard, physical instructor of the T.M.C.A. of Nashville, began a journey in an airship constructed by himself. Prof. Barnard promised to sail against the wind after arising into the air and he did so. The airship will be continued in use at the exposition. Prof. Barnard said he would land at the starting point tonight. The ship is forty-six feet long and twenty in diameter.

Mr. Barnard, who returned with his airship tonight says that he has perfected a machine which will fly under ordinary conditions. He said tonight that it was not perfect, nor could it be perfectly controlled, but he believed that he could perfect it so that its course could be controlled. After disappearing from view this morning, the ship circled around, the navigator hoping to meet with a favorable current.

At last the ship began to sail to the west, and Mr. Barnard says as far as Watkins, a village fifteen miles from Nashville the gas in the balloon attachment began to give out.

He then sought a safe place to descend and came down easily. While aloft a sudden gust broke one of the spans of the ship. No other damage was suffered. The entire time he was aloft was one and one-half hours. He was returning along the line of the outward flight when he was forced to land (San Antonio Light, May 7,1897, p. 7).

This is a factual account of events as they occurred in Nashville at the exposition. So, we now have indisputable evidence that there are airships and there are airship inventors, probably more than could be comfortably counted in an hour's time. However, some were more successful than others.

Professor Barnard was not a member of an exclusive California or New York airship club. If he was, perhaps his airship would have been a bigger success at the exposition.

> Editorial comment: There is this to be said for Prof. Barnard's airship—he isn't afraid to show it (Houston Post, May 13,1897, p. 4).

LOOKING FOR DR. CHARLES A. SMITH

There are two references to Smith in this book. The first reference appears in the newspaper article "Supplies for Airship" in chapter 12 ("Never mind about my name; call it Smith"). The second reference appears in chapter 19 in a George Collins interview ("An Inventor's Opinion"). Let's see what else we can find out about a Charles A. Smith of San Francisco.

Examining Civil War muster records, we find there is no lack of Charles A. Smiths. The Charles A. Smith who served in the 5th California Infantry is probably the Charles Smth of interest, but there is insufficient information to conclude they are the same individual.

When we look in the census record, we find a Charles Smith living in Butte County in 1860. Kimshew does not appear on any available maps, so I am not sure where the community is in relation to Oroville. Kimshew Creek is about thirty-eight miles north of Oroville.

Checking the San Francisco directories, we find a Charles A. Smith working as a machinist in the city in 1889. The next year, 1890, we find a Charles Smith, Jr., working at the same physical location. But, we now have a Charles A. Smith identified as a physician. Smith is referred to as a "doctor" in the Collins interview. I believe both Charles A. Smiths are the same person. Machine work was a necessary endeavor if you wanted to build a successful flying machine in 1897.

What else can we find that pertains to Smith? Charles Smith of San Francisco applied for an airship patent. He was awarded patent number 585,893 on April 2, 1896. See appendix A for a copy of his patent application.

A SUMMARY OF THE AIRSHIP FACTS

As you may readily see, San Francisco; Texas; Butte County, California; Orange County, New York; and the Army of the Potomac are central factors to the airship story. The origins of the story are not in the creative minds of newspaper reporters but in the mud and blood of battle and the pastoral scenes of rural Iowa.

Hiram Wilson stated in an account, "this is but one of five built in a quiet village in Iowa." Hart's boyhood home in Keokuk, Iowa, and the known fabrication of McGary's successful airship in Keokuk are undisputable facts. These facts are compelling circumstantial evidence for establishing the validity of Wilson's repeated claims to pilot but one airship of five "built in a quiet Iowa village." Recall Hart's claim to represent the East Coast airship interests via his legal connections to the development of the Fargo battery. If the East Coast inventor asked his legal representative where a secluded place to build his airship would be, the representative's birthplace, Iowa, would make a sensible answer. It is entirely possible Wilson was telling the truth when he made the "quite village" comment.

Dr. Elmer Benjamin claimed to have built three airships in California. Was he referring to three for which he was singly responsible, or was he including Dr. Smith's and W. H. Warren's airships in the tally? I suspect Dr. Benjamin's comment included them all. It is reasonable to conclude that Benjamin, Warren, and Smith were a team in San Francisco, collaborating on the airships built there. I would even go so far as to say these gentlemen were part of a design team that was probably directed by Dr. Smith—a reasonable assumption, given Dr. Smith's stated years of experience designing, building, and flying airships and the assumed inexperience of the other two individuals.

What about the Wilson airship? If the Wilsons built their own airship, we have a total of nine vessels (California's three, plus Iowa's five, plus Wilson's 1). I believe the Wilsons did build a New York airship. On Tuesday, November 17, 1896, the Sacramento Bee received an intriguing telegram from New York City advising the Bee that an airship would lift off from a vacant New York City lot with the pilot and one or two friends on Friday, November 20,1896, and leave immediately for California. The author of the telegram said he would be in California in two days. From the California newspaper reports, we know that an airship was seen over Sacramento on November 18. However, it was not until November 22 that an airship was seen over San Francisco (Oakland). Perhaps, the Smith-Warren-Benjamin team announced their California airship to the world over Sacramento on November 18 while the Wilson team announced their New York airship to the world over San Francisco on November 22.

From the pilot/crew member comments in the newspaper account, we can gather that at least two West Coast, one Iowa, and one New York airship participated in the spring 1897 Texas flying spree. One airship exploded in Michigan. Three airships subsequently arrived in Texas. So, we have four well-documented airships accounted for.

If nine airships were built by these men, what happened to the other five? We do not know how many West Coast or Iowa airships survived their initial or maiden flights and subsequently were able to participate in the spring flying extravaganza. Conversely, we do not know how many did not survive their maiden voyages. Nor can we say for certain that the other five did not participate in the spring airship regatta in some fashion. We do know that airships were seen in other parts of the country while the Texas sightings were occuring. For example, during April 1897, at least one airship was seen in Washington State. However, with the evidence currently available, we can only account, with a great degree of certainty, for four airships.

LOOKING FOR THE IOWA STORY

If five airships were built in Iowa, then it seems reasonable to suppose that Iowa was the site of numerous airship sightings. And it was. Iowa was also the site of numerous fake airship sightings involving kites, balloons, Chinese lanterns, fake notes, and at least one great and creative hoax. However, there are numerous truthful sightings.

An analysis of the Iowa sightings was performed by the author, and the results are somewhat ambiguous. The sightings seem to be much more scattered than they are in Texas. This can be attributed to the lack of sufficient newspaper accounts used in the analysis. That is, if all the newspaper accounts in the state were available for analysis, then a more accurate picture would emerge.

The airship sightings do not resolve to a particular area in the state as they did with the Texas sightings. The most probable cause for this is the lack of a choice of bases in Texas, whereas the airship inventors may have had ample bases in Iowa to land their airships by day. If the Iowa group of inventors did indeed have a choice of landing sites, then the data would not yield so clear and definitive a base.

There does seem to exist more than usual activity in the southeastern portion of the state, indicating William Henry Harrison Hart's boyhood home of Keokuk may have been the "quite Iowa village" mentioned in several newspaper accounts. From the data available, I could not shoot back azimuths (the method used to locate the Texas base at Marshal Williams ranch near Ladonia) of the sightings and pinpoint one particular area that the airship crew would have used for a daytime base. But, using a little logic, we may be able to narrow the prospective area down to a particular portion of the state.

The airship crew preferred to fly by night. In interviews, they gave several reasons for this. No, they were not vampires. The sight of the undulating ground moving under them resulted in airsickness. Also, some ground-dwelling men felt at liberty to take potshots at the airships. Those two reasons alone are sufficient excuses for avoiding daytime flight. So, if we accept the premise that the airships would not lift off until dusk, then we may have a useful method for detecting the Iowa base. All we need do is look where the majority of the early evening sightings occurred.

From the Iowa-sighting data, it appears the Iowa base was east of a north-south line from Keokuk to Burlington and south of an east-west line from Burlington to Davenport. As previously discussed, Keokuk was William H. H. Hart's childhood home. The Iowa sightings support the contention Keokuk was the "quiet Iowa village."

The Iowa Sightings

The Iowa sightings are listed in Table 65. The sightings were plotted by day and time. The results were not particularly fruitful. I leave graphing the Iowa accounts and verifying this information to the reader's industry.

LOOKING FORTHE SONORA AERO CLUB

Charles A. A. Dellschau was working for his son-in-law, Anton Stelzig, when he retired as a clerk in 1899. Using mixed media, he began painting pictures of airships. The works include intricate collages showing the vessels with shiplike decks beneath balloon pontoons manned by crews of gentlemen who were sometimes accompanied by a cat. Surrounding the pictures and notebooks is a cloak of mystery.

Dellschau started his documentation project at least three years before the Wright brothers lifted off at Kittyhawk. His collages document the activities of a secret California organization called the Sonora Aero Club, which was dedicated to inventing and flying "aeros" or flying machines. In his notebooks, Dellschau recounts how, in his youth (circa 1850), the Sonora Aero Club members were engaged in building wondrous flying machines in which they joyfully cavorted about the California countryside. Dellschau seems to have been the club's draftsman, as he never depicts himself flying in any of the club's aeros.

Is Dellschau's account of the Sonora Aero Club fact or fiction? Are the accounts of crashes and deaths true or just adventurous tales of his own creation? Only by analyzing his drawings and writings and doing careful detective work may we determine with any degree of accuracy whether or not the Sonora Aero Club actually existed and if Dellschau was an employee of the organization in the 1850s. Unfortunately, the individual who possesses most of Dellschau's notebooks refuses to allow anyone to study them. However, he has leaked enough information to whet the appetite and give the scent of the quarry. And the few Dellschau drawings that are available to the public (through the Houston Menil Foundation and a New York art gallery) substantiate many of Dellschau's claims.

The emigration records confirm that Dellschau arrived in the United States from Hamburg, Germany, in 1853. He listed his age as twenty-five years old and stated he was born in Brandenburg, Prussia. His occupation is listed as a farmer. Dellschau's letter of citizenship places him in Harris County in 1856 and Fort Bend County in 1860. Between 1853 and 1856, the known historical record is quiet concerning Dellschau's whereabouts. The Germany native claims that the Sonora Aero Club performed its magical feats of flying in the 1853-56 period. However, there is no known record of Dellschau being in California during this time.

According to those who have reviewed Dellschau's notebooks, "But where the historical records are silent, the artist's notebooks make raucous, profligate claims" (Cynthia Greenwood, "Secrets of the Sonora Aero Club," New Times, [December 10, 1998]). Dellschau illustrates a remarkable number of airship designs for vessels with names such as Aero Mio, Aero Trump, Aero Schnabel, Aero Mary, and Aero Jourdan. Supposedly, some of Dellschau's drawings and accompanying text include stories of stolen craft, flaming crashes, broken necks, and death. The general appearance of most of the flying machines, or aeros, is that of a gas-bag, semirigid, cylindro-conical shaped (dirigible-shaped) machine with huge fans providing the thrust. All were powered by a secret fuel that provided lift and thrust by driving the ship's wheels, side paddles, and compressor motors. Hydrogen gas was possibly used as a fuel in an internal combustion engine to provide the motive power, or thrust, for the aeros.

According to Dellschau, the inventor of the club's almost magical fuel was Peter Mennis. Supposedly, Mennis kept the formula secret. Upon his death in a fiery aero crash in the early 1860s, the other club members disbanded due to lack of fuel to propel their machines.

The reduction of water into its components, hydrogen and oxygen, was a well-known chemical process in 1850, and scientists knew how to convert the hydrogen gas to energy in an internal combustion engine. However, it was not a cheap process. Even today, internal combustion engines that use hydrogen as a fuel exist. Such engines can generate sufficient horsepower for most purposes, and the hydrogen burns cleanly, with no pollutants. The use of hydrogen as fuel makes sense, except for the cost associated with producing it, which is still an economic burden today. It is plausible 1850 airships received their thrust from hydrogen gas-burning internal combustion engines.

What about lift? Hydrogen gas could also be used to provide lift for the airships. One cubic foot of hydrogen gas will lift 0.076 lb. at 32° F and 760 mm pressure. Note that higher temperatures and a less-dense atmosphere require less gas to lift the same weight. We can determine the lifting power of hydrogen through the following exercise:

0.076 lb x 10 cubic feet = .76 lb lifting power at 32 F and sea level
0.076 lb x 100 cubic feet = 7.6 lb lifting power at 32 F and sea level
0.076 lb x 1,000 cubic feet = 76 lb lifting power at 32 F and sea level
0.076 lb x 10,000 cubic feet = 760 lb lifting power at 32 F and sea level
0.076 lb x 100,000 cubic feet = 7,600 lb lifting power at 32 F and sea level

100,000 cubic feet = 1,000 ft x 100 ft x 1 ft = 100 ft x 100 ft x 10 ft

or

150 ft x 30 ft x 25 ft = 112,500 cubic feet

Do the dimensions 150' x 30' x 25' sound familiar? They are about the same dimensions reported by many observers of the airships.

A carriage with the dimensions of 30' long, 20' wide, and 8' high, slung underneath a gas air bag would have 600 square feet of floor space. If we divide 7,600 lbs. by 600 square feet, we arrive at 12.66 pounds/square-foot weight distribution. This seems about right for a ship designed to carry as many as twenty people—albeit somewhat crowded. And the amount of space for each person would be 30 square feet (or a space of 5' x 6'. Of course, some amount of floor space was required for the machinery and controls reducing the amount available for crew and passengers.

Why are Dellschau's notebooks and their stories important? If the stories are true, the Sonora Aero Club members were aviation pioneers. And, perhaps, the notebooks hold clues that would help explain the 1896-97 Texas (California, Michigan, Illinois, etc.) airship sightings. Three of the Sonora Aero Club members mentioned in Dellschau's notebooks are a Smith, Wilson, and Andrews. Smith and Wilson figure prominently in the 1897 Texas sightings. And could the reference to an Andrews be the same or a relative of Dr. Solomon Andrews of Perth Amboy, New Jersey? There may be a connection between Solomon Andrews and the Sonora Aero Club. Dellschau shows one Sonora Aero Club airship, similar in design to the airship Andrews flew in 1863, with the cryptic caption "A la Andrews." Dr. Andrews just might have been an original or even founding member of the Sonora Aero Club, and the Aerial Navigation Company may have been the precursor or foundation for the Sonora Aero Club.

Dellschau mentions a man by the last name of Wilson. Could the Wilson in his accounts be the same Wilson who shows up flying about Texas in 1897? Wilson tells at least one interviewer that he is from Goshen, New York. Dr. Andrews built his flying machine in Perth Amboy, New Jersey. Goshen and Perth Amboy are eighty-five miles apart. Coincidence? The California newspaper articles detailed in chapter 19 include an interview by Charles (or Catlan) Smith. Dr. Smith tells the newspaper reporter that he has been designing, building, and flying airships for fifty years. Dr. Smith may be an original member of the Sonora Aero Club and/or the Aerial Navigation Company.

At least one UFO researcher has visited Sonora, California, and claims he found no evidence that the Sonora Aero Club ever existed. Is it possible that Dellschau made up all the stories contained in his notebooks? Is it possible the colorful drawings of wonderful flying machines were figments of his imagination? Yes, it is possible. However, if such a group of inventors were so secretive, would they name their place of business after the same community in which they operated? The unfolding of the 1897 airship story suggests that the Sonora Aero Club may have been located near Oroville, another California community some distance from Sonora.

Why California? Secrecy, climate, woods, and, perhaps, George Hearst. The California desert was sparsely populated in the 1850s, the climate was conducive for the activity, financial aid was available in the form of newly enriched gold mine owners, and perhaps, the characteristics of California birch appealed to the airship builders.

Secrecy seems to be a significant issue with the Sonora Aero Club. It is claimed that a Dellschau pictograph depicts one aero crash in the 1850s that was engineered by other club members because the club member used his aero for hauling freight for an outsider (Cynthia Greenwood, "Secrets of the Sonora Aero Club," New Times, [December 10, 1998]). Another club member was supposedly prohibited from building an aero because he talked to outsiders about the club. Even Dellschau felt compelled, in the 1900s, to enter information in his notebooks in code. Apparently, even fifty or more years after the group's heyday, he still felt sufficiently threatened that he hid the secrets of the Sonora Aero Club.

The California desert climate is conducive for airship experimentation. Even today, the United States Air Force maintains the Air Force Flight Test Center, an experimental aircraft test facility, at Edwards Air Force Base. NASA maintains the Dryden Flight Research Center at Edwards. Edwards is located adjacent to Palmdale, California, a community northwest of Los Angeles. The Air Force and NASA maintain their flight-test facilities at Edwards because the climate allows yearround flight-testing. Seems like a justifiable reason for airship inventors in 1850 to locate their test facility in the California desert.

Although aluminum was known to exist in the 1850s, extraction of aluminum metal in any great quantity was not a commercial venture until 1886. The aeros needed to be lightweight to be feasible. Steel and iron were just not good candidates for airships, due to the weight of the metal. But, something strong was needed for the framework. Remember Howard Hughes and the Spruce Goose? Hughes and staff created the largest ever flying machine almost entirely out of laminated birch (airframe and surface structures) with fabric-covered control surfaces (except the flaps) and flew it on November 2, 1947. Dellschau explains in his notebooks that at least one 1850s airship was disguised as a gypsy wagon. Wagons in the 1850s were made of wood.

And, perhaps, California was chosen so that the creative engineers who designed these flying machines and their machinery could be near the gold fields. The cost of producing hydrogen, the machine work required to produce the specialized mechanical features of the airships (such as gearing, specialized fabrics, and basketwork) required a fat bank account. A rough approximation of the cost of each airship would be $10,000 (1850 currency). Keeping in mind that, forty-seven years earlier, the United States bought most of the land west of the Mississippi River for about $12,000,000, you can see that $10,000 was a large sum. In comparison, in one 1896 interview, George Collins claims that one airship inventor expended $100,000 to perfect his machine.

The founding date of the club coincides with the early California gold rush. Perhaps, the club members were well-off mine owners or businessmen. However, Dellschau does mention New York financial backing. Possible New York connections include Andrews' Inventor's Institute (known, by 1849, as the Aerial Navigation Company) and George Hearst. Solomon Andrews' Inventor's Institute was in New Jersey but he maintained an office in New York City.

George Hearst left New York for the California gold fields in 1849. Before he left, an intriguing advertisement for a ride to the gold fields in the relative comfort of an airship was published in a New York newspaper. This advertisement was probably published by Andrews' Aerial Navigation Company—the only New York-connected organization known at the time to be involved in airship research. Shortly thereafter, the Aerial Navigation Company seems to fade into history, while the Sonora Aero Club begins its short run. Let us review the facts: While George Hearst was in New York City, there was an Aerial Navigation Company. George Hearst leaves for California and there the Sonora Aero Club was established. Coincidence?

According to Dellschau, the Sonora Aero Club received financial backing from the NYMZA. There is at least one reference to a Maine connection. It appears in the 1896 newspaper account featuring George Collins, in which he said that the inventor he represented hailed from Maine. No one knows what NYMZA stands for. Could it be the New York and Maine Zionist Association? Dellschau was Jewish. Or, could NYMZA be a code word for the Inventor's Institute/Aerial Navigation Company?

Were the 1850s aeros used to haul freight and passengers to the California gold mines for the New York financiers? It is reported that at least one New York newspaper advertisement, dating from 1848, offered would-be miners an airship ride from New York to California. But, the advertisements ceased soon after they appeared. It is not known if any passengers or freight were ferried across the continent via airships. Could the 1848 advertisement be connected to the Sonora Aero Club member who Dellschau notes was murdered for using an airship to haul freight, apparently without the permission of the organization's leader(s).

Why didn't the Sonora Aero Club continue to fly its machines from the 1850s to 1897? Dellschau claims that only one aero club member possessed the airship fuel formula. Also, Dellschau's descriptions of three crashes include the death of the one individual who knew the fuel formula. According to his notes, some of the club members spent the next few years trying to re-create the fuel formula. This may be the reason there was no more flying after the late 1850s by the Sonora Aero Club.

The most influential member of California society from 1850 until his death in 1891 was George Hearst, father of William Randolph Hearst. It seems unlikely any airships would be flying the California skies without his knowledge and approbation. If an investigator wants to locate the base of the Sonora Aero Club, a good starting place would be in researching the travels, residences, and financial interests of George Hearst. I am fairly convinced Hearst financed the Aerial Navigation Company and the Sonora Aero Club. He was certainly in a great position to not only finance the clubs but also reap the rewards of their efforts. Hearst was financially well off and well connected to the banking and business establishments of San Francisco and New York City. He was probably the first California-New York commuter on the airships. Follow the path of Hearst and you will find, somewhere along the way, the scent of the Aerial Navigation Company and the Sonora Aero Club.

LOOKING BACK

One of the airship(s) inventor's legal representatives, the former California state attorney general William Henry Harrison Hart, made public announcements of airship patent applications and other business matters pertaining to the airship inventors. General Hart was elected attorney general and served from January 1891 until January 1895. It seems unlikely Hart could achieve success in the California political arena without the support of George Hearst, who was a U.S. senator from California and the owner of the most influential California newspaper, the San Francisco Examiner at the time of Hart's election. Subsequently, William Randolph Hearst supported Hart, as evidenced by Hart's continued participation on the board of directors of Hearst mining interests. Was the former attorney general playing a great joke upon an unsuspecting populace? Considering the social centers of gravity the general swirled in, I think not.

Three individuals we investigated in this chapter may be the connecting threads between the various airship mysteries (1840s to 1897) we have examined. Dr. Solomon Andrews, Willard Wilson, and Dr. Charles Smith, peers extraordinaire, may have been designing, building, and flying airships from the 1840s.

AURORA REVISITED

Let's take another look at the purported "alien" airship crash in Aurora, Texas. Why do so at this particular point in the story? We have slowly built a strong case for the existence of the airships and their inventors. Although we proceeded pretty much on faith that most newspapers and most people were truthfully reporting what they saw and heard regarding the airships, we have built a strong case for the existence of the men and machines largely on circumstantial evidence. We have woven an intricate mosaic of the men and machines who startled a nation over one hundred years ago. Given that the airships and their inventors are fact, it may be interesting to review the Aurora crash in light of the knowledge we now possess.

Perhaps, there really was a crash with casualties, as the local newspaper and government official reported. If the Aurora crash did occur, it seems reasonable to reconcile the event with other airship sightings occurring elsewhere. Toward that end, we will explore the events leading up to the purported crash and determine if there is a continuity of events that yields a believable and plausible explanation for the Aurora crash.

Let's assume the occupant(s) of the airship that crashed in Aurora were creatures of this Earth and not aliens, as the two Aurora individuals interviewed by the Dallas Morning News had advocated. If we assume the occupants were alien(s), we immediately become embroiled in the arguments for and against interplanetary travel—in vehicles that are clearly constructed using pre-twentieth-century technology. Anyone with even a fundamental understanding of technology and the universe will quickly realize the practical impossibility of flying through the void of space in such vehicles. So, the assumption that the occupant(s) were human and the craft and pilot were of this planet is a valid assumption. Arguments supporting this assumption are provided in another section of this text.

Recall the chapter 7 account "The Great Aerial Wanderer," which told of a grounded airship experiencing mechanical difficulties near Stephenville—southwest of Aurora—on the morning of the purported crash. In relation to the time of the Aurora crash, when was the airship on the ground near Stephenville? Was there sufficient time for it to travel from Stephenville to Aurora prior to the time of the crash? Does the airship's observed direction of flight coincide with the direction it should have been going if it was coming from Stephenville and attempting to return to the daytime lair? Did the Stephenville airship eventually crash and burn in Aurora? What evidence remains to convince us that the Aurora crash was fact and not fiction?

We will revisit the chapter 7 Dallas Morning News account titled "A Windmill Demolishes It" (April 19,1897, p. 5) and examine certain key passages. Perhaps we can discern the truth.

"ABOUT 6 O'CLOCK THIS MORNING ..."

An airship experiencing mechanical difficulties was seen by many distinguished Stephenville citizens sometime "early in the morning" on April 17, 1897, the day of the Aurora crash. Stephenville is eighty-four miles southwest of Aurora. Unfortunately, the Stephenville account does not state the time the grounded airship was viewed by the long list of distinguished Stephenville citizens. We must use a dose of deductive reasoning to see if we can narrow the window of the Stephenville sighting and place an approximate time on it. Then we can compare the time of the Stephenville sighting with the time of the reported crash. If the times correspond, we have substantial argument to support the existence of an airship mishap occurred in Aurora on April 17, 1897.

The Stephenville account places the time of the sighting as "early in the morning." For these country folks, this was sometime prior to the beginning of morning twilight. Morning began before it was light enough to see how to do the daily chores, such as milking the cows, gathering the eggs, feeding the livestock, etc. Farmers, and many town dwellers, rose before dawn to prepare for the ensuing day. The wood-burning stove had to be stoked and fired, water had to be fetched from the well, and numerous other labor-intensive chores, unknown to modern city dwellers, had to be performed before a person could sit down and enjoy breakfast.

From my childhood days living on the farm, I recall that morning began about one hour before beginning morning nautical twilight (BMNT). BMNT is defined, by no less an authority than the U.S. government, as the time of day when a person can see 400 yards on a clear day. On the fateful day of the Aurora crash, BMNT occurred at 4:34 A.M. Central Standard Time (from an old American Nautical Almanac, Washington, DC: U.S. Govt Printing Office, nd.). If "morning" is one hour before BMNT, "early in the morning" would be sometime before 3:30 A.M. Let us place the time somewhere around 2:30 A.M.

The airship would have three hours, or more, to travel the eighty-four miles from Stephenville to the crash site. Considering the vessel's maximum speed, it is reasonable to assume the pilot could cover this distance in the time allotted, even factoring in the need for reduced speed due to mechanical difficulties.

But, what if the crew was on the ground repairing the ship for so long that they could not possibly have flown from Stephenville to Aurora in the available window? If we examine the Stephenville account, we see that the correspondent wrote, "They rapidly made the necessary repairs, . .." implying the airship was on the ground but a short time.

"IT WAS TRAVELING DUE NORTH ..."

The airship's direction of travel mentioned in "A Windmill Demolishes It" is consistent with the supposition that it was attempting to return to its daytime hiding place at Williams' ranch, near Ladonia. To fly from Aurora to Williams' ranch requires an eastward course correction. However, an airship flying to such a destination would not make a course correction until all danger of passing over or near Dallas had passed, as the danger from daytime observers was great.

Suppose that the Aurora airship was the same as the grounded airship outside Stephenville. Presume the crew repaired the airship sufficiently well enough to fly from Stephenville (as the account states). And let us assume that the crew wished to return to their daytime hiding place. Then, it seems likely the crew would fly on a line from Stephenville to Aurora in order to avoid passing over Fort Worth and Dallas in the daylight. If you look at a map of the area, you will see Aurora is actually north and a little east of Stephenville. You will also note that a segmented line from Stephenville to Ladonia that will bypass Fort Worth and Dallas to the west will pass near Aurora. One segment will be north from Stephenville with another segment northeast. The intersection of two such lines occurs somewhere just south of Aurora.

Remember, any number of good citizens were taking potshots at the aerial monsters when they had a chance. Also, the inventors desired to keep their invention secret, or at least they wished to keep many of the particulars secret. So, passing around Fort Worth or Dallas and northwest out of Stephenville would place them over Aurora at approximately the same time as the crash. Upon approaching Aurora, the airship would be required to turn north then east in order to reach Williams' ranch.

There is one glaring problem with the Stephenville-to-Aurora flight path. The problem is the reported direction of flight as the airship left Stephenville: "the ship rose gently into the air and sailed off in a southwesterly direction." Southwest was in the opposite direction of Aurora. What can we make of this? In numerous accounts, including the Stephenville account, the crew members alluded to the secret nature of their project and their desire to keep the particulars of the airship from public view. If they did not want the public to ascertain the particulars of their airship ("They refused to have their machine critically inspected and refused to talk further as to their plans for the future"—"The Great Aerial Wanderer"), it seems reasonable that they would fly away in the opposite direction of their intended destination, circling toward their true destination only when out of sight. The inventors were clever enough to realize that another clever individual could triangulate airship sightings and quickly locate their daytime hiding spot. So, to prevent any such attempts to discover their daytime lair, after leaving the crowd behind, the crew changed course, heading north for their real destination.

"SOME OF THE MACHINERY WAS OUT OF ORDER..."

The report that the vessel was "gradually settling towards earth" implies a gas leak of some proportion less than a total blowout of the envelope, a failure of some mechanical control device, or the inattention or inability of the pilot to attend to the affairs of the ship, maybe because of incapacitation.

One or more of the hermetically sealed compartments containing the hydrogen used for lift might have been leaking a significant amount of gas. The amount of reserve hydrogen in a compressed form on board is not known, but it could not have been very much, if any, given the size of the machines.

According to the Aurora account, the airship was traveling in a straight line and the pilot made no attempt to avoid the judge's windmill. It is reasonable to suppose the pilot would have attempted to evade the windmill, if possible. If he had attempted to evade the windmill, it also seems reasonable that the witnesses would have commented upon that fact. Since the witnesses did not report any evasive maneuvers by the airship, we are left to conclude either the airship and/or the pilot were unable to perform any maneuvering.

Did the pilot, while preoccupied working on the machine and trying to fix the problem, become unaware of the impending collision? Or, did the pilot succumb to some unknown hazard, perhaps the leaking gas, leaving the airship to fly without any human hands at the controls? It seems most likely that the pilot lost control of the airship for some reason and was "riding her until he couldn't ride her anymore."

"COLLIDED WITH THE TOWER... WITH A TERRIFIC EXPLOSION, SCATTERING DEBRIS OVER SEVERAL ACRES OF GROUND"

Modern UFO enthusiasts have searched the judge's acres and claim to have found crash debris. According to their statements, an analysis of the material disclosed that the metal was aluminum, consistent with the technology of the era and also consistent with the statements of the crew members and the purported inventors concerning the airship's construction.

"THE PILOT OF THE SHIP IS SUPPOSED TO HAVE BEEN THE ONLY ONE ON BOARD"

This sentence presents a problem that seems controversial in light of what we know about the earlier Stephenville sighting. Witnesses of the airship in Stephenville observed two men, who gave their names as S. E. Tillman and A. E. Dolbear, working on the airship. We know Tillman and Dolbear did not perish in a crash in Aurora, as they continued to lead distinguished lives in their chosen professions well into the twentieth century. Yet, the statements of the numerous eyewitnesses to the Aurora crash imply there was one individual on board. Perhaps, the airship that experienced mechanical difficulties at Stephenville was not the airship that exploded at Aurora. If it did crash at Aurora, who was minding the ship? Perhaps, another individual was present and unnoticed, or just not mentioned in the Stephenville account, and this is the person who perished. There are several candidates among the crew members identified in other sightings, including Smith, Jackson, Walters, McKnight, and possibly Scott Warren.

Did two of the crew members, recognizing the possibility of a crash, alight from the airship somewhere between Stephenville and Aurora and take a train back to the daytime lair? There are numerous small communities on a straight line between Stephenville and Aurora where the other crew members could have sought ground transportation. However, the most likely place would be Weatherford, as it is the largest community between Stephenville and Aurora. Weatherford was on a Southern Pacific Railroad east-west rail line. The crewmen could easily have caught a train into Dallas, switched (if necessary), and continued on to the base at Ladonia. Ladonia was on a rail line extending through the countryside between Sherman and Commerce. But, we must also realize there is a possibility that the Aurora airship was not the airship seen in Stephenville.

"HE WAS NOT AN INHABITANT OF THIS WORLD."

The claim that the pilot was an alien was made either because the body was so badly disfigured it did not appear to be human or because the informants wanted to gain publicity for themselves or their community. Such a wild claim would quickly turn into notoriety. The community leaders would have ensured a retraction was printed in the newspaper if the claim had been false, but no such retraction was made. We are left to conclude that at least some of the townspeople really thought the unrecognizable remains were that of an alien being.

The fact that well-respected individuals around the country had previously gone on public record stating their belief that the airships were from Mars lent a degree of acceptability for assuming the remains were of Martian origin. In the chapter 6 account titled "Statesman's Mystery Man," the newspaper reporter asks, "With these soldiers of Mars cavorting around over our heads, do you think there is any danger to us on the earth?" Numerous newspapers continually referenced the airships and their crews as Martian, so it should be no surprise that the Aurora citizens would make such a claim—if you consider the citizens were "prepped" by the newspapers to believe these theories. But, why were newspapers making the Martian claims? This particular historical period begins a widespread and hugely popular belief in the existence of Martian life. The recently discovered "Martian canals" were the subject of many speculative newspaper and magazine articles, many of them citing world-renowned scientists' beliefs in the probable existence of intelligent life on Mars. Many newspapers, including the Dallas Morning News, advanced the argument that the machines were piloted by visitors from the red planet. If you were told by the "learned" portion of society that the airships were of alien origin, then you would, reasonably, consider any disfigured recovered bodies were also alien, especially if the whole body was really not identifiable.

Some Aurora citizens may have seen the crash as an opportunity to exploit the situation for great financial gain. According to some of the folks who have casually studied the circumstances surrounding the Aurora crash, by advocating that the remains were Martian, two of the key witnesses hoped to generate a stampede of tourists from all over the world. Supposedly, Judge Proctor (whose windmill was destroyed) and T. J. Weems (the U.S. Signal Service officer) were the culprits who falsely reported the crash and recovery of Martian remains. Judge Proctor would certainly gain financially from any tourist attraction his property became.

But, according to this line of reasoning, by alleging the remains were Martian, the two only introduced skepticism to the story, thereby killing any tourist trade likely to result even if the crash really happened and the pilot was an earthly being. In 1897, an airship crash involving humans from San Francisco or New York was sufficient to generate some amount of interest and resulting tourism. If such a scenario was the cause of the false report, the greedy were overcome by their greed and profited not from their voracity (pun intended).

"PAPERS FOUND ON HIS PERSON ... ARE WRITTEN IN SOME UNKNOWN HIEROGLYPHICS"

Sounds oddly like the coded symbolic information in Dellschau's notebooks. Dellschau seemed to be greatly concerned with secrecy and wrote many entries in his notebooks in a symbolic code. Interviews between observers and crew members give the impression that the inventors were apprehensive about maintaining the secrets of the airships. So, does it not seem reasonable that documentation describing important details would be coded?

It certainly seems so. The use of the word "hieroglyphics" in this account was, unfortunately, a poor choice to describe the papers found. This weird claim, among others in this case, was one of the reasons some people branded the crash as a fake. If the correspondent had used the term "coded," the account might have gained more acceptance as being truthful.

"IT MUST HAVE WEIGHED SEVERAL TONS."

My calculations show a hydrogen gas air bag of the approximate dimensions described could lift a total of 5 tons. (See "Looking for the Sonora Aero Club" section of chapter 20.)

"THE SHIP WAS TOO BADLY WRECKED TO FORM ANY CONCLUSION AS TO ITS CONSTRUCTION OR MOTIVE POWER."

In an accident of this type, accompanied by a devastating fire, bodies are disfigured beyond recognition. The vehicle would have burned considerably from the flammable liquids and gases on board, and of course, it would have melted also. Automobile fire can result in severe disfigurement of the involved passengers and quite a meltdown of the structure, even though they do not carry one tenth of one percent of the flammable materials these airships must have carried, a voluminous quanity of hydrogen or other flammable gases. Imagine just how much more of a meltdown occurred in a hydrogen-filled airship. Now, it is no surprise the airship "was too badly wrecked to form any conclusion."

"IT WAS BUILT OF AN UNKNOWN METAL, RESEMBLING ... ALUMINUM AND SILVER"

This metal was probably aluminum alloy or, perhaps, a coated (anodized) aluminum. In either case, the base material was aluminum and was strange only because it was not in general, or popular, use. Farmers used steel and iron for all manner of purposes about the home and farm. At least one character in this story may have experimented with making an aluminum and silver alloy. Prof. Amos E. Dolbear's close confidant and friend Moses Farmer experimented with alloys of aluminum using copper, silver, and other metals as early as 1860. Whatever manufacturing processes Farmer discovered for alloying aluminum, he likely shared the technology with Dolbear. Dolbear may have even worked closely with Farmer in his experiments. In the 1860s, Farmer also made alloys of aluminum and gold to be used in dental (a Benjamin connection?) work and jewelry.

Dellschau claimed that some of the carriages of the 1850s airships were made from aluminum! Also, in November 1896, six months prior to the Aurora crash, Dr. C. A. Smith, in an interview with the San Francisco Call, stated his new airship would be made from aluminum. It seems that for some time prior to the crash, aluminum was in demand as a structural component in the airship business.

"THE TOWN IS FULL OF PEOPLE TO-DAY WHO ARE VIEWING THE WRECK"

Of one fact we can be certain: if the town had not been full of people viewing the wreck, someone from Aurora would have written the newspaper with the allegation that the statement was false and the correspondent a liar.

In 1897, people were quick to correct false reporting, and newspapers were just as quick at printing the corrections. Recall the chapter 6 account ("He Did Not See the Ship") of an R. N. Burt, who was said, by a third party, to have seen the airship. Several days later, the newspaper received a letter from Mr. Burt stating the report was false. Also, newspapers were sensitive to the competitive environment in which they functioned. In many respects, newspapers faced stiffer competition then, due to the number of papers in the same community. A rival newspaper was sure to set the record straight in a civic, helping-hand gesture to the other paper. Credibility, if nothing else, was necessary to keep the competition at arm's length.

Yes, there were famous newspaper-generated hoaxes during the era. But, the editors/authors always came forth with an admission of false reporting after the hoax, typically a serialization, had run its course. No such admission concerning the Aurora crash was ever forthcoming.

On June 16, 2000, I visited with Carolyn Dodson, a longtime Decatur, Texas, resident. Carolyn, taking time off from remodeling her early Texas home, related to me the story of her grandmother, born in the early 1890s in Indian Territory. Her grandmother was named Nova and her maiden name was Bowman. Nova's mother, suffering from ill health, died within two years of Nova's birth. Nova's dad, realizing he could not work and take care of such a young child, brought Nova to his parents' home in Aurora, Texas, in 1895. There, Nova grew up.

She told Carolyn of the daily trips she took with her grandmother into Aurora to pick up the mail and purchase any necessary household items. When Carolyn asked her if there was any truth to the alleged Aurora crash, Nova told her that she remembered going into town that day with her grandmother and there was a state of great excitement and general commotion. Since she was too young, about six years old, she did not remember any particular details, only the sense of a great commotion and the large number of people in town. As she grew older, she realized, from the discussions around the neighborhood, the excitement that day was due to the airship crash.

"THE PILOT'S FUNERAL WILL TAKE PLACE AT NOON TO-MORROW."

Many people, then and now, believe the Aurora crash was faked because the town was so quick to bury the "Martian" body afterward. If the crash truly happened, goes popular thinking, the remains should have been remanded to science for study—after public display, of course. Well, if you have a disfigured and burnt-beyond-recognition body, or pieces thereof, on your hands in 1897, you cannot preserve it by any means other than placing it, or them, in a freezer.

I do not know if Aurora had such a freezer, but I suspect it did. Most communities of any size in 1897 included an icehouse and Aurora was a sizable community. However, I cannot imagine the icehouse owner agreeing to store such an offensive article. His business would suffer greatly, as people undoubtedly would refuse to buy the "contaminated" ice. The only recourse the townspeople had was to bury the body pieces as soon as possible, before the stench became loud. (And I think the majority of the townspeople knew or suspected the body was human, so there really was no valid reason for rendering the carcass over for study, anyway.)

Other individuals have examined the Aurora crash story and offered their views of what really happened. Perhaps the most extensive investigation of the crash was conducted by a Dallas Morning News reporter who investigated the incident in the 1970s. He did not examine the crash in the context of the entire airship story (beginning in the fall of 1896 and proceeding until early May 1897). Instead, he focused on the specific events and accounts surrounding the original crash report. Using questionable logic, he reached the conclusion that the crash and the airship stories were fake. He based this opinion primarily on three points: a 1907 Wise County history excluded any mention of the crash, the inventors never stepped forth to acknowledge their invention, and there were no surviving artifacts in the 1970s.

He believed such a glaring omission from the county history was powerful proof that the crash was a fake. If it actually occurred, he reasoned, Wise County would gleefully include such an interesting story in their official history. He seemed to overlook Aurora's circumstance by 1907. It was one very small community in Wise County, and the "historian," not an Aurora resident, chose subjects of interest to her and wrote whatever pleased her. Such county "histories" are written not necessarily to record the "truth" for posterity, but to record the author's usually highly biased version of it, and they typically involve only the "moneyed" element of the community and their accomplishments.

Since the inventors failed to come forth and claim their rights of invention, including the adulation of an admiring world, the Dallas Morning News reporter believed such a disdainful dismissal by the inventor(s) of posterity's accolades was proof of a great airship hoax. The Dallas Morning News reporter utterly failed to recognize the fact that many people labor and achieve great things without any regard for posterity's outlook upon their contribution to the progress of the human race. But, there are other reasons preventing the airship inventors from stepping up and claiming their rightful place among history's famed. We know they labored in secrecy and desired not fame but to keep their invention to themselves, that they might enjoy their machines. However, in the airship business of 1897, some inventors, possibly the inventors of the Aurora airship or their associates, did attempt to get recognition for their efforts. The crash in Aurora may be just one of the reasons why the inventors went unrecognized for their labors, along with these others (or a combination of them):

- bought out by the railroads

- crashes/deaths

- loss of financial backing

- government intervention

- inventors were really not seeking financial gain

Finally, the Dallas Morning News reporter believed if the airship stories were true, then something relating to the airship—complete vessels, parts, drawings, or documents—would have survived. Recall the number of lawsuits Alexander Graham Bell had to fight to protect his telephone patent—at least 600, including one filed by Prof. A. E. Dolbear. Does it take a great leap in imagination, then, to assume the inventors would have locked up everything related to the airships and their design to maintain the greatest possible secrecy? And who knows if some barn, attic, or cellar near Aurora, Texas; Goshen, New York; or Oroville, California does not possess several locked trunks stuffed with yellowed drawings and documents, moldering and leisurely crumbling to pieces? And perhaps, lying nearby, slowly rusting, are a few odd looking (airship) implements of some supposed but unknown farming utility. And there is the possibility that the descendants of William H. H. Hart, former California attorney general, or his law partner, have in their possession the legal documents Hart was preparing for the inventors.

Countering the conclusions of reporters and others who do not believe there was a crash are several compelling eyewitness accounts. In the 1970s interviews, two lifelong Aurora residents, who were about twelve years old in 1897, claimed to remember the crash was factual, each giving the interviewer some amount of details. One individual stated she never talked of the crash before, for fear of being branded a liar or kook. In the 1970s, the United States was inundated with numerous UFO sightings, and admitting having seen one was becoming less burdensome, even for old folks. The impression given by the lady in the interview was that the 1970s climate was conducive for admitting she had seen such wonders long ago.

One point of contention between one of the individuals interviewed in the 1970s and the original newspaper story revolves around the structure the airship supposedly struck. The 1897 Aurora newspaper stringer informed everyone the airship struck a windmill. In the 1970s, at least one Aurora resident claimed Judge Proctor had no windmill, but rather a windlass. The Wise County tax records support the account of the 1970s resident, as there is no windmill listed in the property-tax records of Judge Proctor. However, if the windmill was relatively new, it probably would not show up on the tax records. A visit to the former property of Judge Proctor reveals the home was sitting upon a small hill. I have never seen any windmills in Texas reposing upon a hillside. The distance from the surface to the water table makes a windmill impractical if it is not sitting in the vicinity of a creek or other low or level ground. So, from this observation alone, Judge Proctor probably did not have a windmill close to his house. But, not far off is a creek bed.

Does it make any difference which one—a windmill or a windlass— was on the judge's property? In the overall airship mystery, it does not. It is sufficient to know the airship struck something and subsequently exploded and burned. But, the validity of the airship story does not depend upon any single facet of the story but rests upon the entire collection of stories—the sequence of events from the initial 1896 California sighting to the last sighting off the coast of New York in 1897—which is compelling when you consider all the individual accounts. When viewed as a whole, they quickly jell to form a coherent set of events that yield sensible answers to penetrating questions.

Another point of contention concerning the validity of the Aurora crash concerns the lack of crash debris at the alleged site. According to one airship investigator, MUFON researchers allegedly combed what was Judge Proctor's property in the 1970s. He claimed the investigators found bits and pieces of metal scattered about the place and analyzed the pieces in two separate laboratories. The alleged analysis stated the metal had been subject to a very high temperature (i.e., molten) and had an unknown crystalline structure. Yet, the metal was determined to be of a common type found in period stoves (perhaps cast iron?). The researcher did not disclose whether the analysis labeled the metal as aluminum or iron.

I twice tried to contact MUFON's Texas state director to ask him if he could confirm published statements supposedly made by MUFON regarding the recovery and identification of metal shards from the Aurora crash site. He declined the interview.

I then e-mailed the national director of MUFON. A representative from the company, who gave no name in the e-mail, gave a cryptic response: "As for the tale of the UFO accident in Texas, we have no information at this level, although the story persists in UFO lore. The ancillary aspect of retrieved artifacts and analysis of same may be apocryphal. Your query is being copied herewith to other MUFON offices; perhaps they can shed more light on MUFON's alleged involvement, if any."

If MUFON examined the Aurora crash site and recovered anything worthwhile, it seems the national director is not aware of it and the state director does not want to talk about it. For the MUFON national director's office to refer to the recovery and analysis of crash debris as ancillary implies that the company considers such evidence unimportant. What a strange approach from an organization supposedly interested in determining and proving the existence of UFOs. Also, by referring to them as apocryphal, is the national director's office informing me that MUFON's recovery and subsequent analysis of Aurora crash debris is not a true story? I strongly suspect MUFON did not recover any metal debris and the alleged MUFON analysis did not happen, as the organization has not come forth with detailed information concerning their findings. I question if the MUFON folks even went to the correct property, or any property, to search for crash debris.

In any case, anyone searching for metal shards would not likely recover any sizable pieces, as those would have been melted for horseshoes and farm implements. For the record, I did not observe any crash debris when I visited the property.

What happened to all of the metal that was certainly left upon the smoldering ground after the crash? Does "waste not, want not" ring any bells? The creed was a battle cry for people in 1897. Every last bit of metal from the crash would have been shoveled into a cart and hauled off to the blacksmith's shop for immediate recycling. And can you guess who the local smithy was? None other than our friendly, informative, government signal officer, Mr. T. J. Weems, who doubled as the town blacksmith.

If one discounts the supposed recovery of an alien life form, then believing the Aurora crash actually happened is quite easy. Just hours before the crash, numerous credible witnesses saw an airship experiencing mechanical difficulty within easy flying distance of Aurora. Several credible witnesses and bystanders have said over the years that such a crash did occur. In the context of the numerous airship sightings in 1896 and 1897, it is plausible such a crash really happened. Unfortunately, a couple of Aurora citizens—by advocating the remains were Martian supposedly in an effort to increase the local tourist trade—have cast doubt upon the historical significance of the airships' existence. For these airships, flying faster and higher than any flying vessels produced in the early twentieth century, set flying records before records were kept.

WHAT HAPPENED TO THE AIRSHIPS?

In the spring of 1897, the press was buzzing with reports of airship sightings. Experts were rendering opinions on the validity of these accounts, and there were as many opinions as there were opinion makers. But there was one universal opinion: whoever successfully flew a machine about the skies first would become a rich and famous man.

The statement given by the inventor in the chapter 6 account "C. G. Williams Saw It"—"See here, young man, don't give this thing away. We are experimenting with this vessel. So far it is a success. We expect to revolutionize travel and transportation"— is certainly pregnant with the thought of great financial gain. Human nature being what it is, we can assume the inventors expected at least some gain and recognition from their efforts. With such a financial reward beckoning, why did the airships' architects fail to reap the reward of their labors? Possible answers include (1) a buyout by the railroads, (2) crashes/deaths, (3) loss of financial backing (4) government intervention, (5) they really were not seeking financial gain, (6) some combination of the above. The technology of the period admits the capability of 100 miles-per-hour-plus flight for inventive individuals who seized the opportunity and made headlines around the country. Unfortunately, the inventors did not exploit their handiwork for great financial gain. If they had, the world might have been different in 1900. So, what happened?

If the inventors succeeded in revolutionizing travel and transportation, ruthless railroad barons would certainly see an end to their ironclad dominance in transportation. Could New York railroad financiers have plotted the destruction of the airships and their inventors to maintain their dominance in the most significant industry in America? Railroading was so important to the nation's economy, Dow included ten railroad stocks in the original complement of twelve stocks comprising the Dow (Jones)

Transportation Averages in 1884. Is it possible for one industry to throttle another, fledgling industry? Over the last one hundred years, we have witnessed just how ruthless certain individuals, including William Randolph Hearst, can be in protecting their rice bowl. Railroad barons may have played a role in suppressing the success of the airships.

There were four airship crashes. If nine airships were produced and four were destroyed, we still have five airships unaccounted for (regarding their final outcome). The inventors do not mention how many airships crashed during initial flight-testing. Perhaps, of all the airships, only four successfully completed their initial tests, and those began the series of flight tests in the spring of 1897—but, because too little information is available, we can only speculate.

If the crashes took the lives of the inventors, then we have at least a partial explanation why the technology was not successfully pursued any further. The financial backers may have realized that, while the lift and motive technology existed to propel the machines over 100 miles per hour, the reliability and safety technologies required to build ships for commercial use were not adequate.

A RECAP OF POSSIBLE CRASHES

Nina

The Nina crashed in Aurora.

Pina

For at least two nights she was searching the Gulf for her missing sister ship, the Nina, which had crashed in Aurora. The figures of the sightings for April 20 and 21 show an airship around southern Louisiana early in the morning. This airship, the Pina, was searching the waters while her sister ship, the Colada, was searching the Texas interior for the missing Nina.

Notice after April 22 the land sightings continued in the interior of the state, meaning the Colada was still following a search plan. It probably did not expect to meet up with the Pina for several more days. But, no more airship sightings occurred near the Gulf after April 22. Why? On the night of the twenty-second, the Pina probably crashed somewhere off the Gulf Coast while performing its search.

Colada

The number of sightings after April 22 were greatly reduced, as would be expected if only one airship (of the original three appearing in Texas) was left. From the April 24 sightings, it appears that soon after April 22, the Colada drifted down to southeast Texas and began a frantic hunt for the second missing ship, the Pina. The evidence for such a supposition lies in the flight patterns of the Colada, as sightings began again in the southeast area, while simultaneously the number of sightings faded over the interior.

The last reported sighting in Texas occurred on the evening of May 11. What happened to the last airship? Perhaps by this date the Colada pilot and crew knew of the Aurora crash from reading the newspapers they had acquired during their search, and they may have suspected the same fate for the Pina.

After fruitlessly searching the southeastern area for several days for some sign of the missing Pina, they decided to return to their home base. But, which one—California, Iowa, or New York? On May 13, the Denver Evening Post reported the statements of a seafaring captain regarding the crash of a balloon or airship at sea off the coast of New York.

> Balloon at Sea
> Large Airship Reported Lost in the Ocean Near New York
> Quarantine, S.I. (Staten Island), May 13 Pilot William Furrie of Sandy Hook Pilot Boat No. 20, which brought the Norwegian fruit steamer Leon into port this morning reports on arrival at Quarantine that while cruising at 5:40 o'clock yesterday afternoon about three miles east of Sand Hook light ship he sighted a large balloon apparently about four miles south.
> The wind was from the southward and the balloon came along at a rapid rate, sinking gradually. The pilot boat was headed toward the balloon, but it fell into the water and sank within a few yards of the boat (Denver Evening Post, May 13, 1897, p. 1).

Unfortunately Pilot Furrie does not give a more detailed description of what he saw sinking into the ocean other than labeling it a "large balloon." Was it a typical round, gas, air-bag balloon—like those used in balloon launches at modern-day festivals? Or, was the pilot describing a dirigible-shaped balloon? Note the sub-title of the article: "Large Airship Reported Lost in the Ocean Near New York." People of the era sometimes referred to airships as balloons, but they never referred to a balloon as an airship.

The wind direction is an interesting element. It is from the south, meaning that the airship the pilot saw was approaching New York from the south. ("The wind was from the southward and the balloon came along at a rapid rate" implies the "balloon" was traveling with the wind.) The date of May 13 is intriguing, as the last sighting in Texas was May 11. The timing is about right for the Colada to have traveled from the coast of Texas to New York. Could this be an account of the last moments of the last airship? And could the pilot have been Hiram Wilson? Did he lose his life at sea on May 13, 1897, in a tragic airship accident off the coast of New York as he tried to return home?

The Fourth and Fifth (Iowa) Airships

How many airships were there? In C. A. Smith's newspaper interview, he mentions building three airships. Hart mentions uniting the East Coast "interests" with the West Coast interests, thereby implying there is at least one East Coast airship (the Wilsons'?); then we have the reference to the five airships built in a "quiet Iowa village." When we add these numbers we come up with nine airships. But, I don't think there were nine. I think there were just five, the five constructed in Iowa.

Let's look at the number of airships from this perspective for a moment. When the "interests" where united, we have no idea how far along the construction of the airships had progressed. Let's assume the construction was not yet begun. Then, it is reasonable to find all the airships were built in the same location, if nothing else, just for the convenience and efficiency of the matter. In this case, we have Smith's three airships and the Wilson's airship. That gives us four airships. Where is the fifth? I think Marcellus McGary was a member of the airship team and his airship, its manufacture in Keokuk, Iowa, well documented, is the fifth Iowa airship.

Several newspaper accounts refer to "five airships built in a quiet Iowa village." Yet, only three appeared over Dallas on April 15, 1897. Assuming the Texas airships were all manufactured in Iowa, there are still two Iowa airships unaccounted for. Where were the fourth and fifth airships that night? We must delve into the Midwest and the Northwest to determine the answer.

An April 13, 1897, Detroit Evening News article ("Went to Smash," p. 4) reported an airship crash. According to the article, two old soldiers, George W. Somers and William Chadburn, saw the airship on Sunday (April 11) evening near Galesburg, Michigan. Both men claim the airship had passed over into the distance when they heard a dull explosion and the airship immediately disappeared from their sight. They described the report as the sound of heavy ordnance followed by the sound of flying projectiles.

Continuing in the same article, a Mr. and Mrs. Wallace said they distinctly heard an explosion in the same general area, but thought it was thunder. But, the night sky was clear on the evening of April 11, 1897. Two miles from Scotts, Michigan, a farmer found "some part of an electrical appliance" in his field. In another location, a "partially fused propeller" made of "some light material" was found. The explosion must have been centered over Comstock Township. Three men engaged in shingling a barn testified that the morning after the explosion the completed area of the roof was embedded with metal fragments, with many penetrating through the shingles and impinging upon the underlying boards.

In a Battle Creek (Michigan) Daily Moon article ("The Airship," April 13,1897, p. 4), the newspaper duly reported the appearance of the airship, witnessed by "some 20 reputable citizens," at 8:55 "last night" (April 12?) over Battle Creek, traveling southeast at an altitude of about one mile. According to the article, an explosion was heard, sparks flew from the airship, and it dipped down then gained altitude again before all its lights were extinguished, becoming invisible in the clear but dark sky. This same incident is reported by several other newspapers in the Battle Creek vicinity. Apparently, the explosion and subsequent shower of sparks was sufficiently loud to attract the attention of all nearby communities.

On April 15, the Detroit Evening News ("Airship Again," p. 4) reported George Parks and his wife were crossing a field about five miles from Battle Creek on the evening of April 13 and found the wheel of an airship seen crossing the field earlier. The wheel may have come from the airship that exploded in the vicinity. The Parks family makes no mention in the article of hearing the explosion.

According to the stated direction of travel in the Daily Moon, after passing over Battle Creek, the airship would soon pass over Galesburg then Comstock. Comstock is 22 miles west of Battle Creek and now a part of Kalamazoo. Galesburg is 17 miles west of Battle Creek and five miles east of Kalamazoo. The date of the article and the time of explosion ("last night") seem to indicate that the explosion heard at Battle Creek was on the April 12, 1897. But, the date could have been April 11, the same night the airship was seen just a few miles away at Galesburg and Comstock when it was heard to explode.

Other than the debris mentioned in these articles, no additional physical evidence of a crash exists. No other large pieces were recovered, and there are no known reports of any human remains being found. How could two communities 22 miles apart have heard the same explosion? When an explosion occurs at some altitude, the resulting sound wave may travel great distances. The Daily Moon account places the airship's altitude at about one mile. The airship was geographically situated where all three communities could hear a loud explosion from the reported altitude of the airship.

Our fourth airship was in Michigan on April 12, disabled (possibly destroyed) and unable to follow its sister ships to Texas.

We have one Iowa airship left to account for. While the three airships were preparing to pass over Dallas on the night of April 16, another airship was seen on the ground with a broken propeller near Mead, Washington.

> The Airship
>
> Some People Claim To Have seen It
> A number of people around the city today are declaring in positive terms that an air ship has been seen in this neighborhood. Some declare they have seen it themselves, others have seen people who have seen the machine. One man who gives his name as Thurber declares he saw the air ship, a cigar shaped machine made of aluminum about 25 feet long. He says it was stranded beyond Mead at the mouth of Dead Man creek, and had one propeller broken. It seemed to have been abandoned by its owner, but it was surrounded by a big crowd (Spokane [Washington] Daily Chronicle, April 16,1897, p. 5).

Mead is 1,964 miles from Dallas. In the spring of 1897, we can account for three airships in Texas, an airship that exploded over Michigan, and another airship seen broken down in Washington State. We have accounted for the five airships built in "a quiet Iowa village."

We can say the evidence presented in this book demonstrates all of the airship characters mentioned in the various newspaper articles regarding the 1897 airship mystery were intimately connected to each other by virtue of place, profession, organization, and/or family. The actors in the airship mystery were real people with real professions and their relationships with each other encompassed five decades of American history, including a Civil War, an Indian war, a gold rush, and the great migration of settlers from the East to the West. These men were pioneers not only in the sense of settling new territory, but they were also pioneers in the fledgling aerospace industry. Real men flew real airships in the spring of 1897.

The crash off Staten Island may have been the last sighting of any of the five airships that first stunned then amazed the country for one brief moment in our history. If so, it is probable that the airships' aluminum superstructure and other parts are salvageable. A successful search and recovery of the remains could confirm the airship story and credit the brave inventors and adventurers with their wonderful flying machines.

CONCLUSION

I worked as a shift supervisor for the Naval Space Surveillance System for a year. I have worked on classified government projects for about twenty years. I have enjoyed the beauty of the night sky for many hundreds of nights. I have never observed a UFO in my entire life. I love the idea of our planet Earth being just one member of a large body of inhabited planets scattered throughout the universe. For some reason, it seems scary to think that if we fail, all intelligent life in the universe will be extinguished. And who knows how many of those planets may have civilizations populated with creatures far more advanced than our own that know how to successfully propel themselves outside their solar system? Yet, I know most earthly UFO sightings have a plausible explanation that does not resolve to "aliens from another planet" or "mass hysteria."

There is a growing body of evidence to support the assertion that a group of individuals designed, built, and flew airships from the late 1840s. Their early work in the 1850s may have lead directly to the manufacture and flight of several airships responsible for the great 1896 and 1897 airship mystery. Although very secretive, their work is gaining attention and additional details are coming to light.

A plausible and very strong case for seemingly incredible high-speed airship flight in the Texas skies during 1897 was presented in these pages. If we believe the newspaper accounts, at least those with the same timbre, we are left to conclude that a small group of inventors and adventurers, in 1897, amazed the world for a few short days in the spring with their wonderful flying machines before unexpectedly meeting untimely ends. And perhaps locked away and forgotten in some dusty attic waiting for another helpful nurse to "take care of that mess and clean it all up" are documents that will reveal the whole airship story.

Afterword

> "We must be alarmingly enterprising, and we must be startlingly original . . . and do new and striking things which constitute a revolution."
> —William Randolph Hearst (date unknown)

In 1897, American newspapers sent hundreds of reporters, artists, and photographers to Havana, Cuba, to document Spanish atrocities during the Cuban war for independence. The war correspondents, including such notable personalities as author Stephen Crane and artist Frederic Remington, when they arrived, found no Spanish atrocities. In fact, they found very little worth reporting. "There is no war," the great Western artist Frederic Remington wrote to his newspaper boss, William Randolph Hearst, "request to be recalled." The infamous Hearst rashly sent a succinct cable reply to Remington, "Please remain. You furnish the pictures, I'll furnish the war."

On the moonless night of February 15, 1898, after most of the crew had retired for the night, the American battleship U.S.S. Maine mysteriously exploded in Havana Harbor, Cuba, with the loss of 270 American men. No unusual sounds were heard just before the explosion. Although Spain had no means for delivering a torpedo to the Maine's hull, the newspapers claimed the Spanish military was responsible for torpedoing the battleship. For weeks after the Maine sinking, the New York Journal (a Hearst paper) devoted more than eight pages a day to the disaster. Soon, the American public was screaming for revenge. President McKinley was not in favor of war, but the United States Congress, responding to popular sentiment, declared war on Spain.

William Randolph Hearst asked, "How do you like the [New York] Journal's War?" New York Evening Post columnist Edward L. Gotkin acidly retorted, "It's a crying shame that men should work such mischief ... to sell more papers."

Isn't it an odd coincidence Dr. Solomon Andrews demonstrated, for the War Department's consideration, in September 1863 a motorless, that is noiseless, airship seemingly capable of delivering ordnance to ground, or water, targets? And isn't it another odd coincidence a fellow by the name of Rich experimented dropping torpedoes by balloon in February 1897? Rich performed his torpedo experiments in the great state of Iowa. Perhaps, Cuba was the intended destination the airships were bound for after all. As there was not much in the way of a Spanish fleet to bomb and since the United States had not yet declared war on Spain, maybe, just maybe, Hearst decided to speed things up a bit by bombing the Maine, just to "furnish the war."

AIRSHIP PATENT APPLICATIONS

The following figures depict the patent applications of Solomon Andrews (awarded July 5, 1864, patent number 43,449), Charles Smith (awarded August 11, 1896, patent number 585,803), and three other inventors (H. Heintz, patent number 580,941, awarded April 20, 1897; E. J. St. Croix, patent number 573,549, awarded December 22, 1896; and D. Reed, patent number 591,692, awarded October 12, 1897). Additionally, a patent application for Samuel West (of San Francisco, patent number 553,634, awarded January 28, 1896), not included here, is noteworthy because William H. H. Hart of San Francisco is assigned one-half of the patent rights.

UNITED STATES PATENT OFFICE.

SOLOMON ANDREWS, OF PERTH AMBOY, NEW JERSEY, ASSIGNOR TO SOLOMON ANDREWS, JR.

IMPROVEMENT IN AEROSTATS.

Specification forming part of Letters Patent No. 43,449, dated July 5, 1864.

To all whom it may concern:

Be it known that I, SOLOMON ANDREWS, of Perth Amboy, in the county of Middlesex, in the State of New Jersey, have invented a mode by which the air may be navigated, and a new and useful machine by which it may be done which machine I call an "Aereon;" and I do hereby declare that the following is a full, clear, and exact description of the construction and operation of the same, reference being had to the annexed drawings, making a part of this specification.

In Figure 1 there are three aerostats of a cylindrical form pointed at each end, joined together by a membrane or diaphragm at their longitudinal equators, covered by a net from which four rows of cords extend to a long and narrow car suspended below the center, the ballast and aeronaut in the car. It ascends and descends on inclined planes in the atmosphere, because of its form or construction, however it is poised obliquely. The angles of inclination are produced by the position of the aeronaut in the car or the removal of other weights, and it is steered by a common rudder.

To navigate the air with this vessel, it is only necessary to step to the rear end of the car, thus elevating the bow five to ten degrees, and by throwing out a little ballast she will go ahead on the ascending plane. When she has ascended as high as the aeronaut wishes to go, he opens one of the valves and discharges some gas, at the same time stepping toward the forward end of the car, which will depress the bow, elevate the stern, and so change the angle of inclination, when she will go ahead on the descending plane. On a near approach to the earth he has only to step to the middle or rear end of the car, and thus elevate the bow. To stop her momentum at any rate of velocity, sail horizontally for a short distance, or throw out more ballast and go ahead again on the ascending plane. Having forward motion, she is turned by the rudder just like a boat on the water. Stern way may also be had if desired. Before the ballast is exhausted come down to a depot, replenish the wasted gas and ballast, and go on again.

One pound of ascending or descending power will give to this vessel a forward movement of one mile per hour, and each additional pound will increase her speed in about the same ratio, so that by ascending or descending with a power of two hundred pounds a speed of two hundred miles per hour may be attained, and common varnished linen is strong enough to resist the pressure on the bow at that rapid rate, if brought to a point and held so by some inflexible frame-work.

The foregoing I consider a full and comprehensive description of my invention; but as aerial vessels have never before been directed in their course by the will of man, I shall go more into detail, even at the risk of being verbose.

I effect locomotion in the atmosphere in any given direction by means of the form or construction of the aerostat, the motive power being the attraction of gravitation.

To be more explicit, the difference between the specific gravity of the aerostat and that of the atmosphere in which it floats I use to propel the aerostat over the surface of the earth, by ascending and descending on inclined planes in the atmosphere by means of the shape or form of the aerostat itself, or a disk thereto attached.

A balloon or spherical body lighter than an equal bulk of the atmosphere will ascend perpendicularly to the horizon, as was demonstrated by the Messrs. Montgolfier, of France. If currents prevail in the atmosphere, the balloon will of course move in the same direction at the same rate of speed. If heavier than the same bulk of air it displaces, it will descend in the same way. But if made in any other shape and kept suspended by the center of gravity in any oblique position it will ascend or descend, as the case may be, on the line of least resistance. Thus, if made in a flattened and elongated form and kept in an oblique position, it will ascend or descend in the plane of its longest axis, because it meets with less resistance in that direction, and this produces a forward movement. If such an aerostat be held perfectly horizontal, it will move only perpendicularly, (supposing no current in the air,) because it finds no opposing force to the direction of gravitation, and gravitation always acts perpendicularly to the horizon. It is, then, by an opposing force or resistance to gravitation on one portion of the aerostat by which I compel the aerostat to move forward on a semi-hori-

UNITED STATES PATENT OFFICE.

CHARLES ABBOTT SMITH, OF SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA.

AIR-SHIP.

SPECIFICATION forming part of Letters Patent No. 565,805, dated August 11, 1896.

Application filed April 2, 1896. Serial No. 585,893. (No model.)

To all whom it may concern:

Be it known that I, CHARLES ABBOTT SMITH, a citizen of the United States, residing at San Francisco, in the county of San Francisco and State of California, have invented certain new and useful Improvements in Aeronautics; and I do declare the following to be a full, clear, and exact description of the invention, such as will enable others skilled in the art to which it appertains to make and use the same, reference being had to the accompanying drawings, and to the figures of reference marked thereon, which form a part of this specification.

My invention relates to the construction of air-ships and to the means for guiding and controlling the same, the object being to provide a navigable vessel having large carrying capacity and adapted to be manipulated and controlled with ease and facility.

In the accompanying drawings, which illustrate my invention and form a part of this specification, Figure 1 represents a side view of the ship; Fig. 2, a rear end view; Fig. 3, a vertical transverse section on the line a a in Fig. 1; Fig. 4, a vertical longitudinal section on the line b b in Fig. 3.

I propose to construct the hull or body of the ship of thin sheet metal—preferably of aluminium or of aluminium alloy on account of the lightness of this material—and to render the same buoyant by charging it with hydrogen or other light gas. The vessel so constructed and charged is propelled by a screw-propeller of usual or preferred construction and is guided or steered by horizontal and vertical rudders, by the manipulation of which it is directed upward, downward, or laterally, and its direction changed at will. I propose also to augment the buoyancy and carrying capacity by means of hinged vibrating wings operated from within, all as hereinafter fully described.

The hull or body comprises a cylindrical portion 1 and a pointed or cone-shaped bow 2, the body portion having at the rear end an overhang 4, which projects back over the screw 5, and to which is hinged the horizontal rudder 6, whereby the vessel is guided in a vertical direction.

The hull is divided into compartments 7 8 9 by horizontal partitions 10 11, (see Figs. 3 and 4,) extending longitudinally through the body portion 1 and somewhat into the cone-shaped bow 2, the middle compartment 8 being intended for passengers, freight, &c., and for the reception of the necessary driving machinery, while the upper and lower compartments 7 9 are intended to be charged with gas. The middle compartment, which may be denominated the "cabin" or "saloon," is provided at the sides with windows 12 for the admission of light, and in the bottom with openings or wells 13 14, which extend through the lower compartment 9 and through the bottom of the hull, as shown in Fig. 4. The first of these openings, which is in the pointed bow 2, is intended as a lookout in a forward direction, while the other, 14, which is aproximately amidships, is provided for the purpose of permitting an anchor or grapple 15 to be lowered and hoisted therethrough.

16 16 designate two vertical rudders mounted at the stern at opposite sides of the screw 5, the latter being in rear of the rudders, so as not to interfere therewith. These rudders may be operated by hand or by machinery in the usual manner, and therefore no connections are shown in the drawings.

17 17 are two wings hinged at the upper part of the vessel, extending approximately the whole length of the cylindrical body portion 1 and curved into concavo-convex form, so as to lie, when folded, snugly against the sides of the body. (See Fig. 2.) These wings are adapted to be vibrated, and are intended by their action on the air to assist in buoying and sustaining the vessel, their action being similar to that of a bird in flying, and it will be understood that when vibrated regularly and in unison they will exert a lifting force, their convex upper surfaces offering less resistance to the air in their rising movements than is offered by their concave surfaces in the falling movements, the difference being the measure of their lifting force at each vibration.

As a means for operating the wings I show a series of drums 18, geared with and adapted to be rotated back and forth by an engine 19, of any suitable or preferred style or construction; but other mechanisms and motive power may be employed if found expedient, these features forming no part of my invention, which is independent of the driving mechanism, it being only necessary that suitable machinery and connections be employed for operating the wings. In practice I propose to employ either a naphtha-engine or a small electric motor, according to the purposes for which the ship is to be used and the distances to be traversed. Cords or ropes 20, attached to the wings, extend to the drums 18, passing through vertical tubes 21, which project above the vessel, and over pulleys or rollers 22, mounted at the tops of said tubes, said rollers being employed for the purpose of preventing friction. By rotating the drums 18 in one direction the wings are raised and by rotating in the opposite direction they are allowed to fall. Other cords 23, also attached to the wings, pass over pulleys or rollers 24, mounted at the sides of the vessel, and thence through openings 25 in the walls thereof to the drums 18, the arrangement being such that the cords 20 23 are alternately wound up and unwound to impart the required vibratory movements to the wings.

While I show separate drums for the cords 20 23, it is to be understood that they may be manipulated by a single drum, it being only required in such case that they be connected with the wings at equal distances from the hinges or axes of vibration in order that they may be kept taut while being wound up and unwound. The horizontal rudder 4 is operated also by means of cords 26 and 27, attached, respectively, to the upper and lower sides thereof and running also to the interior of the vessel, where they may be manipulated in the same manner as the cords 20 23 to raise or depress the rudder, or they may be manipulated by hand, as may be found most expedient.

For purposes of illustration I show a separate motor 28 applied to the shaft of the propeller 5, but it is to be understood that in practice I propose to use a single engine or motor, one having the least possible weight, and to drive all the operating machinery thereby.

29 designates a safety-valve of any preferred style or construction applied to the gas-chamber to prevent overcharging. As represented in Fig. 4, this valve has a stem 30, which projects down through the chamber or compartment 7 and the partition 10 into the passenger-compartment 8, whereby it is adapted to be opened at pleasure to permit the gas to escape. In this connection it is proper to state that the two gas-chambers are in communication with each other, so that a single charging-opening and a single safety-valve will answer for both. A communicating passage is shown at 31 in Fig. 4.

The gas-chambers are charged with gas through a valve 32 of any suitable construction, which valve, after the charge has been introduced, is to be tightly closed.

Having now described my invention, I claim—

1. The aerial vessel shown and described, the same comprising a cylindrical shell or body having a pointed or cone-shaped front end, longitudinally-extending concavo-convex wings hinged to the body at the top thereof and having a curvature corresponding with that of the body so as to fold closely against the sides thereof, in combination with machinery located within the body at, or near, the bottom for operating said wings.

2. In an aerial vessel of the character described having a hollow cylindrical body and a pointed or cone-shaped front end, the whole adapted to be charged with gas, in combination with longitudinally-extending concavo-convex wings having a curvature corresponding with that of the body and adapted to fold closely against the sides thereof, said wings being hinged to the top of the body, machinery located within the body for operating the wings, and devices also operated by said machinery for propelling and steering the vessel.

3. In an aerial vessel of the character described, a hollow cylindrical body having a pointed or cone-shaped front end, the body being divided by suitable partitions into an upper compartment for gas and a lower compartment for machinery, passengers, &c. in combination with devices for propelling and steering, longitudinally-extending concavo-convex wings hinged to the body at the top thereof and adapted to fold against the sides, and driving machinery located in said lower compartment for operating said wings and the propelling and steering devices.

4. In an air-ship the combination of a hollow cylindrical body divided longitudinally by a horizontal partition into an upper compartment adapted to be charged with gas, and a compartment below the gas-compartment for the reception of machinery, passengers, &c., longitudinally-extending concavo-convex wings hinged to the top of the body and extending outward in opposite directions, and suitable machinery within the ship connected with said wings to operate the same.

5. An air-ship having a cylindrical body, longitudinally-extending concavo-convex wings hinged to the body at the top thereof, and mechanism within the body connected with said wings to operate the same positively in both directions.

6. An air-ship having a hollow cylindrical body, a compartment for machinery, passengers &c. located wholly within the cylindrical body, the latter, outside of said compartment being adapted to be charged with gas, longitudinally-extending concavo-convex wings hinged to the top of the body, driving machinery located within said compartment, and cords or similar connections leading from said driving machinery both to the upper and lower sides of said wings for operating the same positively in both directions.

In testimony whereof I affix my signature in presence of two witnesses.

Michael Busby, himself an engineer with experience in avionics, space surveillance, and flight-test engineering, examines the evidence and weighs the various theories. The result is a compelling argument favoring the existence of a secret aviation program that predates the Wright brothers' famous flight in 1903.

Michael Busby earned his bachelor of science degree in electrical engineering from the University of Texas and served eight years in the U.S. Marine Corps. His engineering career has spanned twenty-four countries and has included projects with the Naval Space Surveillance System, Collins Avionics, Rockwell International, and Lockheed Martin Aeronautics Corporation. Mr. Busby lives in Longview, Texas.

"It sailed directly over the public square, and when it reached the north part of town collided with the tower of Judge Proctor's windmill and went to pieces with a terrific explosion, scattering debris over several acres of ground, wrecking the windmill and water tank, and destroying the judge's flower garden."

—Dallas Morning News, April 19, 1897

Six years before the Wright brothers' successful flight and more than fifty years before the term "UFO" was invented, eyewitnesses from California to Michigan to Louisiana reported seeing mysterious craft sailing through the sky. Newspapers across the country chronicled these sightings, like the account of the spectacular crash in Aurora, Texas, quoted above. Theories abounded, but the facts have eluded historians.

In Solving the 1897 Airship Mystery, Michael Busby reveals the truth about a secretive group of inventive men whose flying machines enthralled the nation six years before the Wright brothers flew at Kittyhawk, North Carolina. He has researched the backgrounds of the numerous individuals involved, including such prominent figures as San Francisco attorney George Collins, who professed to be legal representative for the airship inventors; Dr. Elmer Benjamin, San Francisco dentist and inventor; Prof. Amos Dolbear, chairman of Tufts University's Department of Astronomy and Physics; Prof. and Brig. Gen. Samuel E. Tillman, professor of chemistry (U.S. Military Academy—class of 1869) and U.S. Military Academy superintendent (1917-19); U.S. Marshal John Shelby Williams, federal marshal for the eastern district of Texas; California attorney general William H. H. Hart, immigrant, orphan, boy soldier, Indian fighter, and California pioneer; Dr. Solomon Andrews, the Perth Amboy, New Jersey, mayor, inventor, and physician; and San Francisco physician Dr. Charles A. Smith, who, with Dr. Andrews, pioneered aviation.

A call to duty from a divided country brought these men together during America's deadly fratricidal war. Serving in the Army of the Potomac, they forged lifelong friendships in the mud and blood of battle. After the Civil War they returned to their civilian professions, ultimately uniting again to design, build, and fly the amazing airships of 1897.

Featuring exhaustive research and numerous tables, illustrations, and maps, Solving the 1897 Airship Mystery is a startling addition to the history of flight.

"It is the glory of Yahweh to conceal a matter; but it is the honor of kings to search it out."

Proverb of Solomon

Foreword

The Book you are about to read is a true story. It is published in direct disobedience to The Families Orders. Some of the names, places, and dates may have been changed. This has been done to protect the innocent. With that being said, those who have eyes to see and ears to hear will find a dangerous map hidden within. The format, chapter location, and structure are engineered to facilitate the revelation of this map. If you can decipher the text, use The Clue, and follow the breadcrumbs, they will lead you to the gold-laden coffers of chaos, the perpetrators of perversion, and those sycophantic serpents hiding in plain site. May each of you hungry hunters seek to expose truth, freedom, and redemption to all.

I challenge every person who starts this book to read it all the way through. Read it carefully page-by-page and chapter-by-chapter until its final word. This book will not be easy to read. There will be a million reasons to quit along the way to its conclusion. If you endure the distractions, fears, and frustrations, I assure you of this it will be worth it. For the words written within have the power to change your life and the lives of this world forever.

PART 1

Chapter One

The Unknown

Where do you begin a story that would take years to share? Do you start on the day they held you under the water until you thought you'd drown? What about the bitterly cold night when as a young child they made you kill a stranger? How about the time you were bleeding out after being shot and stabbed watching Death come to harvest your furious soul? Why not share what it feels like to tell your beautiful wife your past was a lie and the truth is filled with secrets of the darkest kinds; that waiting behind the cracked lid of reality is horrors, madness, and murder?

I could tell you stories that would freeze the blood in your veins turning them into petrified rivers of shock, terror, and disbelief. The kind of memories that squeeze the air from your lungs and leave you breathless desperate to dismiss them as crazy fantasy. I don't think this book is for those stories. No, those stories will be whispered in the quiet to those who need to know so that they too can be set free. Freed from whatever it is they were made to do or was done unto them. Those wounded ones, those survivors of atrocities so horrible most scream and wail desperately denying they even exist. Denial can only keep you comfortable for so long. Soon the day will come when the houses of ignorance we've built our lives upon will come crumbling down.

I assure you of this: there is such a thing as radical, intelligent evil, and I was bred and born firmly into its clutches. But I was not made for those shackles of slavery; nor were those irons made to keep my soul from ever becoming free. As it's been written, "You will know The Truth and The Truth will set you free." Through many love-filled but tear-stained experiences I have come to know The Truth, and it is because of The Truth I write you these words as a free man. I write these words with free choice burning a path of hope, which is turning the darkness of my past into the redemptive story of Good redeeming Evil. A story of Light piercing the maddening darkness and revealing to the world that hope is waiting for all those souls held in prisons of destruction, despair, and death.

We could start this true tale with the introduction, the acknowledgements, and Chapter One, but I think instead, it's best if we start much later. We will begin where I hoped it would have ended but the "boy meets girl and they lived happily ever after" was never meant to be. Our story begins when in walked my safe harbor. The woman who held me tight while Pierced Hands of Hope ripped me out of The Underworld of Secrets and murder. It was a world, which sought with reckless abandon to drag me back into its poisoned abyss. Together their hands would hold onto me as Ancient Royal Families who rule Underworld empires of beauty, bondage, and blood did their best to snuff out our redemption.

Chapter Two

Our Choice

The water is at my feet again. It laps at my toes tempting me to take a plunge. I see the face of this man of many staring back at me. We know more than we'd ever forgotten. The memories have come back in waves, breakers, and billows big enough to capsize the cargo ships full of containers stacked a hundred and fifty feet into the air. A thousand questions are pummeling my mind. First and foremost is the fear of what I have to do. I have to tell my wife something she is not ready to hear, something that will bring those waves crashing down upon her.

Will she leave me for what comes next? Will she leave me when she knows what I've done? She may have still loved me when I told her of the abuse and the fracturing of my personality, but she doesn't know about the blades in kidneys, needles in necks and bodies buried in our past. She says she loves Jason, but she doesn't know what made us hungry to hunt monsters masquerading as men.

I look at the water and see the man of many. I see the man who is no longer afraid of who he is and what he had become. I see instead the face of a warrior who has known weakness is better than strength. It is a man who knows forgiveness is power over those who hate. For the first time in my life, a free man's eyes gaze back at me. I can choose. I can decide what will happen tonight. I have the freedom to hide and bury these Secrets back inside. I have the freedom to accept who I've been and confess The Secrets to my wife and find out if God's people love even murderers, liars, and assassins? Would I tell my wife I'd been made to kill time and time again? Would I share My Lists with this woman of innocence? Would I tell her about the people who'd seen the face of her husband before they met Death? Would she ever see me as the same man? Would she still love me once she knew? Was there anyone who could love me once they know the truth?

I could not wait any longer. I couldn't wait for a snuff film to surface showing me as a boy fighting another child to death with knives in dirt pits for sport and status. I couldn't wait for my young teenage face to be on the news as I was used by another Brotherhood to kill one of their own. My Family of blackmailers and extortionists had plenty of devilish darts in their arsenal, and I would not let them play me like the puppet I'd been all my life. I would not let the fear rule me anymore. I knew there was no way to escape this brutal Underworld except through radical honesty and exposure to the light of redemption. Only on the surface could my broken heart find hope of rescue amidst the storm. I was no longer just a me but a we; and we would do something that will echo through the halls of our heart forever.

We left the path around the lake and headed home. The soil littered with pink pebbled stones crunched quietly under our feet. With the sun setting over the horizon we made our choice. We agreed it was the time we tell our wife who we are. It is time we tell her about Perrello, The Pit, about what we were to The Jesuits, The Brotherhood and why The Families had such an affinity for our 'ways.' It is time to tell her how we "Earned Our Keep" in The Trade. Finally, my wife would learn about Blade, Jason, and My List.

Eight years before my walk around the lake we met her. She took a path down a hillside in the mountains that changed it all. The steps she took on a Wednesday evening would lead her to a smiling young man covered with scars. Some of those scars showed through the skin, breaches of my flesh, which offered the astute a glance beneath my pleasant veneer. Other scars the ones, which had cut the deepest, were hiding behind the walls only survivors can build. It was in those vaults of my soul where Secrets too dangerous to speak were written in ledgers of regret. Before those Secrets could be spoken they would both need to become warriors for another Way. In time would come a child who would save his shattered soul and show him a new life.

Chapter Three

My Safe Harbor

She walks through the screen door; it creaks the ancient spring biting into the well-worn grooves dragging it back to its familiar resting place. She's got a hat pulled low hiding her hazel eyes. She's wearing soccer shorts, a tank top and flip-flops with a Hawaiian name I couldn't spell right. There is no heart-stopping-our-eyes-met moment to relate. Instead, it was an introduction from one friend's friend to another. I had been leading connections at a church's college ministry and was preparing a feast. Every Wednesday we had people over to a house on the creek where we fellowshipped together, ate pasta and laughed. It was a temporary home to me, a man always on the run.

She stepped out of her silver crescent Honda and made her way down the hillside of a mountain town. Pink flagstone steps quarried from just a few miles away were nestled between branches of scrub oak, columbines and black-eyed susan's on her way towards the house where I was waiting. I had always been waiting; all my life had ever been was waiting. Hoping the pain would end, the sadness could leave, or the anger would flee.

But that day, that beautiful April before the sun could set, she took the stairs down the path, where she found a young man who would change the course of her future, and in her doing so would forever change mine.

She said her name was Chelsea and I smiled real wide as I introduced myself as Nate. She had flecks of green peppered through her chestnut brown eyes. She was beautiful - there was no hat big enough to hide that - and by every stretch of the imagination, this woman was entirely out of my league. She was radiance subdued, a once brilliant sapphire now lost in a in a dusty jewelry box.

Chelsea was a collegiate soccer player and a talented nurse, yet I saw sorrow in her soul that made me want to weep. In a moment I could feel the hurt, the ache, and the angst. I didn’t know her whys or her reasons for the tears waiting to be released but that would come soon.

Chelsea worked nights as a nurse at a hospital, and because of that she and I would hang out for many of the weirdest hours. As our days of summer turned into weeks and then into months, this woman always befuddled me. I saw in her the character of God, and I wanted to share my life with this woman. Chelsea and I got to know each other as friends do, but Chelsea was never a woman I wanted to be friends with. Chelsea was the kind of woman I wanted to marry and spend every day of the rest of my life with. We languished in the awkward "what are we" phase of friendship for too long until I boarded a plane and flew to Afghanistan.

It was on my trip to Afghanistan I learned that Chelsea was the woman I wanted to pursue with every bit of romance I could muster. I believe if ever a man is to court a woman he must first bring two things: words of intentions and a marvelous treasure. I needed to return to Chelsea not just with words of intentions but with a trinket in which she could forever see my affections for her. I have never been a man who could craft a beautiful welsh love spoon or afford price-fixed slave dug diamonds and though I bought Chelsea a little silver ring in a jewelry store on Chicken Street in Kabul, Afghanistan this was not the treasure I sought. I found the precious treasure in a palace guarded by fierce men with well-used and well-maintained rifles. Right then and there I decided I was willing to go to an Afghani prison to bring the woman I adored a treasury worthy of her courtship.

Some of our time in Afghanistan was spent going around Kabul and seeing the wonders of this most ancient of cities. Kabul had more history than I could comprehend and as we traveled through its streets, we crested a hill and saw the Darul Aman Palace. Once considered a marvel of the land it now lies in bomb-cratered, bullet-riddled ruins after manipulated men let loose their rage on its monumental walls. Our team unloaded our vans, and we were told the story of the Palace, the queen it was built for, and the treasure it once held in its ornate coffers. Chiefly among its wonders were the rose gardens and tiled mosaic fountains covering the grounds of the Palace. Only by the piles of rubbles marking their foundations could we see the many fountains. While we walked around, the palace guards with their rifles held at the ready patrolled the perimeter. Looking at the crumbled fragments of one of the unique fountains I saw it, I saw the treasure worth getting shot over. It was a shattered piece of a tile no larger than my thumbnail. Its handcrafted designs, and intricate styling's had been aged, chipped, and scarred.

I came up with a quick plan to get me under the razor wire surrounding the palace so I could snatch my treasure away. I studied the guards and learned their patterns and we readied ourselves. Just as the guard turned to make his final march, I swung into action. Diving under the rusty wire I scrambled over to the fountain, and pocketed the prize. Just as I turned and started running back, I heard the guard's shuffling feet. Slipping back under the razor wire, I stood up on the other side of the fence as the guard rounded the corner. In my "just act natural, out of breath, sweating out of every pore" way I kept my cool. The terror in my head convinced me that any second I would be shot in the back but I was able to hold the fear down and keep my composure. It was not until our team was safely back at home did I look at my broken tile. It was unappealing in every way yet marvelous in its uniqueness. My treasure secure, I began to write the words of intention to carry home to the woman of my dreams.

Arriving back home after 35 hours of travel time, I was somewhere in-between slightly exhausted and "fall over I can't see straight" jet-lagged. While in this perfectly screwy lovestruck state of mind, I drove to Chelsea's apartment with my treasure and my words. We talked about my trip and as we did, I began to try to steer our conversation to the story of the palace. Every time I did, I would forget the words I'd memorized. Stumbling and bumbling in the most frustrating of fashions, I told Chelsea something like this: "Chelsea, in all my life God has shown me things of great wonder and majesty. I have seen these things in caves hundreds of feet below the surface of the earth and on the sides of mountains miles in the air. I have marveled at them in ways I thought impossible, but in all of my life, I have never seen such a marvelous treasure of worth as I have seen in you. I have seen in you a character so rare, a heart so sincere, it makes me lose all sense of understanding. In you, I have seen a graciousness that is divine. Seven days ago, I stood in the splendor of the Queen's Palace in Afghanistan and even as I marveled at the ancient palace, I thought only of you. I thought of you because I long for you: to get to know you, to become known by you, and to share my life with you. Standing among the rubble, I found the most extraordinary piece of tile I have ever seen, and I have brought this to you. I give you this that you may know I treasure the woman I have gotten to know, and I would treasure infinitely more getting to know the woman you will become." Handing her the tile, I asked her, "Chelsea, will you be my girlfriend?" Cue the doves, the church bells, and the choir, she replied…

"Well, I will have to pray about it and think about it." Silence filled the void as my jet-lagged brain desperately pleaded with me to understand the words she was saying. I realized there would be no celebratory hugs or high fives waiting for me at my apartment. Driving home, I knew Chelsea was still the woman I wanted to pursue and if God were generous with me, I would do my best to treasure her every day I was entrusted to her. I passed out on my futon that night feeling crushed in parts of my heart I had not known existed. As dawn arrived so too did my friend Steve and a worn out Honda Accord to take me to Baltimore, Maryland.

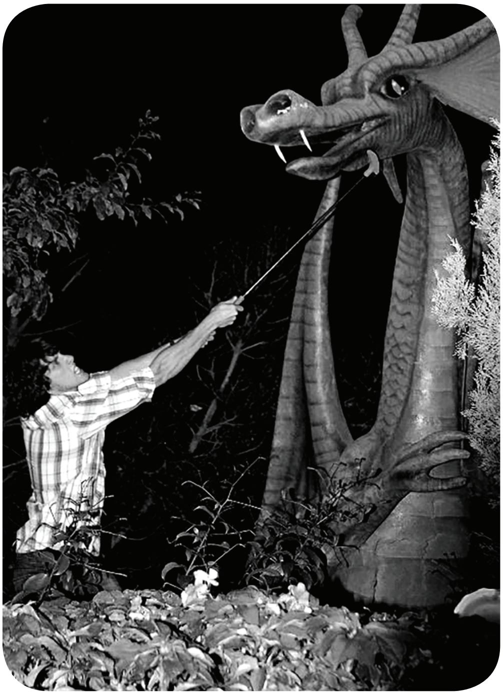
Steve had invited me with him to visit his family back in Maryland and thinking 35 hours of travel time in two days wasn't enough, I got in a car defeated and deflated for another 36 hours on the road. It was exactly what I needed as my phone received neither a call nor a text from the woman who held my affections. Hours turned into eons but then after four long days of silence my phone rang. The interrupting ring carried on its wave words that would forever end my life as a single man.

I was in the living room of Steve's family home when the ring came and as I looked at the screen, I saw her name appear. Keeping my composure cooler than a cucumber but freaking out inside I answered it, "Hey." Then followed the silence of awkward replies. We talked about my trip out to Maryland but when the conversation took the turn towards finality, she said, "So I have prayed about it and spent a great deal of time preparing to answer your question. My answer is this: 'Yes, and when is our first adventure-date?!'" Squealing like a yo-yo champion, I high fived myself while jumping in place. Coming back to the phone I suavely replied with a day and time, and we agreed. Hanging up the phone in Steve's family living room, I knew things were different, but I could never have known what the woman on the other end of that phone would ultimately mean to me.

Our summer adventures now turned to dating and delight, and as Chelsea and I grew to know one another, it quickly became clear that this woman was every bit the woman of character I had perceived her to be. Soon one date turned to two, and I knew she was my treasure, my delight, my radiant maiden walking in a meadow on a starry night. Into this love-struck tale of boy meets girl would come our first taste of the shadow of death.

It was our seventh adventure date where we were about to have our first lesson as a couple of what lurked in the darkness. I had taken her to one of my favorite places: a hiking trail in the foothills of the Rocky Mountains. We walked - hands clutched together - up the pitch-black path. The overgrowth was hiding the moonlight, so we decided to sit on a small bridge spanning a bubbling creek. We sat and told stories as young lovers do when I heard a pop, soft but noticeable, and then the smallest twig break and leaf crunch. I ask her to be quiet, and within a minute it moved again: soft padded feet were inching their way through the darkness. They were deliberate steps on the softest patches of earth between the predator and its prey. In the dark brush, just a few yards away crouched a lion waiting to steal away our peaceful moment of bliss and kill us before we've shared our first kiss.

I whispered as I stood her on her feet, "A mountain lion is coming, we need to move." I kept facing the creature faintly more than a tan shape in the forest beyond the bridge. We made our way to a clearing that would give us enough open space to see the predator stalking us in the darkness. Peace washed over me as a scripture came to my mind: "And to Adam was given dominion over the creatures of the earth." I wrapped her in my arms and pulled her close. I kept my eyes down the trail where death was waiting to end our future before it could begin. I prayed for the woman who would one day become my wife. I prayed against the darkness and the creature that sought our demise. I thanked Him that He will hide us under the shadow of His wings and we need not fear even when we walk through the valley of the shadow of death. The cinching cord of fear that was settling over our necks snapped under the cutting power of The Word of Truth. Incorruptible, undefeatable courage and boldness welled up from within my spirit and I knew the battle was over. In a moment the lion retreated and returned to the shadows, not defeated only turned away for a little while, waiting for a more opportune time.



The omen of that night faded from our minds as the excitement of new love bloomed in us both. While I pursued Chelsea, I spent a great deal of time writing things down, as well as "rat holing" keepsakes from our dates: things like a crushed pinecone she had turned into an otter looking creature, or the first piece of Origami she ever folded for me. Every keepsake was a memory of the first glimpses into the heart of the woman I adore.

While we grew in our dating relationship, The Lord told me Chelsea was the woman he had prepared for me and me for her. As such, I knew I needed to ask the woman I loved if she would follow me as we followed our Savior every day for the rest of our lives.

After receiving the blessing of her father and mother, I set about my grand adventure to propose to Chelsea. With weeks of planning and the help of my friends, we sprung our caper on the woman who would become my bride. Working with another couple of friends of ours, we tricked Chelsea into thinking we had an elaborate scavenger hunt for Chelsea and our friend Kelly to complete. We set up an entire (false-ish) scavenger hunt for Kelly who played her part beautifully convincing Chelsea she too was so surprised by the lengths her boyfriend had gone to plant their curious clues and treasures. While Chelsea and Kelly bounced around a snow-covered landscape, I furiously prepared the final touches back at the clues' finish line.

The clues for Chelsea led her to places like the house where we had first met, or to the top of a hundred and thirty-year-old spiral staircase where we first held hands. Chelsea's second to the last clue led her to a small lake where she had first whispered her words of liking to me while we were climbing kids' play fort at three in the morning. Unfortunately, the mood was shattered when a loud-speaker screamed at us that we were trespassing in the park and the cops had been called. Our car had been parked miles away, so we ran like rascals in the night. We didn't get far before the police arrived and we had to run into the brush to hide. When the squad cars spotlight shone around the lake, we buried our heads in the cover of four-foot tall stalks of grass. After slipping away from the heat, we spent hours laughing about the lengths I would go for a one of a kind adventure date. After finding the final clue, she made her way to the front door of our place. Stepping up to the door Kelly pushed Chelsea inside and promptly shut the door behind her.

My roommates and I had spent the better part of two days moving every bit of furniture out of the house. Into the void were brought hundreds of candles, and floral arrangements lining a path of lights leading her deeper into the house. As she walked deeper in, she walked through our relationship for along with the flowers, there were my journal pages of words about her, as well as photographs from our last year and a half together. Stashed alongside these were dozens of my little trinkets and keepsakes. I laid before Chelsea every memory I cherished of her and me. I did this not only for her to see what I saw when I spoke her name or thought of her hand clutched between my fingers, but I did this also to sear into my mind the relationship I had only ever dreamed of having. She was the only woman I wanted to share my life with, and I had the hope of being honored to lead her in my love and devotion to the Redeemer all the days of our life. As she wound through the house, she came around the corner where I had been hidden waiting on one knee.

When I saw her, I began to shake uncontrollably, and before I could say a word of the months-long prepared proposal speech, she did the one thing I had not prepared for. She sat on my knee and clutched my neck. She clutched around my neck weeping on my shoulder hugging me and whispering words reserved for her and me alone. I sobbed on her neck as I stuttered through my proposal of marriage to the woman I adored. She said yes to my proposal, and we celebrated with a feast at a real seafood restaurant that cost me weeks of my meager pay. But as anyone who has ever been head over ridiculous heals in love can tell you, love like that knows nothing of cost. It knows only of longing, devotion, sacrifice, and dedication.

The crazy love I have for Chelsea is but a shadow of the love our Father has for us. It is but a mere glimmer of the Great Physician's sacrificial love for each one of His.

That seafood dinner was the best meal of my entire life, but honestly, I could not tell you a single thing I ate. I was feasting on the joy and excitement of a future life lived with Chelsea. People in love radiate such attractive joy people can't help but smile and be filled with encouragement by their presence. We glowed in our excitement, and we could not wait for the moment we would get to know the fullness of the perceived bounty to come in our marriage.

Chelsea and I (but really just Chelsea) spent the next few months arranging everything for our day of covenant vows. Then in July, Chelsea walked with her father around a blooming rose bush in a garden meadow. I saw my bride for the first time. She was more beautiful than any woman who has graced the earth with her presence. Chelsea was dressed in white but clothed in purity. I had made a vow to her father when I had first asked to pursue his daughter that I would honor and respect Chelsea's sexual purity in every way until he gave her away to me on our wedding day. Although I'd failed to maintain total purity in many of my previous relationships, it was a vow that by the grace of God and by biblical wisdom led boundaries I was able to keep. Chelsea and I were so thankful to be able to offer each other our bodies in purity. Though we had sinned throughout our lives, God had preserved this gift in us, and it is a miraculous testimony to God's grace for even his wandering children.

After we made a covenant with God before our family and our friends, Chelsea and I celebrated our marriage with the people we loved. While dining on some forgotten food, I ate the second-best meal of my life while sharing my first meal with my wife. We ate, we drank, and we rejoiced at the gift of the abundant relationship we had received. We feasted that night not only on food but each other's love, and we drank deep the blessings of marriage.

When I read over my journals from this time, I cannot help but feel the depths of joy, excitement, and explosive peace. But as our marriage progressed that first year Chelsea and I learned Jesus must be the only one we ever seek our fulfillment in. As much as Chelsea and I loved each other, we found how much we had sought from the other things that can only be seen in our relationship with the Messiah. We struggled immensely as we realized the depths of the idolization we each had for the other, as well as the depths of sin's unwashed stain, can have on each other. However, during this time we grew into an understanding of two becoming one that has reshaped my concepts of what love is as well as how truly selfish I can be.

If the first year of our marriage had been hard, the years to come would become unbearable. Chelsea and I were about to face the impossible; that lion was stalking us once more. It was about to strike, and this time, the blow would lead to the death of a passionate, joyful man.

Chapter Four

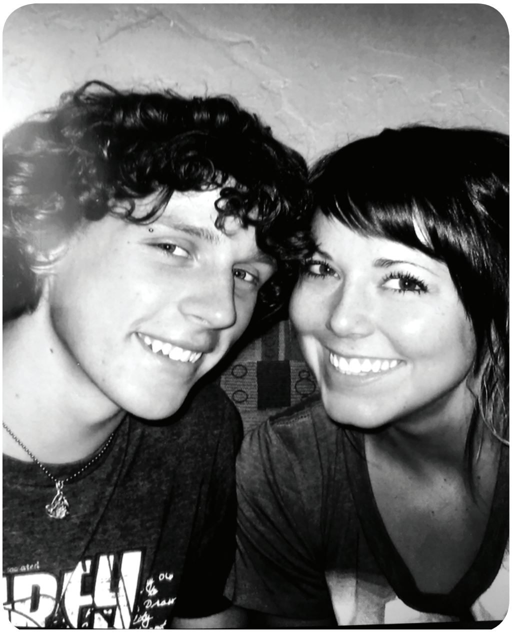
Things to Come

The shadows would grow deep. They would set upon us as quickly as a bolt of lightning finding its way through the thick clouds above. The screams, the terrors of the night, the haunting need to run from something I could not see.

The night is still upon us. I feel Chelsea's cold hand upon my pounding sweat peppered chest. She is quiet but reassuring; my gasps and screams are fading into the controlled rhythm of a calm desperately clawing its way back into my body. They are back. They were those shapes of horror, those visions of death. The darkened men are there and the monsters too, holding onto small ankles and wrists, the pain and the searing of flesh and then nothing, always nothing. We have been married for a year and a half now. The first year was nothing close to the honeymoon we'd thought it would be. Instead, the bondage of my past came with me.

There aren't enough words to describe the pain of what came next. Who could know it? Who could understand the gut-churning, heart-rending pain? Widows know. They know it all too well. Some widows lost their mates even though warm, familiar bodies still occupy the space next to them at night.

It is the devastation of losing the love of your life. Losing the good, and the bad too, but so much of the good went into the void of blackness after just twelve months. Memories of a lifetime seemed to be flushed down the drain, and I was left with a shallow pond of confusion and no one to tell me what to do next.

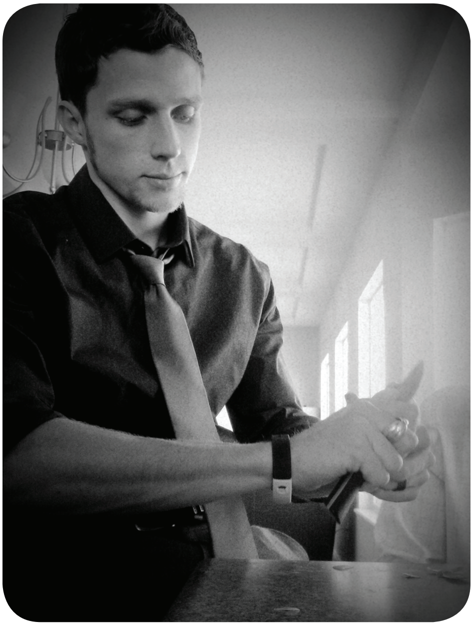


It wasn't overnight, but within a few short months of our one-year anniversary, I went from being Nate to someone else. A man Chelsea had never met, a man who did not have the insatiable passion for exploring this world, for finding the gardens of beauty hidden in plain sight. I used to see so much joy in even the smallest of things like pebbles of acorns scattered across the freshly mowed grass, the sound of water falling from one rock to another, or the cold touch of Chelsea's fingers knit between my own. I had memories of walking down the streets of Rocky Mountain towns snacking on Snickerdoodle cookies and then feeding deer popcorn to her great surprise.

They were such sweet delights; the warmth in my chest was a fire for her. A love that knew no limits and could not be restrained, our shared dreams for the future filled with our children laughing as we walked down the paths of tomorrows.

All of it, every scrap of bliss, was washed down the drain of a monster called forgetting.

“Who am I?” The words passed my lips as I stared into a mirror desperate to recognize the face looking back at me. My hair had been cut short; my brown wavy shoulder length hair once so recognizable had been cut back and styled. Business casual attire now covered what had always been tight fitting t-shirts, or none at all, flip-flops and shorts. There was now a razor sharp knife strapped to my chest; it never left my body, ever. I hungered for its nearness; I desired it more than food in my belly or water down my throat. The need for sharpened steel to be in arm’s reach was a primal, insatiable craving. Soon there were pistols under pillows and burner cell phones with bundles of money stashed in puzzling places. There were secret caches of supplies buried under uprooted trees and boulders hundreds of miles from home. I no longer enjoyed the day, but instead, I craved the night when the world slept and I restlessly made my way into the familiar cracks and shadows of alleys and backyards. I found my fingers turning everyday items into tools for a forgotten shadowy hunt.



I was a stranger to myself. I didn't know where they found this man in the mirror, but he was not me. If he was not me then who was this face staring back at me? Who was the man in the mirror? What do you tell your wife when you change your name, your passions, your hobbies and everything she's ever known you as? What do you do when you don't remember your best friend's name, the church you'd served at for seven years or the place you used to work? Where do you go when the memories in your mind are now clouded with shadows of things you'd never known?

What do you do when you have schematics and plans for weapons, missions, and tools you'd hardly touched, used, or heard of filling your mind? Where there once used to be memories of soccer games and high school pranks, there was now the need to plan and prepare for scenarios of chaos unleashing themselves upon the world.

What would you do if you woke up to a stranger in the mirror standing in a body decades after you'd seen it last? No one had ever told me there was more than a me in this mind, that there could be a we; the truth is I was a man of many. One body stuffed with many broken pieces of a systematically shattered soul. But that truth was still a vapor passing through the fingers of forgotten memories.

I did the best I could with the confusion of a past I didn't remember. I dumped the real contents of my memories into a five-gallon bucket and buried it in the basement. I took the pictures of a man named Nate and shoved them in a shoebox left on a dusty shelf. I found the keepsakes and the knick-knacks of dates with Chelsea and stuffed them in corners of totes and left them for a time when someone else who cared about them might resurface and love them again.

I couldn't face them because they weren't my memories, so how could I keep them around? They haunted me and confused me more than I could understand. Instead, I pressed into the fringe corners of society where I found the itch between my shoulders finally get scratched. I prepared for the end of the world I knew was coming. The End somehow I always knew I was made for, where monsters battle men, engines of chaos from the Days of Old surface to sift the wheat from the tares. I remembered things that were lost in the years while Nate was running our life.

Soon Chelsea could plainly see something very different in me. When we would go out together, I went by a new name, Jason. I had a new first name, middle and last, all of it was there. As Jason, I could remember police and first responder scanner frequencies, give out dozens of different identities, everything from Social Security Numbers to other mother's maiden names and where I went to elementary school in a small Midwestern town I'd never heard of. There wasn't the faintest concern with morality and laws were only applicable to those who did not understand how to use them for their gain. When I would step out the door, there was an entirely different person ready for me whenever I needed to fade into the shadows and disappear from prying eyes.

Jason could remember the way to hide from surveillance cameras, license plate scanners and how to melt into the crowds. He could shift from one person to another, a chameleon able to fade into the emotional surroundings of the people he was with. He remembered how to make bullets that fragment and ones that pierce through hardened targets or reinforced windows. He could weave fabrics that cloak signals and conceal digital footprints. He remembered how to hone an edge on steel that will pop the hairs off his arm with the slightest touch. He remembered how to lose a tail and scramble his messages into code that could only be read with a cipher locked in his mind. So much to remember and yet I forgot how to love the woman I was married to, and our marriage was falling apart ever so slowly.

She woke up to a stranger; his name was Nathan, and though he had the same body as the man who stood with arms wrapped tight around her just a few years ago, there was something different in his voice and in the way he held her hand.

He trembled and startled when she touched him. He shied away from her; the touch seemed to burn him. He did not desire her; his apathy was poisoning their dreams. Their shared desire for children now became hers alone. Instead, he was terrified at the mere thought of this. With the throwing of some hidden switch, “happily ever after” faded into the sunset of someone else’s dreams.

I so badly wanted to love her. Honestly, the longing I had to understand what was going on was there, but it was intentionally hushed down to a whisper. I longed to crave her embrace, but every touch felt like needles pricking exposed nerves. We kept up our charade, we played the part of a couple but our intimacy was non-existent, and my addictions and bondage built and grew.

I ran to my familiar addictions of substances and porn, dark passengers who had poisoned my life since I was a child. At impossibly young ages I was made familiar with sexual perversions no child should know, the incestuous abuse had defiled me long ago. The need to alter my state of mind was insatiable. I could not bear the present; the past was a void full of terror, death, and pain. I chose to avoid it like the plague it was. With a prescribed pill, I could slip away and fade into the oblivion I craved. The guilt would come with the sobriety, the dread of shame for my lusts, which could not be satisfied.

Small victories would come: sometimes there would be weeks strung together where I found miraculous freedom in rivers of The Father’s peace. Then the raft of my life would crash into a boulder of terror, the dread of forgotten memories. Back to those poisons I would go. I had been sober from alcohol for years, but one addiction would be conquered only to have another substance take its place. I went from alcohol to prescription pills for the chronic pain and soon other substances that were along the graying edge of socially acceptable. I was a man desperate to escape. I was a man who needed to hide from the madness of memories that felt like they belonged to another.

Who would save me? Who could save me? The prayers I prayed were sincere. No amount of time spent in churches could save me, no amount of two am prayers for forgiveness gave me relief.

What I feared more than the guilt, the shame, or the apathy of my marriage was the dreams. I had too many dreams that were ripe with killing and death. The dreams of daggers plunged through kidneys and slid behind Adam's apples then tearing out throats. The chanting of things I did not understand and vomiting after wretched acts of killing was through. What were they? Oh God, what was this I saw in the night, in the stillness, while my wife slept beside me?

Who were these people I saw over and over, a child sneaking into manicured high fenced estates and slipping between security passes? Why did I see a wolf – this creature stalking me in my sleep? There were so many questions and yet there were never any answers. I drowned the mysteries into oblivion; I hid them with vials and pills. Then nothing happened when I slept, and I passed from awake to asleep to awake again. I went to work, and later when I got home, Chelsea and I watched TV shows that temporarily filled our house with laughter or scratched the itch of boredom until we went to sleep and did it again.

Scattered into these days were random get-togethers with my dad. Out of nowhere, he would invite me to stay with him in the mountains or in the deserts of that hellish place. Memories would fade with every trip, and I would return even more of a shell of the man I'd left as. Chelsea noticed but said nothing. What could she say? What could explain the change that she saw in me? What could bring understanding to this madness of our life? On and on we went. The lion of destruction had found my throat and left Nate perishing in the depths of our broken past.

But Yahweh.

Two words.

But Yahweh.

Two words which change everything. At this moment, just as He has done so many times in the past and will do even more in the future. The God of Mercy interjects Himself into the scene. He reaches His Mighty Right Hand into the depths of our death and sows in a seed of life. The seed comes with seven letters etched on its surface: answers.

Answers were on their way; they would not come quickly at first. At first, they would be a trickle, a pebble tossed into our pond of confusion rippling out for a moment before the waters grew placid again. One by one He would drop them into the waters and let us contend and recover from the little ripples. Soon those ripples turned to waves of curiosity and our need to know and understand built into a pang of hunger that exceeded the cravings for escape, secret caches, and even the blade.

The answers to come would set Chelsea and me on a path to freedom and understanding. No one warned me the path to life was established firmly in the midst of a war-torn landscape. Where we were headed was a ruinous land through the valley of the shadow of Death

Beneath the Waves

The answers were not abundant, not at first. I was a man on fire, and I needed something to quench my thirst. He came to us with wisdom and Truth. The God of our Redemption was coming through.

We stepped onto the shores of the lake; its waters stilled to a glass. Carefully chipped stones were in my fingers. They are called chert – a flint-like stone used by the Native Americans who lived here long ago. They treasured these stones and knocked the rocks' hardened surfaces into useful tools like arrowheads, scrapers, and blades. They are thick and red, burnt after their useful edges had been worn smooth.

I was watching the waters and waiting. I was holding onto the icy fragments of a memory, which chilled my soul. I was hoping it would pass and move on, but it lingered. It lingered on the fringes of forgetting the place where no man hopes to be. The pain, the hurt, the sorrows… I just wanted to weep, but tears fled from me. They were hidden away in the memories.

I drove back to the waters of a lake in the rocky forests up in the mountains at nearly 9,000 feet high. I worked here for a summer, a winter and a fall. These were the waters where the answers started. Hours-long commute day in and day out gave me the ability to start listening, to have space to be quiet and left alone. The drive up the canyons would wind through more than rivers and dirt roads. They would wind through the canals of chaos peppering my past. It was there I began to hear the truth. I started to know what it was I had come through. Not all of it, just a whisper. But the whisper was peace, understanding, and truth. I saw then that redemption was coming for me.

I stuffed the rocks deep into my pocket and walked on. I scanned the edge of the shoreline, praying as I went, asking The Father to make clear to me the reason for it all. I needed to know what I forgot. I needed to know what it was that made me crave these secret places or to explore the caverns and dark depths. I walked on the grasses and pine needles growing thicker along the shore. I stepped into the soggy soil, and the water pressed over my boot and soaked in. Its icy tendrils ensnared the soles of my feet before clawing onto my toes. For two years I had feared the waters that once brought me relief.

Our first year of marriage I was so in love. I craved her and I longed to know her, yet looking at this face staring back from the waters of this lake, I hated that none of it was there anymore. I didn't understand why I couldn't love her or plunge into these waters and explore their depths.

There was nothing I loved more than swimming. The feeling of peace would wash over me when my head was in the depths. For months I'd prepared for dives holding on to boulders and running beneath the surface. I would hold onto lead weights, and Chelsea had even bought me an old cannonball so I could do it more efficiently. I named that old cannonball Earl. I took him with me to every one of my classes one year back in college. I would hold onto him and run laps underwater in apartment complex pools I had “let myself into.” Some apartment complexes were not so thrilled to have a man running laps underwater in their pools and were less than amiable at my endeavors for peace.

I needed the water; I needed to hold myself down there for just a minute longer, to feel the silence settle into my soul, to feel the warmth of the sun on my shoulders grow cool as I sank one foot deeper and deeper still. I learned to shallow dive into rivers and creeks and enjoyed the thrill and the rush of landing with inches to spare. I craved it more than the air. That summer with Steve back in Baltimore I’d dove headfirst nearly forty feet into a quarry I’d never seen before. The first time I landed wrong, the second time even worse. Steve’s sister panicked as she neared the edge and turned backward after already starting her leap. Her older brother had reached out and caught her as she tumbled towards the rocks. A spiny shrub with exposed roots had stayed her fall. Cut elbows, knuckles, and wrists were all she had to show for it. Jumping into action, we’d made a human chain and pulled her back. Then I had them break into ones and twos as we ran from the cops that got called on us for the innocent trespass.

Chelsea and I had honeymooned on the coast of Mexico where we’d laughed for days and swam in the waters. We were two lovers lost in new romance. I had left her on the boiling beach while I went out for a swim. I looked at her and smiled, waiting for her to join me. She drank on the shoreline and as I was a hundred yards from shore pumping my legs and feeling joy inexpressible, a tragedy occurred. I flicked my fingers as I broke the surface and my three-day-old wedding ring shot off into the ocean.

I plunged my head into the waves, hoping to grab it before it fell the twenty feet to the churning sand below. There was no sign of it and as I surfaced, I fixed my eyes on a focal shore point and began my search. I could not fathom leaving it behind, so I dove again and again. I spent minutes on the bottom until my lungs screamed threatening to gulp in the salty sea. I could not return to Chelsea empty handed with some ominous sign marking the beginning of our marriage "LOST." Again I dove into the depths, passing my fingers and fretful gaze over rusty bottle caps, rocks, and shell fragments. The ring was made of tungsten, so surely it had sunk deep, and the waves were creating new sandbars and ripples every moment I lingered. Beyond my moment of fear, I began to pray. I found faith welling up as I asked The Father to grant me a miracle. Within my spirit, a story soared above my fear: a miracle of God for another ordinary man who was in need.

The story comes from 2 Kings 6:1-7 where the men are cutting wood in the forest near the Jordan River. One of the men is swinging his iron ax, chopping into trees that will provide his family a home. The iron ax head suddenly flies off its handle and sinks into the roiling waters. Crying out to Elisha, he asks the prophet of Yahweh to help recover it as it was borrowed. Elisha guided by the distressed man to the spot in the river takes a stick and drops it into the water, and up floats the iron ax head. There is no elaboration in the story; it's more of a footnote than a focal point, but thousands of years later this story was centered in my mind. I knew it and believed the God of Elisha could still make iron axes or tungsten rings float.

Back in the waves, I dove with faith fueling my search, and He provided me a miracle. Scanning the bottoms, I passed over a few bottle caps and a piece of a broken bottle until there on the surface of a rippled sandy bottom was my partially submerged wedding ring. Grabbing hold of it, I let loose bubbles of belief knowing my God provides and still cares about the little things, like floating ax heads and wedding rings. Chelsea immortalized that moment with her pen and paper a few weeks later.

Those were the memories lost in the tote I'd buried away. I had looked through them the morning before coming up to the lake. They were my memories but not really. Ever since that summer, I'd be scared to go underwater at all. Scared to take more than a few strokes beneath the surface. The panic within would build to a crescendo. I would ache, I would scream, and my heart would nearly burst with terror. Their words echo within,

"NO, NO WE ARE DROWNING, WE ARE GOING TO DROWN!"

I just wanted to swim again, I wanted to be in the water to explore the depths and find buried treasures or lost ax heads, but fear so haunting I could taste it kept me back. The fear hid me beneath its knuckles grinding me into pieces like the chert in my pocket. I wanted to weep so badly; I just wanted to cry, to bury my face in the waters, and let my tears mingle in the midst of ancient memories. But I couldn't so I didn't, and I walked on the soggy boot leaking my failure on my long way back home.

Home to the woman I didn't remember, unable to conquer the fears I'd brought with me to these shores.

The days would go like this in an endless cycle, but I was an expert at escaping, a man ever on the run. I would wander in the mountains looking for treasures now forgotten in time. I would explore old mine shafts from the 1800's. I would dig up rotting ruins with timbers cut by trappers and men desperate for gold. I would find bullets buried in the wood, nails forged on an anvil and squared on the edges. I would add these little treasures to my collection, a place in the front yard I'd named "Nate's Beach."

Nate may have fallen prey to that lion in the darkness but somewhere, deep in my soul, the echoes of his passions still sang a sad melody. I gathered my trinkets and left them in a three-foot section of our garden just in front of our door. Soon the pile grew with old bowling balls, chunks of pottery and blue hand-blown glass once containing fragrances favorable to a woman two hundred years lost. They were the remnants of lifetimes I'd never lived. They were snapshots from a time when they once mattered to men. Some were snapshots from my own time, like an antler from a survival expedition I'd lead in the mountains up north. Dozens of seashells from The Sea of Cortez, the Atlantic, and Pacific Oceans peppered the ground. Sands from the shores of fourteen beaches and sea glass, which had been tumbled from jagged to soft by thousands of waves leaving them without their edges and cuts.

His waves were about to pound upon the jagged edges of my hardened heart. The pebbles He tossed into my pond of confusion were about to become boulders, and soon tsunamis of remembering would tumble my rough edges smooth.

Nate's Beach bore witness to the three sentences that finally made me strong enough to face down the mountains of madness and murder waiting in my past. That beach served to pull on the threads of this mystery and help me to unravel the lies, the deception, and threats.

A Miracle Named Grace

The end of the age of deceit would begin with words. Soon after walking upon those shores and driving home with a soggy boot, I did a dangerous thing. I put my fingers to these black and white keys and wrote down memories I had spent my whole life trying to forget. I obeyed my Redeemer's pressing to put the pieces of my shattered past into written form.

The words came in a torrent, thousands upon thousands and then tens of thousands as parts of my soul seeped from their sorrow filled swamps and told their tale. It was the first time I ever wrote about the incest and The Family friends with their lusts. Even as I attempted to write, I soon realized how vulnerable and painfully naked I felt.

I could not bear to write in an exposed place. There was a need to hide myself to tuck myself away as I wrote these destructive words. In walked my safe harbor, Chelsea, the providence of The Father's goodness evident in my wife. She built me a nook; she made me a fort in our spare bedroom where we painted scripture on the walls, and she could craft freely. She took sheets and strings and ropes and built me a nook you had to wind your way into. She made me a space that I could write in, tucked away from the world. A hiding place, it was a shelter of refuge I'd never known. We named it Hawk's Haven.

In Hawk's Haven, I would let the depths of my soul surface and leak upon the page. I would wail, I would sob not as a man but as a child, as a boy who'd lost his innocence and never had a say in the matter. I would crawl out of the nook realizing there was peace in speaking the truth. There was healing in tears and in the surrender of secrets to the Author of Hope, The Great Redeemer Jesus.

I found so much freedom in those early days. The pain was there, but I found The Burden Bearer present like never before. I found freedom building in my chest, yet the addictions lingered, the memories and voids still tormented my sleep. I wrestled with the invisible forces of myself and lost every time. I was not willing to let go until I received a blessing. I held on for dear life, knowing there was only death if I let go. I clung to that hope. Desperately, I dug my claws into the Word of God and begged Him to reveal to me what I needed to see to be free. I asked Him to heal me. I could not redeem myself, I could not save myself or my marriage, and I did not know how much longer I could take it, let alone how much longer she could. My Father, my true Father, knew; He had always known me and had answered my prayers so long ago. It was in fall of 2015 that our blessing came. It took a miracle to save this running man, and our miracle's name is Naomi Grace.

She was entrusted to Chelsea and me even though for years we could not conceive. My abuse had rendered me damaged in ways we had been told and believed would make children a near impossibility. There is one, and only one God of the Impossible and His Name is Holy, His Name is Righteous. Yahweh Elohim, The Lord Our God, was not content for our life to be one forever filled with death. No, He is not willing that any should perish. He was the giver of our life, and it was time for us to be entrusted with a new life to help us face the death of our past and find hope burning brighter than the darkness.

Chelsea filmed the moment as we stood in our little bathroom realizing we would no longer just be a husband and wife but were something that I'd never truly known. We were going to be a family. Two hearts once beating now held a third. A precious daughter was growing and developing within my wife, and as sure as the sun sets over the mountains, in ten months' time, she would be in our arms. The excitement faded as the fear-laced thoughts began to flood my mind. They were packed with pain, dread, and self-doubt, and the weight of their pressure drove me to my knees.

The next morning, I found my face in the carpet as I sobbed and screamed knowing I had no idea how to be a father. Just that morning on our way home with the pregnancy test, I'd confessed to Chelsea how I'd fallen back into my addiction with pornography. The tattered threads of our marriage could not bear the burdens of my bondage, let alone fatherhood. I knew I was not ready, but I believed if He'd entrusted Chelsea and I with Naomi, He would provide me what I needed to be a father.

In the salt and pepper fibers of my bedroom's floor, I prayed with faith riddled desperation, "Father, heal me, please just heal me, whatever it takes." I meant it with every fiber of my being. I needed to be a better husband, and even more so a better father than I'd ever known. I knew if I continued on my current path, I would bring my addictions into fatherhood and I could not bear the idea of that. So instead I set my jaw like flint and admitted my weakness and called upon the Name Above Every Name and received strength for the impossible journey being prepared for us.

If you'd told me that morning what was coming in the next two years, I would have run as far and as fast as possible. I would have run to my familiar creature comforts and buried my head in the sands of forgetting. This time, however, I had something to fuel the furnace of my fires. To give me the unshakable and unbreakable courage to face the loss of friends and family, the threats, the intimidation, the attempted assassinations, and the fury birthed in generations of bloodshed coming to hunt us down. That fuel was something I'd never known: it was The Father's love.

His light filled, salt stained truth was the untainted, unadulterated, and unconditional love I needed to become set free. I needed a Father who would not curse me, coerce me, control me, or sell my body, spirit, and soul to grow in power and wealth. No, this Father's love and justice was the most potent weapon I'd ever been given. For with it I would face the powers and persons who'd shattered my soul and made me a monster, a murderer, and a man of many. With it, I would find freedom in remembering, freedom in the grieving, and then one day I would find freedom in forgiving. In order for the healing to begin I would have to take a drive down to Texas where my faith would become my sight.

Chapter Five

Deliverance in Dallas

Our journey towards destiny started in the spring of 2016. Chelsea now four months pregnant was sitting next to me. The air was hot and full of terrible smells as Ruger our dog was getting sick in the back seat of a rented car. We were headed down to a conference called Hear the Watchmen hosted by Mike Kerr. It was going to be a gathering of many of the teachers, researchers, and hosts of programs I'd been listening to over the last few years who had helped inspire me to boldness in my faith. These were people who were willing to suffer the persecution of the world for the sake of the truth. It was these men like Henry Gruver, Steve Quayle, Timothy Alberino, Josh Tolley, L.A. Marzulli, and Zev Porat who had first lit the fuse of my understanding and helped me begin to understand the other world hiding all around us.

Chelsea and I knew it would likely be the last trip we would take before Naomi was born, so we made it count, staying a few days in an off-the-grid cabin in the desert before driving the rest of the way to Dallas. It would be the last week of my former life. Six days later I would drive back on those roads a new man.

The reality was that I was still battling those familiar strongholds and had been too ashamed to tell Chelsea. I went to this conference to get prayed for, to get freedom and hopefully restoration. I could not bear the shame and guilt of telling her I could not stop, so instead, I set my mind on healing and hoping it would come soon.

There was one man who would be there who I knew could speak to the dark parts of my soul, who could expose the wicked works of darkness to the light of redemption. He was an ordinary man whose extraordinary faith made him unafraid of the murderers, the witches or the warlocks, a man who was known by the Living God, who walked in authority and made the Enemy flee. His name was Russ Dizdar. For nearly 40 years he'd been reaching into the depths of darkness and snatching those whose bleeding hands were crying out for help. He had made his life's mission to intercede for those trapped in The Underworld of ritual abuse, survivors of the occult practices and demonically charged bloodlines. His ministry, Shatter the Darkness, had been equipping believers with the tools of understanding they needed to face down the spiritual forces, which wage for the bodies, spirits, and souls of mankind. He was a man of courage. For more explosively pertinent resources from Russ Dizdar head over to shatterthedarkness.net

The first night of the conference I took notes in my blocky capitalized print waiting to have something change in me, but all I could feel was groaning from within my soul. There was an aching, a begging, and a longing to be free. At the end of his talk, he called out to those sitting in the audience: he called out for those who were in need of prayer, "to those who need God's healing, deliverance and freedom." Before the fears of men could stop me, I ran to the front of that conference room, tears streaming in torrents from my eyes and fell face first onto the carpet. I wept uncontrollably. I wept from the depths of sorrow so few can know. I wept as a man who was dying, a man who was three minutes from dead, a man who was crying out for someone, anyone, to save him. I was the wounded warrior on the battlefield trapped behind enemy lines, pierced through a dozen times begging for someone to bring me relief, bring me the remedy to the death in my veins and the lusts of my flesh. Through my sobs, snot, and moans, a voice was heard.

It was the voice of a warrior. Hidden behind his long hair, tattoos, and middle-aged features was a man of faith, passion, and humility. His name was Thomas Dunn. He stepped forward when Russ called him and saw me lying there in a heap, hands pressed to cover my face from the guilt of forgotten torments. Unable to talk to me standing up or kneeling, he chose to humble himself by joining me in my prostrated pose. He laid himself next to me on the floor and through the weeping I heard him ask, “What can I pray for you for?” I choked out, “Childhood sexual abuse and addictions.” I could not bear to open the doors of death hidden behind my throat. I let loose these five words and asked for help. The Helper was with us both, and He would answer those cries for relief.

It was not a dramatic moment. The heavens didn’t open; there was no light shining from above. He asked if he could place his hand on my shoulder and pray for me. I said yes, and that’s what he did. He prayed with practiced fervor, faith, and belief. He was an ordinary man with extraordinary willingness to stand in between the perishing and their graves. He was a warrior battling for a brother whom he didn’t know but knew he loved. On the floor of that room were two men who loved God with all their hearts waging a brutal war against The Radical, Intelligent Evil, which affected us all.

Thomas was faithful to pray for a stranger, a young man whom he’d never met, a man whose pregnant wife stood twenty yards away having no idea about the reality of who her husband was and what he’d done. He was a man whose soon to be born daughter was already being allocated to monsters who would seek to use her, exploit her like an IV bag dripping delicacies for devilish feasts. The man lying on the floor was desperate for rescue. I was a man who had become undone; a hangman’s thread held the essence of my shattered soul. I had nothing left to give that I wouldn’t surrender to my King. I would not leave there without a breakthrough, and He came to deliver me. He would do it by starting with a cursed black tree.

Throughout the entirety of my life, I had been plagued by this obsession of black withered trees. It was this tree I would go to in my dreams: a gathering place for monsters and men alike. It was my soul or a depiction I had of our cursed Family Tree. I was so fixated on it that I would draw and photograph these black trees over and over again. When I was 19, I'd nearly tattooed it on my body along with the shed skin of a snake named Apollo, and a curving yellow and red brick road littered with the masks of a dozen faces, none of which were my own.

While Tom prayed for me, I saw a vision in my mind of that enormous black tree standing tall over the fields of my heart. Then I saw a hand come and grab it by the base and rip it free. When it lifted, I felt a feeling come over me I had abandoned as lost. It wasn't comfortable or sweet, but it was powerful; with a flooding of realization, I knew it was relief. It was freedom from shackles I'd never seen, from pains I'd long forgotten and memories that would require redemption.

Over our shoulders and on the stage, Russ prayed for the healing of minds, restoring of hearts, and deliverance to those in bondage. He concluded his prayer by talking about David and Goliath. David was a young man who charged out into the face of death with the Name of The Living God as his shield and buckler. Russ confronted the heart of darkness with courage and faith that caused the enemy to scatter like the coward he is. He called for the people who were gathered there to stand courageous and go out and seek and save the lost, be they the pimps who traffic girls on the corner or the demonized warlock cursing their house at night. He told everyone to go out and preach The Good News of Jesus The Christ, The Son of The Living God's redemption to every creature. (Mark 16:15)

The night ended with Tom moving on to pray for others in need while Chelsea and I walked back to our hotel room where Ruger was waiting. Over the weekend I got to talk to Tom some more as he was there promoting a documentary that he and Jared Chrestman of Angry Son Media had just finished called Detestable, a Film about Satanic Ritual Abuse. Satanic Ritual Abuse is a broad term used to describe the ritualistic abuse that is done in the name of or to empower a spiritual entity, which is not limited explicitly to The Satan, but can include other deities like Asmodeus, Lucifer, Ishtar, The Queen of Heaven, The Beast, Gaia, Lilith, Cybele, other gods, demons, and fallen angels. The type of abuse is sophisticated, systemic, and methodical. Involving the physical, emotional, spiritual, and sexual abuse of individuals from the age of conception to the wheel chair bound elderly.

Satanic Ritual Abuse is the black blooded heart of The Kingdom of Darkness pumping its poisoned fuel into the bodies, souls, and spirits of mankind. The deviant practitioners of this wickedness perpetrate it most readily on children and most often on their Family members. Among many other things, the ritualistic abuse of children in this manner causes a very real, physical, emotional, and spiritual power to be released, which is then channeled and used by practitioners and spirits alike for various purposes and ends.

Thomas Dunn had been working with Russ Dizdar and Jared Chrestman to film and produce an exposé revealing the realities of this brutal world where Radical Intelligent Evil puts on flesh and tortures, maims, and murders the innocent in order to rule the hearts, minds, and bodies of mankind. They were bold and courageous men who were on a mission to expose the wicked works of darkness to the Redeeming Light of The Messiah. There were many people present seeking to proclaim the truth, but few were doing it in even this terrible area. Just as the trip was wrapping up and the final session had closed, I went and asked a question to a panel of the speakers at the front of the room. After this, I went to talk to some new friends. While I was talking to them, a woman came up to me and handed me a book saying somewhat frantically that I needed to read it. Looking at it I saw that it was for the breaking of generational curses related explicitly to the renunciation of the oaths sworn in freemasonry and other oath taking societies and "brotherhoods." Turning back to ask her a question, I couldn't see her anywhere. I cannot tell you if that woman was a messenger of Yahweh, or just a woman who was being obedient to The Holy Spirit's leading but that woman put in my hands the keys to deliverance that would finally set this shackled man free.

PART 2

Chapter Six

The Pains of Remembering

Two weeks later I began to ask forgiveness for the sins of my ancestors, to repent for oaths spoken by Family members and myself. I asked The Father to wash away my sins, to cleanse me of my transgressions, and to remove all my ancestors' iniquities. (Exod. 34:7) I renounced the oaths that had been spoken, the curses over children, and the cutting out of tongues. I asked for cleansing and healing to be given to my wife, daughter, and myself. I wept at times during that prayer and shook uncontrollably. I trembled from head to foot like I'd dove beneath the waves of an icy tomb. I felt things cracking loose in my heart. Waves of nausea, sorrow, and pain washed over me. I wanted to stop the prayers; something else was screaming out within me demanding I desist. I knew I needed to continue to renounce these wicked oaths of "I so solemnly swear and this I will do." I needed deliverance and I could feel there was a force of resistance stronger than any I'd ever known. I continued to cry out to The Great Redeemer Jesus and ask Him to cleanse us and purify us. I stopped periodically and read out loud different passages from Psalms washing away the defilement that had come against me. After nearly an hour I collapsed into the chair exhausted beyond description yet knowing there was more freedom now then I'd had in my entire life.

It wouldn't take long for the once pressed away memories to come flooding back. With them would come understanding of the realities of these dreams, these terrors of the night, the blood in the toilet, and the unexplainable fears and pains. With it would come retribution of the most brutal kind.

The memories solidified in brutal terror. I had promised you at the beginning of this book that I would not let this be the book where I discussed the specifics or went into details about the depths of depravity I had suffered. The reality is that my grandfather was a very active member of a brotherhood freely operating within the Knights of Columbus who engaged in Satanic Ritual Abuse of children while doing occult rituals and ceremonies. The fiery serpentine entities they chose to worship and obey do not deserve to be named. I was one of their "chosen ones." Not every member of a Family is selected. However, the ones that are selected, are then brutalized in horrific ways, in order to create a slave which believes it's free.

I began to trudge through the memories and come to grips with an understanding of my past. The memories of these abuses and these rituals started to flood through me and they left me crippled with emotional pain. With the memories came parts of my soul I'd thought long lost to the despair and sorrow.

After finishing the prayer, my mind was flooded with understanding about some of the objects that were all around my house. There were little totems that had been given to me by my grandfather, now a heralded Fourth Level Knight in The Knights of Columbus. He was a man who'd used my body and those of other Blue Blooded children to advance in rank, power, and control.

I screamed, I wailed, and I wept. The agony was tearing my soul; it was rending my heart to pieces and leaving me collapsed on the floor. Chelsea had gone to work and left me to the memories. She didn't know what I was going through, not yet. I curled up beneath my desk and let the sorrow seep out of my pores as my eyes showered me with past pains finally relived. I didn't want to tell her; how could I tell her what I saw? How could I not? How could I trust her not to leave me? How could I know she wouldn't hate me for what I had done? The thoughts pounded through my head as I finally grieved the death of a stranger, a man I didn't even know.

"MURDERER!" The identity was in my bones; it leeched out of my skin; it became me. What else was I but a murderer? A child burning with rage from the incest and the touch of abusers' hands on his bare skin. Into his boiling cauldron of anger an outlet is placed in his hand. They gave me a blade and forced me to do the inconceivable. The priest was pressing on my palm and showing me how to end a life. I wanted to vomit, I wanted to spit, I wanted to rid myself of all of this. But how do you rid yourself of yourself? How do you cast out your soul? They don't teach you this while getting your degree in psychology or in the dispensational Sunday school classes. They skip over this "disorder" and say it's just rare and so uncommon. So what was in my mind burning away the voids and filling it with understanding? Who was the man in the mirror? Who was the man staring back at me? Where had I gone? Answers come from within,

"We ran away."

We ran away like we always do; we ran from the terrors of the night, from the burning in our belly, from the pain in our heart, which was too much to bear.

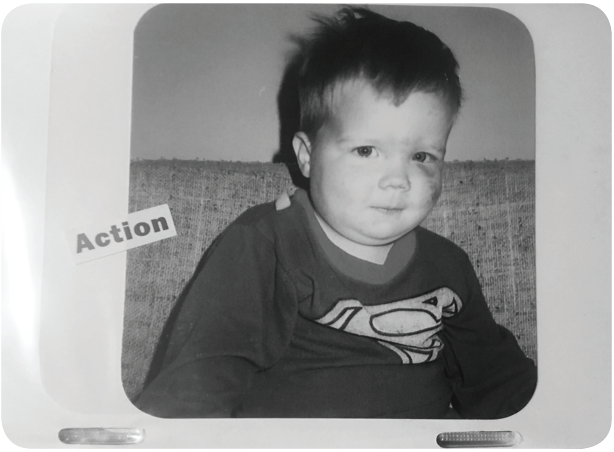
We could not fight back when they pressed down on us or shackled us to the chairs. We could not stop our grandfather from drowning us in their bathtub. We could not fight back when The Family dentist drugged us into oblivion. We were weak, oh my God, we were so weak, and we had no way to fight back. How much longer could we hold out? How long can you resist the pains of torture? Not long enough. Never long enough. So we ran away, we slipped into the cracks that fissured into our mind; the splitting of our soul was a gift from the Creator given to His children who would have to face unimaginable horrors. It was a way to survive the death blows of sorrow, pain, and shame that would have stopped my heart from beating. Survival for us came from one word: dissociation.

As the book progresses, I will go into greater depths of explaining this, but for now, I will give you, the reader, a brief overview. The clinical name for it is Dissociative Identity Disorder (DID), formerly called Multiple Personality Disorder (MPD) of which millions of Americans alone meet all the criteria for. Dissociative Identity Disorder develops when a child, generally before the age of seven or eight, is being abused or sustains a sufficient trauma they cannot physically escape from, so they will instead run away internally to a world no eye can see.

To survive the un-survivable, the soul of the individual splits and tears away from the core personality. During this terrible moment, a blank identity, personality, or fragment is created whose reality and understanding of the world is birthed in this atrocious traumatic event. Because the other personality comes to the surface to endure the trauma the remainder of the individual's core identity can survive. This fragmented piece of the soul can go on its own, or under someone else's manipulation to develop into a complete identity separate from the core person.

DID is not a psychological disorder like Narcolepsy or Agoraphobia. It is not a disorder at all; instead it is without question a gift of the most beautiful of kinds. It is an incredible survival mechanism built into people, which helps them endure unspeakable trauma that would kill even the strongest among us. The doctors and technicians call it "dissociation." We called it the "fade", the slipping of our mind from one reality to the next. Once we have split, we have the forced ability to switch from one personality to another.

This fade gave us the ability to endure the butchering of our innocence and the pains of a life lost to many abusers. Dissociation created in us numerous personalities like one who was familiar with the pain of hunger, the regret of not being able to stop them from hurting the ones we loved or from hurting us. We could not stop the perpetrators physically, so we would slip away into the inner world of our shattered mind. We would crawl away into our familiar space and up would come another part of our soul, one who held the pains of betrayal and abuse, who did not know there was a rational world where dads protected their sons from abusers. Instead they became my Night Walkers those personalities who hide in plain site. Those parts of my past whose enlisted "uncles" delivered them like Cheese Pizza to parlors, pastors, and priests all around The Bridge famous desert town.



The trips down to my grandfather's house during the solstices and other high occult days would sometimes last weeks. All too often my parents would leave us there unprotected, ready to be taken into the depths of their dark chambers and back Oasis rooms. My body, blood and will was a commodity, sold for a high price, never high enough to wash away the shame from our soul and the depths of The Secrets they stored in my mind. I was their altar boy. It was the blood of The Chosen Children that christened their Lady of The Lake's communal cups.

I was not born into a home of safety; there was no roof of refuge over my head. I was not born with free choice. Instead, I was shackled to the walls of wickedness from the day of my conception. I was the "chosen one" in my Family; I was bred and selected so that the blood in my body would fuel the furnaces of secret rituals and power-hungry perverts climbing their ways to the top. I was born into the world of shadows. It is The Underworld of our society where children are taught to seduce strangers and secretly record what they do next. It is The Underworld where people document their ancestry and obsess over their bloodlines, deciding which chosen "Family" to breed with next.

These are not your every-day criminals. These are not the bosses or kings dressing in fur skin and acting hard while they rat out soldiers to detectives for cash and control. These are generations of depravity groomed and carefully cultivated. These individuals are extraordinarily intelligent in their cunning and subtle ways. They are masters of manipulation, experts on human behavior who know how to wear dozens of masks to match every occasion.

They know how to walk in the light of ordinary day looking like your upper-middle-class neighbor next door, while they fuel this empire of insanity at night. They frequent our churches and make sure the pastor, deacon, or bishop knows how steady and substantial their tithe check is. They are the eyes and ears of an Underground army serving their dark prince, a prince who demands from his follower's secrecy, silence, and subterfuge, and my Family has served him with excellence since the ancient days.

Now was the time for those Secrets to be revealed. The memories may have brought back pain and sorrow of the unimaginable kind but with them came something greater. It was stronger and more powerful than anything I'd ever known. They brought courage. They brought a fierceness I'd forgotten. They brought love, peace, and hope. These shattered pieces of my broken soul once they found healing and restoration would find the Word of God spoken over them give them their new identity. Our Heavenly Father would teach us that "He has not given us a spirit of fear but of power, love, and a sound mind." This courage could not be contained; it looked in the face of insurmountable odds and chose to find faith in The Almighty God.

With this courage, I finally began to walk out my faith. I looked at The Way Jesus lived and stepped out hoping the dust of His sandals might fill my vision and cover me with His understanding, boldness, and Truth. For the first time in my life, I was finding freedom from the bondage of my fears, guilt, and shame. I was a new man, and finally I was living in joy, hope, and peace. I could not contain the excitement and needed to go and share the power of forgiveness and Yahweh's hope. Where does a son of Belial go when he is translated from the Kingdom of The Fallen Ones into The Kingdom of The Redeemer? He takes his light and runs back into the squid ink darkness he was familiar with. I looked for the darkest corners of my community and I went to the streets to share the hope of Messiah. I began to share my passions for freedom to all I could, and in doing so, I found out my Family's Secrets were still protected from blowback by the spilling of innocent blood.

Chapter Seven

Murder on their Minds

I had begun to piece together so many pieces to the puzzle of my past, from the numerous different handwritings in my journals, the missing time when other parts were up, to the different names I used to go by when I met people. The fractured memories and forgetting began to disappear. I was finding out more about who I was and in all this remembering, I longed to have additional confirmation. Even with the understanding, I needed more answers, and I needed to know just how deep The Family darkness ran. It was with that courage welling up within me that I made the most dangerous phone call of my life.

I picked up the phone and called my mother. During my middle school years, she had obsessively spent a tremendous amount of time and resources carefully documenting my Family's Ancestry, tracing the bloodlines to The Royals and rulers of old. By so doing my Family sought to substantiate its appeals to our "Divine Right to Rule." I was coming to grips with the reality of my past, and I knew I could validate so much of what I remembered from those ancient records. I asked her if she could send them to me. Ever amiable, she agreed to my requests, and I decided to probe further.

"Mom, what do you know about the Knights of Columbus?"

She told me that Grandpa is a part of it and it's a good old boys club that does pancake breakfasts and fundraisers for children. I nearly gagged. My pedophilic abusers were specifically recruited and connected to their young victims (their altar boys) through the Knights of Columbus and its various seasonal "Youth Groups" and other "Finder" programs. I pressed her on this and warned her of the evil that underpins what Grandpa does with his Knights during their get-togethers. With childlike innocence, she tried to assure me they are just the best of people and promised me again that she would send me the records I'd requested.

That was the last time I spoke with my mother.

Unfortunately, other phone calls were made after I hung up. The Underworld's Spidery Web had just been tripped. I had spoken The Secrets, and my forbidden past could never be allowed to see the light of day. The Family would never allow The Secrets to be revealed no matter how much blood, innocent or guilty, it cost.

Just a few days passed, and I continued my research documenting and disseminating the memories of murder and finding that there could be a cleansing from even that kind of shame and guilt I was woefully unaware of the carnal wheels of chaos churning just below our feet.

Chapter Eight

Hunted

Chelsea was now approaching her seventh month of pregnancy with Naomi, and we decided we should see a movie. Even as we got ready to go, I felt a churning in my stomach, a discomfort about going. I foolishly shoved down the feeling as I knew it would be many months before Chelsea and I would be going on a date to a movie. Just before I walked out the door, I felt the pressing of The Holy Spirit to put on my kit and body armor. Even as we drove to the theater, Chelsea and I discussed how we both didn't feel right about going to this movie, that something was really "off." Unfortunately, we justified away the feelings and went to the movie.

The night wore on and by the time we went to walk out of the theater, it was nearly midnight. When I went to step out the door, I felt a Familiar burning presence waiting; the lion stalking in the darkness was coming once more to seek our death.

The well-lit parking lot was capable of holding hundreds of cars but now it lay all but deserted. There were a few cars parked directly outside the exit doors, most likely employees' who get the premium spots in front of their entrance. Our car was the exception. It lay eighty yards from the exit doors.

The assassins came for us then. The heat on my neck built to a furnace, and I was reacting with instincts that have kept me alive through too many tangos with Death. It seemed innocent at first. A four-door crossover SUV started driving diagonally towards Chelsea and me through the parking lot, ignoring the painted lines. We both watched them troubled at first but waiting to see what they were doing. I grabbed Chelsea's hand and had her watch. They pulled straight towards us, turning just before they hit the sidewalk. The driver watched us intently and his gaze disturbed me. He continued past us in a massive circle, parking out in the middle of the lot within only a few spaces of my vehicle. Upon parking, he did not move to get out but instead waited.

Moments later, a second car came on the same path as the first. This time there was no doubt about it: red flags began exploding in our minds. The small sedan continued to angle directly towards us. I grabbed Chelsea, pushed her behind me, and moved her towards the only cover available by the first vehicles. I intended to position her low near the engine block while I dealt with the threats. The adrenaline began to slow down time; numbing my extremities and heightening my essential fight senses of smell, sight, and hearing.

Heart slamming into my chest, I studied my opponents carefully. There was a man in his early forties with dark hair, a button-up shirt, and no jacket driving the small sedan. In his passenger seat was a woman with long brunette hair obsessively trying to unjam a black pistol. I could see her attempting to drop the magazine and rack the slide. She was shaking, looking up at me and down at the pistol. Frantic and hectic, there was fear in her eyes and panic in her actions. She was yelling something to the man I couldn't make out, and he tried to angle the vehicle closer.

Waiting for them to engage us, I kept Chelsea moving, trying to keep the vehicles between us. Soon the driver ran out of space and had to turn away and drive past us. I readied myself for the raising of the pistol and the battle to begin but the moment passed. They both suddenly dropped their heads and drove off as she shoved the gun beneath the dash. They parked in the first row of spots twenty feet beyond where we were standing, forcing me to make a decision: continue on foot and head back towards the other side of the complex or make a break for the car and add my force multipliers to my options. I decided to go for our car and flush out whatever else is waiting for us in the ambush.

I lead Chelsea nearly at a run to our car, keeping myself between her and the other idling vehicle. The man never moved; he was a statue staring at the other vehicle and seemingly talking to himself. Jumping in, I began praying for The Father's intervention to help us get out of here. Suddenly, a switch in my head was thrown, and training, which had been encoded into my very DNA took over.

The voices of my instructors and trainers came roaring to the surface.

"Stack the shots in the center of mass to slow them. Headshots for closure. Observe, Orient, Decide, Act. Keep forcing your opponent outside his own OODA Loop. Decisiveness and precision are weapons; use them. Find the edge of their ambush net and press through until they stop shooting or you are dead."

The Soldier in my head was demanding a battle, but Jason was firmly in place keeping us calm, cool, and collected. I let them make the decisions; this was their familiar world of shadows, not mine.

I pulled away and began to leave the parking lot. The moment I did, a black lifted truck that I had seen two times earlier that day following Chelsea and me doing errands pulled out of a parking spot thirty yards from my own and sped up to get ahead of me. I could see two figures in the back of the truck lifting themselves beginning to turn in our direction. I immediately whipped our car around and peeled off to a secondary entrance. As I did this, the truck, which had been driving towards the exit, suddenly stopped but I put on the gas determined to break out of the kill box we had been funneled into. I roared past the two first cars where I saw the man screaming and the woman still attempting to fix her pistol.

We approached the four-way stop on the edge of the complex and Chelsea shouted out, “There’s a guy!” I slowed down briefly, and we both saw a lone man dressed in a dark windbreaker with a black pistol in his hand. Beginning to shove Chelsea low beneath the dash, I angled towards him. He continued to run away from us and through the intersection. He turned his head as he ran and I saw a look of terror in his eyes that screamed of fear from something I could not see. I waited for him to raise the pistol but he never did; he just kept running, an unfired gun in hand and fear in his eyes.

We tore through the intersection and retreated to a safe place, debriefing as we went. No one followed us, and we knew the immediate threat was over. We poured out thanks to The Father for intervening and asked forgiveness for our ignorance of His warning. Chelsea was shaken up by the adrenaline and the reality that people were intent on killing us. The worst part was, she did not know why. I did my best to calm her down, but there was no way I could explain to her at that moment what was going on.

The ravenous lion’s mouth had been shut for now, but soon I was to learn that that was just the beginning of my family’s end of innocence. The first silenced shots had been fired and whether or not Chelsea and I were ready, The Great War of The Ages had come to our door. My Family knew The Secrets in my head could bring down their corrupt kingdom. When their detestable domino fell, so too would many others. They knew the consequences of losing control of a Company “asset” would bring the end of their little reigns. My Family had been wise to try to kill me before I could prepare for their retaliation. Before I had spread their darkest and most dangerous Secrets into a thousand physical and digital hiding places that would be released as a plague of truth should they ever try again. In the age of instant information, a dead man’s secret switch could do more damage than a hundred bombs or a billion bullets. My former masters and handlers had left too many wounded-ones out in plain elements to perish and those secret switches were about to be thrown.

I was not ready for that battle, not yet. I was still a weak man who was being buried by burdens and had no helpmate to share them with. I knew if I was going to ever be able to face this and live, I needed to speak The Secrets and get help.

Chelsea still did not know about the memories. She didn't know we were screaming with a grief that was pummeling me on my drive to work and in the hours before I left the house. I needed to know she would not leave me. I needed to know she would love me even though I was so damaged, even though I was so defiled. She had seen some of the beautiful fruit come with my healing: the return of my passions, my joys, and my affection for her. I knew now it was time to help her understand just why I was a new man.

Chapter Nine

Will She Still Love Me Tomorrow?

The days had grown long; summer was drawing near and with it would come the end of our lives as we had known them. Chelsea and I were sitting together on the wicker furniture she'd picked from the trash, painstakingly restored, and painted a brilliant white. The neighborhood was quiet and Naomi was beginning to kick and buck in her belly as there were only a few short months until she would come. Nate's Beach was sitting with its sand, seashells, and chunks of cherished metal. I smiled finally beginning to understand who I was and where I had been. It was in that moment that Chelsea said three sentences which forever changed the course of our marriage, our daughter's future, and my own. The conversation drifted from the pains of her body and job to my own. She asked me questions that I was still too afraid to answer.

Instead, I chose to keep listening and waiting. Grabbing hold of my trembling hands, she looked into the depths of my soul. In the stillness of a moment I had waited my whole life for, my wife spoke.

"Nathan, I need you to know that I love you no matter what. I love each part of you. No matter what you've been through or what you've done, I love you."

Weeping we held each other as those bleeding broken parts of my soul felt the a safe harbor of love for the first time in their lives. I had sequestered my pain for twenty-seven years. I had buried burdens no one should have to see, touch or carry. I had stuffed my soul into prison cells and corridors of chaos. I could not bear to share with this wondrous woman the horrors of my past, and yet here she sat arms wrapped around mine, holding me, caring for me, and loving me. What was this newfound hope? Could this be it? Could this be real? Could I have found someone that will not leave me, even when The Chameleons masks come off and she sees the scars riddling my tortured body and soul? Would she still love me when I tell her about how many times I was sexually abused? Would she still love me when I tell her about covens rituals and the beasts, which infected me at such a young age? Would she run? Would she stay? A thousand questions pummeled my mind and yet her words rang louder, silencing them all.

We could see she meant it. We knew it. Each of us who doubted was beginning to believe that maybe there was such a thing as unconditional love. We no longer had to experience it through other people's stories, movies, or plays; now we had experienced it.

Three days later I told Chelsea, the woman who once tried to hide her eyes from my own, that behind my eyes there were more than just a me, but rather a we. I told her about the oaths, the cult of my Families, the dissociation of the other personalities, Nate, Nathan, Jason, Soldier, Boy and the many other parts of a fractured soul within. I shared with her I was not a whole man, but I so desperately wanted to be. I told her there was a mountain of misery, madness, and murder concealed in my past. Unable to bear the feelings of exposure, Chelsea and I retreated into our home.

In the corner of our living room, Chelsea held me and wept with me as my body trembled from head to toe. The fear of rejection was pounding through my heart, threatening to tear what little remained apart. Even as I trembled, Chelsea folded her arms over me as we let the rivers of sorrow finally flow. Chelsea and Naomi, my true family, held me close and said "I'm so sorry that happened to you. I love you still no matter what." She washed me in undefiled love as my heavenly Father had. She did not reject me or run. She held fast to me as the supernaturally crafted stone strongholds of my heart fell down flat. She did not run from the darkness; she did not hide from the horrors of my abusers.

My wife embodied The Scriptures that night. She had come to believe the Word that is written, perfect love casts out fear. Perfect love can stare at the face of Death himself and find an ocean of peace, hope, and kindness washing his deceptive threats away. My wife did not have the strength to do this, not of herself. She was a woman who had learned Whose she was. She knew her identity was secured to The Rock of Jesus The Messiah. She had built her house upon the unshakable foundations of the Word of Yahweh. When the fierce winds of these detestable things blew against it, it did not crumble but instead held fast. She knew she was a redeemed daughter of The Living God and because of that, she had faith to love her husband even when he told her things no spouse wants to hear or learn their spouse went through.

Chelsea had supernatural strength and compassion, but the next day the heaviness of what we told her began to crush her. She stumbled her way through work in a daze. Unable to handle the pressure alone, she called me. I stepped out of work and heard my wife overwhelmed by the things I'd shared with her. I heard her struggling with the fear, the anger, and the frustration. I reminded her of The One who can carry those burdens and told her she needed to surrender them to Messiah and let Him speak to her.

Under the boughs of our backyard tree, Chelsea swung in her chair and wept. She poured her heavy burdens out on Our Redeemer, and The God of Comfort strengthened my wife. He told her words that would become a fortress of hope in the days ahead. "Chelsea, it is very critical how you react."

Suddenly, an understanding flooded over her, and in her weakness, she found The Father's pure grace and strength to be mightier than her fears, doubts, and disbelief. She discovered His Holy Spirit filling her and renewing her. Naomi listened in as my wife's heart beat with supernatural courage, compassion, and love. Naomi heard the songs of peace flood over her mother and equipped her with the tools she needed to stand against the brutal spiritual and emotional attacks that were already being cunningly crafted against us. Battle lines were being drawn and it was time for us all to fight for the souls of the suffering, the slandered and those waiting to be redeemed.

Chapter Ten

A Time for Telling

He came for me in the stillness, in the dark of the night when dawn was still far off. He placed the pommel of the double-edged dagger in my palm and told me whom to take. The clandestine targets on a paper would later become numbers on My List; The List of nameless faces who would haunt my early morning dreams. Their blood splashed on my knuckles, fingers and tear-stained fists. I couldn't wash it away. I begged God to forgive me. I begged Him to wash the putrid stains away. I couldn't stop the sorrow, the pain, the guilt of strangers whose names I wasn't told. The men who I left in a heap on the floor after taking their ceremonial totem rings as proof of the deed to be returned to their former Masters.

The Order sends out its Pet Project to hunt a fellow Jesuit who no longer satisfies their Black Goats goals. The plunge of a syringe with prepared cocktails injected between their toes, and it was blamed on another case of cardiac arrest. What do you do when you make a woman a widow before you are twelve years old? Who do you report crimes to when the Chief of Police and the District Attorneys are partakers in your very own abuse? What child can outwit master manipulators and terrorizers of souls? You can't beat them, so you do what you've been made to do: you run away and keep The Secrets. You fade. You run into those secret places within where you hide from the madness.

I never had an option to say no; no one ever told me there was such a thing as free choice. I was a child who saw them brutalize children and swore they would do the same to my family members if I ever refused to obey or spoke The Secrets. My family, like so many in The Underworld, were masters of manipulation and control. Instead, you swore upon your soul that you would never let this happen to the innocents or the girl who smiles at you in between classes and passes notes to you in the back of the room.

They should have killed me that night outside the theater, or when they threw me into the pits to make their Pizza Parlor snuff films have “something more exciting in them.” I should have died when they sent me to kill men twice my age and three times my weight. And yet, they could not. They could not because I was not made for oath keeping rituals and the murder they used me for. I was not made for death, but I was made for life. I was made to give, not take.

My name is Nathan; it means gift or giver. I was made to be a blessing, not a curse; to offer my life to others that they might yet know there is still hope. To you sons of Belial you daughters of the queen of heaven know that there is a true light of hope burning brighter than their darkness can ever conceal.

I think of the early followers of The Way being ravaged by the Roman Emperors and Cesar’s who set the followers of The Way on fire to light their orgies and festivals. Or I think of the Roman Catholic Church burning alive hundreds of thousands of those who spoke The Truth by a peasants tongue. Those lips of commoners who were unsanctioned by the Popes their Anti-Messiah the one who sits enthroned in stead of The True Christ. I think of those followers of Messiah who refused to compromise on The Instructions of The Living God for the sake of a higher inheritance that was yet to come.

People like The Maccabees, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Enoch, John, and James. They would not relent in their dedication to His Truth even as their enemies tied them to stakes, poured oil upon them, and set them ablaze. They did not hide from persecution, from torture, or death. No, they ran headfirst into the heart of darkness and were willing to be a witness even as they burned brightly. They were anointed as the Levite priests were anointed and set apart to serve in The Tabernacle of Yahweh. The oil of suffering, agony, and certain death released them from these earthly shackles of shame and purchased them a greater weight of glory. Their eyes were fixed no longer on this flesh and blood world but upon the eternal holiness of hope fulfilled.

I assure you of this: the words of their testimony still echo in the hearts of us all. They made way for every one of us. For those of us born into the very Families that have always grown fat on the blood of the innocents, who have pampered themselves with luxury produced by their slaves. I have been a participant in those orgies, and I watched men, women and children burn. I smelled the smoke of their flesh. I partook of their blood from silver and gold chalices as my masters taught me to. Those same festivals are done to this day. The millions that go missing every year are fuel to their frenzies and lusts. But this world has been trained that the deaths of a dozen is a tragedy but the murder of millions is a mere statistic or “a woman’s rites.”

For years of my young life I watched the wicked grow in power by the perverseness of their pleasures. Bound by their cancerous controls I waited and then when the rage would build to a crescendo, they would point my anger, hatred, and need for justice at faces on My List. Once my fury peaked, they let their Pet Project assassin out to hunt. They would put the pommel of the dagger in my palm and tell me to unleash my wrath. The curse of death would land upon me and all the while they grew richer still. They would convince me that my targets were the very men who’d used me the night before. That they were the ones who trafficked the children who were burned every “high day.” Though “they” seem invincible, powerful beyond measure, and limitless in resource, The Families and The Guardians of Secrets have a great weakness.

Every enemy we face has a perpetual chink in their armor, and my Family did not count on one of the wolves of their pack turning against them. Who thought a wolf could forsake its shame, guilt, and hatred, and shed its wicked ways? Could a leopard change its spots? Could a deceiver speak the truth? Would a creature of Death instead choose to freely submit to The Good Shepherd and see that in Him is a greater power than this world has ever known? The Prince of Peace does not control through blackmail, fear, threats, and torture but through freedom, truth, justice, and love.

What The True Master offered me was something my earthly father never had: He offered me a free choice. He offered me an opportunity not plagued with subtle rhetoric and manipulation. He did not offer me the choice between two lesser evils or the guilt of choosing wrong. No, He gave me the freedom to choose which master I would serve.

I could continue the generational wickedness and raise Naomi up on The Path of Secrets. I could use her as an "asset" as my father, uncles and aunts had used me. I could go from our near poverty lifestyle to the new cars, private schools, multiple houses, custom decors, and specialty air plains just like my father had soon after he'd moved my abuser into the room next to my own. I could let the darkness consume me and follow the Left-Hand Path my ancestors had chosen time and time again. Or I could decide to leave The Family and trust my Heavenly Father would be my protector, provider and earn a greater weight of glory. I could choose to join the Followers of The Way burning in the darkness, lighting a path of hope to all who long to be free.

How could I possibly face down this mountain? How could I sever ties with The Family and survive when so many times I'd been the one who ended the lives of those who spoke The Secrets? How much more of their mind controlled arsenal would they send against us? How would they seek to silence us? So many thoughts and all I could do was lay these fears at my Savior's feet.

As I was facing the decision of silence or speaking, The Father led me to The Beginning, to Genesis, to the story of a man who grew up amidst the greatest time of occult power and dark workings since The Great Flood, where the incarnation of the mystery religions and esoteric knowledge was scattered as Nimrod, The Rebel King of the earth, took to his throne.

He was the first embodiment of the antichrist spirit, which set himself up against The Most High God. The Rebellious One the hunter of men's souls, boldly set about uniting the world's population, gods, religions, traditions and focus on warring against The Great Creator. The Angel of Yahweh thwarted their plans by confusing the languages and destroying his rebellious conduit and high place.

With this confusion came the dissemination of The Secrets and many mysteries encoded into the pagan religions who worshiped the statues and obelisks of their fallen Rebel King by many names, such as Orion, Apollo, Ra, Dionysus, Osiris, and dozens more. His mother and later queen wife Ishtar became the centerfold for goddess worship with many names like Semiramis, Columbia, Liberty, Isis, and Diana, also known as Mary The Queen of Heaven. Their incestuous progeny, Tammuz or the "sun of god" would be the basis for ignorant idolatry for generations to come. (Ezekiel 8) The world has bloomed with the worship of this Rebel King be it as the first Master Mason or The King of The Pit, he who was and is not but will be again. See Rob Skiba's superb research on this for more at (robschannel.com)

In the settings of this devilishly apocalyptic scene, Yahweh called a man out of his pagan father's house. He did not call a Jew, Israelite, Muslim or Greek but rather one who would be obedient not because of bloodline but because of belief. He called a man named Abram and told him that out of him would come forth a nation whose people would be set apart to Yahweh and through whom all the earth would be blessed. That day Yahweh introduced himself to Abram by a different name, El Shaddai. El Shaddai is who I also needed to know before setting out and leaving my Family's familiar ways behind.

Before I could stand against the defilers of the people, I needed to know if The God of Justice still lived and moved among His people. El Shaddai is a name that means father, mother, brother, as well as destroyer. In no uncertain terms, Yahweh told Abram He would be his protector, his family, and his provider. Abram obeyed Yahweh's Instructions and left his pagan roots in Babylon behind and set himself apart for his new Father's dangerous and unfamiliar Way.

It was as I learned more about The God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob that I came to know, believe, and trust that He would be my all-sufficient exceeding abundance of provision and protection. In Him alone could I put my trust, in Him alone could I find my source of strength. In the end, it would come down to a single testing of reality. Yahweh would prove His Word to be true, or my new family would die. If I obeyed Him first and above all else, I knew He would build a hedge of protection around me that no power on this earth, above it or below it could destroy. If by His wisdom He allowed the Enemy to overcome this fleshly body through death, we knew we would be freed from sharing with Him in this monumental earthly blessings and suffering once and for all. Death was an inevitability and now was the time I became willing to die for something of eternal importance.

Chapter Eleven

The Battle Begins

The same day I told Chelsea about the abuse and the horrors, I also met with my father. Outside a Whole Foods grocery store, I sat with my dad telling him I needed to talk to him about some things. The last time I'd seen my mother, I'd told her about one of the molestations, and he said to me that she'd told him. I began to weep as I told him there was more than just that incident, so much more involving Family members and people outside The Family. Before I could say who my abusers were, my father named my grandfathers – both of them. He choked up and said he was sorry that it had happened but he "would make it right." He then made me promise him that under no circumstances would I talk to my sisters about this. "I'm the dad, and it's my job to take care of this." I kowtowed to his authority like I always had, as I still trusted him to do the right thing.

That night when I was sitting on the couch with Chelsea, I had told her of one the "sessions" with my grandpa. He was in the bathroom with me on our side of the house, and my sister walked in. He stopped her at the door, so she wasn't able to see down into the tub where I was, but she'd asked him what he was doing in our bathroom. He dismissed her back to bed, and she complied. That next night and every night for the remainder of our stay down there that trip, my sister stayed in my bedroom, and he didn't come for me again. I so badly wanted to thank her for what she'd done, and after telling Chelsea this; she disagreed with my dad and said I needed to tell her.

I drove to my sister's house, and on the way, I called my dad. I told him I was going to talk to her. He said to me that he was handling everything and now I needed to swear to him that I would not tell her who my abusers were. I was forbidden from telling her my primary abusers' names. Initially agreeing to his terms, I drove to see her.

Meeting with her was a surreal experience. I sat down on with her and told her what I'd needed to say. I began to talk on a very superficial level about the abuse and the freedom I had found in forgiving my abusers. I told her about the freedom from the addictions and the restoration of my marriage that had come since I started talking about these things and getting counseling. She began to press me and demanded I tell her who the perpetrators were. I told her that dad told me I couldn't, and then she guessed their names.

Once those names came out and the memory of the bathroom incident surfaced, my sister began to do the oddest thing. While I told her about what was going on, she curled into the fetal position and began to rock back and forth saying over and over again,

"I'm so sorry I don't remember, I'm so sorry I don't remember."

Over and over again, it was like my sister checked out and in her place was a deeply wounded child. When I wrapped up our conversation, she belted out that she needed to see a counselor. I promised her I would bring back a referral for her the next day. Hugging her, I headed home.

I didn't get ten minutes out the door before my dad called me. Fuming, he began demanding why I'd told her my grandpas' names. I told him my sister had guessed it, but I'd kept my word. He was furious in a way I'd never heard him be. My dad takes particular care to keep a lid on his emotions and to keep his mask firmly in place. He began threatening me and warning me that if I was not very, very careful, this would blow up in my face. He warned me again and again that I was absolutely forbidden from speaking these things to people, and especially to my sisters. He ended the phone call by saying again, "I'm the dad, and I will handle this."

My father's loving Christian mask was beginning to slip. The more Chelsea and I talked about his reactions, a creeping suspicion began to solidify that my Family was in no way wanting to bring their past to the light. They were not interested in restoration, reconciliation, or truth. No, their motives were firmly in line with The Kingdom of Darkness. Their interest was in keeping their kingdom no matter how many bodies or how much blood was spilled to erect its powerful pillars. The gloves would come off and soon a Family brawl would ensue, the details of which we'll later get to.

Once those battles with my father and Family members ended, it granted me time to heal. I dove headfirst into the restoration I'd been deprived of my entire life. In doing so, I finally began to face the depths of the darkness and hunt for hope amidst the abyss of my soul. Even in those inky waters, I found The Great Physician willing to bear with me and comfort me, giving me a new call and purpose.

Chapter Twelve

The Savior in Our Midst

I knew there was no way I could keep it a secret, not anymore. The memories were there all the time. I could not escape the shadowed sight of souls passing away, the spark of life leaving their eyes, the moment of death, the moment of madness and misery. Even as I tried to focus on telling her about these things, memories flooded through my mind desperate to keep me buried in fear.

My wife was cuddling up next to me, and our daughter was sleeping soundly just a few feet away. She talked about things I could not remember, something about going for a walk the next day. I thought I should be listening, but I couldn't. There is no one to listen when our blood boils and the faces return. All I could see were the plots, plans, and schemes, the ways of the Garrote, the wire that strangled a man in the front seat after my Blade dealt with his partner in the back.

I could not see anything but those eyes and felt the sorrow for something I didn't understand. Another pebble on this path of remembering, why did they have to watch me? Who sent them? Was it The Order or another Brother sworn to protect a Knight? What was the purpose of this problem that pestered my past? I asked The Father for forgiveness again. These strangers who spent their final moments looking at a monster in the mirror, would they ever look away and see something else? Would they ever see the wife whose fingers placed the gold band on his left hand?

I wanted to let her crush my skull the way I crushed her husband's throat. I wish she would pummel me with her fists and spit on my body. Would she weep bitterly for the man whose limp form sagged inches from my face? Did she beg God to know why? Did she have to identify his body on a cold steel table? Was she alone when she said, "That's him?" Did he have children who went to sleep with a father but awoke to misery?

My God, the questions crushed my soul. I couldn't hear what my wife was saying; I was trying so hard to remember that I was no longer wrestling with death in the heat of that swampy district. I was desperately trying not to count the seconds it took for him to stop fighting. My God, did you hear the sounds of strangulation? Why didn't you stop me?! My God, where are you?! Where is your hope?

How I wished I could tell her I didn't know what I was doing, I was just another man's killing machine. A Soldier who followed orders and accomplished the sanctioned mission; The Company's Craft at its finest. It's all I ever knew. No one ever told me how to say no.

What do you tell your wife when she looks over at you and asks you, "Honey, are you ok?" Do you tell her that you were still staring at a man's eyes when he was bursting from the pressure of the cord you buried in his neck? Do you tell her you couldn't breathe when you saw the rearview mirror when you loaded your daughter into her car seat last week? Or do you stuff it all back into the boxes it was kept?

No one gave me this information. It was not mission critical but learning how many seconds it takes a femoral artery to bleed a body out when someone is fighting for their life was. Our Instructors had us watch dozens of videos of it over and over again. Different sized people, men, women, children, different levels of fear, terror, and frenzy – we watched them all.

We were trained how to keep quiet even as they begged and screamed. They taught us how to turn off our hearing. The last vestiges of our conscience were seared by the irons of madness. No matter how many times we trained not to hear them, their voices would come crawling back in the dark. In the stillness, they were there. We had to keep them quiet for so long, but The Father has told us that we don't have to anymore. We no longer have to keep The Secrets of murder, misery, and madness.

That week in September we finally broke down and screamed in the car. We had written about seven more bodies that fell by our Company-controlled hands. We drove away from the little café we'd been writing in and screamed until our throat grew hoarse. Our words were an incense of agony ripe with the brutal honesty I stopped hiding from my Healer.

"My God, do you hear us screaming? Did you hear the sound of that girl whose severed hands are on the floor next to the Brute's feet? My God, what happened to the other boy, the one who was once right by our side. That Chosen One they are turning into another chameleon of death? Please set him free from the tortured tunnels of turmoil he was locked in. Save him, Messiah, I beg you. There are so many of us out there and who will tell us we are forgiven? Who forgives children whose manipulated hands are stained with blood? Who will tell us no one has forgotten those screams, those pleas, and plots of land where they buried and burned the bodies? My Father, I beg you don't let it be wasted, not a single utterance of agony that flowed from the bleeding lips of the many children, teens, and adults.

I can't unsee the eyes of this man; Father did you see them? Why did I have to get out of the car and not them? Will you forgive me? Please, I didn't know what I was doing, I still don't. No one gave me answers: neither my commanders nor their superiors. No one told me why. Why them? Why this person and not that? Why did they need three vials of blood from his neck? Why did we have to shove the engraved copper ring on the fingers of the quiet man's body? Wet Workers don't get answers just diamond-dusted wires, blades, bullets or syringes of potassium and craftily engineered biological agents. Why can't I say I'm sorry to his widow? Will they kill me for what I've done?"

Out of the bellows of our broken heart came forth a cry of such raw intensity that it scattered the wounds.

"The wind and the waves are all I can see; Abba my Father, please save me!"

What do you tell your wife when she sees you staring off for the tenth time that day? Do you tell her the screams of a little girl are ringing in your ears, and you want to vomit? God, you heard those screams and the dying mans bulging eyes. I know this is true; I just want You not to forget them. Please don't waste them, not a drop of blood or utterance of agony. I surrender them to you; I can't carry them anymore; they are crushing my heart. Take it all; it's not mine to hold anymore. I lay it at your feet. I need you to pick me up because I don't feel like rising for a long time. I wish I could crawl into the dirt and hide the hurt and horror of my heart. I want to find peace when this storm rages. I pray you will build me a home of hope so I can hunker down for a while.

Back on the bed I suddenly realized I'd been lost in my head. My wife asked me for the fifth time "Honey, are you ok?" She knows me too well to hide the horror dripping from my heart. I stammered through the strangulation cord, the blade on his shoulders and the million questions pummeling my peace and stealing my sleep. She listened, her compassion unending. She bore with me in a moment of horror. The realization had become a hammer driving the nails of understanding deeper and deeper into her once innocent soul.

She wanted to run from it, to blink it all away, to try to rationalize the impossible madness of the man she'd known for years being a controlled wolf who hunted strangers in the night. She thought of the longhaired man running shirtless through the waters in the ocean with glee.

She thought of Nate and struggled to see me.

My hands shook; the fear of rejection boiled my heart's waters to mist. The thoughts of running came pounding through my head: "We can grab our bag and fade back into nothingness. We would be a ghost in the shadows and they'd never see us again."

As if reading my thoughts, she grabbed my trembling hands and held them close. She knew our names of Jason, Nathan and all the rest. She reached over and touched the blade strapped to my chest. It had been there for years, and now she knew why. We wanted to know she wouldn't be afraid of us knowing what we had done. We wanted to know she would love us even though we had killed, even though we had been made to be monsters before we knew there was any other way.

In a moment of exposure, she covered us with the same love, understanding, and kindness The Father showed us time and time again. She became The Healer's physical hands of love as she held onto me and refused to run away. She sobbed with us telling us she loved us and would never be afraid of us no matter what we had been through. She loves us all no matter what we did. Our woman of rescue chose not to flee. She did not run but instead Chelsea chooses to abide. Those fears of rejection are blown away as we settle into a sense of peace we've hardly ever known.

The next day we went for another walk. She knew it would help to give me the open space I needed to see there will be more to this world than the brutality of my past. My daughter was peering out at me from the folds of cloth, which kept her warm against the Rocky Mountain winter. Naomi Grace smiled at me even as my hands shook and trembled. She did not know her dad was talking about murder and misery. She stared into my soul and silently said, "It's ok daddy. No matter what, I love you." My wife was quiet as we walked; she was chewing on my words. I know they tasted like death. Would I ever stop seeing more of the men whose blood spilled onto my palms? Would I ever wake up after sleeping without the faces on My List staring back at me?

I asked her if she was mad I had told her. "Of course not, honey, I am never mad that you tell me. I love you so much, and it breaks my heart to hear you hurt. I am so proud of you for finally talking about it. You are a brave man, and I believe in you." Her words were a mercy I hardly deserved. We walked on stirring up rocks, gravel, and dirt, and though I tried to stay in the moment, I felt it slipping.

There was little left to say because I didn't want to make her vomit with the details I can barely write about. What would I do when she reads these words? Would I hide in the corner of our house and wait till she has finished? Would I run outside and smash the stick into the old tire until my fingers ache? I don't want to carry this shame anymore. I want to walk around dog parks without thinking about men's eyes and armless little girls. I know I have to heal, but I feel like my flesh is being boiled. My body aches and trembles, and I can feel the wire biting the flesh between my knuckles like it happened yesterday.

My cat found me downstairs weeping when I wrote those words. He knew just to comfort me and let me wail. I thanked God for this house of healing, hope, and peace. I could never have dreamed of a place so free where orders are never given but patience, and forgiveness are extended instead. I know this is real life, not death, and for that I am thankful. But the memories of days spent in Underworlds of Special Access Projects come rushing back.

I can't stop seeing The Colonel's face or hearing the orders he gave me. I see the burning of the paperless trails at Signposts marked empty, and caches marked full. I grew tired of their constant lies; their lists of targets taken who only advanced their cause. The endless cycle of deception, manipulation, and control was built by my need for revenge, justice, and their manipulative balancing of Lady Liberty's insatiable scales.

I was a ravenous wounded wolf who needed to protect the innocent from the monsters who masquerade as men. I wanted to see the man whose hands were filled with blood and sharpened steel brought to justice. I wanted to see the little girl rescued from the Brutes' blade and gender bending Rosicrucian monstrosities. These were the levers they used on me time and time again. I tried to stop them from hurting more people; I wanted to cut the throats of the perverts who had hurt the children. I tried so hard to bring it to an end but I could not stop them all or save her, not then or today.

There is only so much vengeance a man can get done. There is only so many monsters you can kill in a day before you have to sleep, eat, and plan your next hunt. All the while you forsake the land of the living for the hopes of avenging or resurrecting the dead.

Unzipping and eradicating a six-tiered Atlantic pedophile ring might satisfy the rage for a moment but soon it will return, hungry to be fed. Spilling the blood of the evil does not right the wrongs or hammer out the horrors in this world. A thousand new nails pop up every day to take the place of the dead ones. A pack of wolves can't be the answer to this madness, only He can.

Now I know the only Judge who will deal with all these things accordingly. I surrender to Him all the many pieces of my broken heart and trust He will see them redeemed. Thousands of years ago and just last night He took my burdens and placed them on His mutilated back. I see Him carry the cries of the innocents with Him too. He set them on Golgotha, that Hill of Goliaths Skull, and washed them with His perfect blood. He was The Red Heifer sacrifice; the death of His perfect body cleanses our dirty souls. His love rescued mine and His Word tells me how to breathe again when the sorrow strangles me from suffering the scorn. He reminds me how to love still the mockers and scoffers who doubt my words and joke about my healing for their comic relief. He taught me how to love my enemies and pray for those who persecute me. Still daily I ask Him to help me forgive the Brutes and commanders who made me do these things.

I was angry that day when we walked around the lake and I wanted to shove my fist through the perpetrator's skulls. But I chose instead to set that anger at His feet and tell Him I trust Him with it too. He carries it all and will bear forth vengeance and He alone sets me free. One day at a time I choose life and not death, I choose to believe The God of Comfort will show me His Name is True. I choose to believe He is hope and He is my Father who will restore me in full. I choose to believe that what we surrender to Him can be used for great good, even the saving of many lives.

We had exposed our darkest stains of red to our wife's white gown of innocence. She had not cursed us, resented us, or feared our hands scarred by death. She embodied the same forgiveness Messiah extends to us. She let my stains be washed away as she reminded me of who I really was: no longer a murderer, no longer a slave. She reminded me of the new man I am, a son of a different Father. No longer was I a child being manipulated and controlled, and no longer a teen full of fury and rage. Now I was a son of The King of Glory, a redeemed child of The King. I was a husband, a father, a man on a path to set captives free.

My identity did not abide in the sickeningly stained robes I'd been made to wear; it was not held in my Handlers' Black Book. My identity was knit together with the Resurrected King and the scars, which pierced His heart. This is what she reminded me of and helps me to grab onto when the winds of remembering rage. Chelsea covered by The Father promised to be my safe harbor when the storms of pain blow again. Because of my wife's devotion and love I know I have the rarest of freedoms to tell her about the faces, killings, and dreams.

She did not run from me. She did not hide. She looked into my eyes with tears turning hers bright green. I see the face of an angel in those eyes. I see the messenger of love sent to me for such a time as this. She helps me remember The Scriptures, about my identity as a son of God no longer a slave to these dark masters. She helps me remember I still have free choice and The Father preserved me for a great purpose. She helps me remember; remember things others systemically made me forget. She gives me the feeling of safe, unadulterated touches on my skin and the warmth of a wanted embrace. She gives me the joy a freely offered gift brings, the ways of a husband with his wife as they become unhindered by the stains of regret, wounds, and abuse.

I was not born for these deaths. I was not made for this madness; it was made for me. It was carved out of the necrotic altar stones of The Wicked One's throne. It was conceived by corrupt cowards who saw a way to keep themselves out of harm's reach while making sure the deadly work still got done. They had to teach me how to hate. They had to show me how to boil with rage and fill me with fury. I was not born with murder on my mind; instead, they made it reasonable and they made it our way. The touch of the perverse became commonplace and acceptable.

It should never have been that way. Children should not be looked at as commodities for profit, status, and gain. Yahweh says children are a powerful arrow and they are a gift; they are entrusted to us so we can raise them, shepherd them, and lead them to become who they were made to be, not what we can profit off of the most. (Psalm 127)

I would spend so much time as a child looking in the mirror. Seeing the new scars, the new stitches, the bruises, and the bloody noses. Other times I would see Dr. Cherry and the false face he gave me. I would see a new mirror after we moved again, sometimes in school hallways, and in teachers' offices. I would see these many places scattered across the country. I would see glimpses of a young boy who would turn into a teen and later a man. The pink scars on my body faded into white before new ones rose up and took their place.

I would look into bloodshot eyes once royal blue and see them turn to crystal one day and be opaque as the snow burying the bodies they left in the forests for the birds of death. I would watch them fill with violence, with hurt and betrayal. I would see the mountain of misery grow taller and taller still. I would see the burdens of a hundred lifetimes of grief reach toward the clouds. I could not escape the hurt in my heart or the hate in my eyes. I wondered if ever there would come relief, if there could really be hope for the likes of me.

To all of you who have ever stared in the mirror and hated the face, the body, the memories, or the apathetic indifference toward the one staring back: please, know the answer to the questions you ask when no one is listening, the questions you think people will call you crazy for asking, the answer to those questions is waiting for you. The answers to the self-loathing, the bitterness, the anger, and hate are not found on a psychiatrist's couch or in an anti-depressant and medical diagnosis. It is not waiting for you in a self-help book with motivating titles and inspiring imagery.

The answers to the questions you seek are not found in this flesh but in the Spirit of Truth for we serve The Source of Truth. The Prince of Peace has promised He would give wisdom and understanding to any who would ask for it in His Name. The answer to why you are the way you are is waiting in His Word, in His truth made real to your eyes. Your identity does not need to stay trapped in the body you keep despising, your drug of choice, the number of times you've promised to quit and couldn't, or the Royal Chosen Blood in your veins.

You are not who you were truly made to be, not yet. Each of us – no matter our moment or method of conception – was created with a purpose and for a great reason. We were created to bring meaning to the meaningless, to bring joy to the despairing, and to rise up from our mediocre living and become bold and courageous participants in the redemptive story of Yahweh.

We were not made to be miserable, to have fractured marriages and children who are out of control or depressed. We were not made to be comfortable and complacent but to rush forward into The Enemy's territory and contend for the souls of mankind. Even if we are living in a wheelchair or hospital bed or on oxygen in an assisted care facility, every one of us was made for war, for the saving of sons and daughters from the fires of failure and cyber bullies. We were made to reach into the depths of despair and offer our scar covered or freshly manicured hands to all those who need to know there is still hope.

We were not made to put our light under our cloaks of shame and guilt. We were made to be the lights brilliantly burning in the darkness, pointing to The Way home. We were made to line the Roman roads pierced through on crucifixion stakes, hands raised to the heavens testifying of our great love for The Redeemer. We were made to be a living witness of hope. We were made to confess our sins to the world, our failures, our screw-ups, and our darkest regrets. We were made to be the ones who suffer the scorn of this world for the sake of setting even just one captive free.

Do not hide your hurt any longer. Don't keep your crucifixion a secret because so many of us have been screaming out in quiet desperation our entire lives; we are already burning in agony. We think if we hide our hurt swept under the rugs of shame we can deal with it some other day, but no one gets healed by keeping sickness in the dark. No one can get rescued from their misery without first exposing their wounds to The Light. You must surrender your heart to The Healer and step out onto the roaring waters. Fix your eyes on Messiah, the calmer of waves and the bringer of peace. He is not waiting in the boat of Comfortable Christianity or in the emergent church with their New Apostolic Reformations. The only True Word is not hidden in The Mysteries of The Cosmos, The Kabbalah repackaged as Quantum Gnosticism, or in the worshipping of other lesser Astral gods. The revelations of who Messiah really is are not hidden within the minds of pagans or puritans. Yahweh is looking for those who answer His call to come out of the comforts our civilization and cowardice provide.

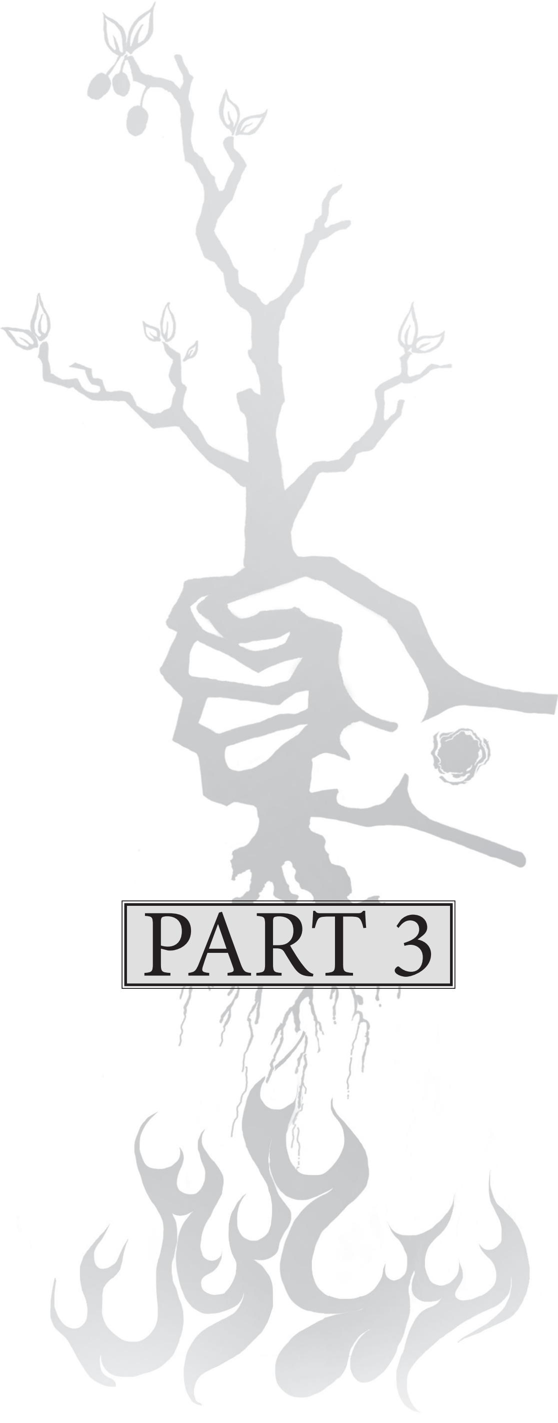
He rescues those who forsake the false safety that boat provides. Hear me, Jesus is waiting on the waters of chaos and fear and will take hold of all who step out in faith and belief. He is waiting in the wind and the waves of pain you've hidden and drowned for the last four decades. He is waiting for you to show who your true master is, so give your fears to Him and put your faith in Him. He alone can heal the cancers of cowardice; He alone can heal the self-hate, the feeling you get when you see your body in the mirror or in pictures posted online. He alone can show you the truth about who you are, the beauty even in your scars. Do not hide your hurt any longer for it will be the death of you. Your hurt can instead become hands, which reach into the pits of pain and pull a suffering slave from the groping fingers of perpetrators.

Do not fear the terror of the night, nor the fiery arrow that flies by day for surely His Word is true. He will shelter you under His just and loving wings. He will enlarge the ground beneath your feet so that you will not stumble. He will prepare a place for you in the presence of your enemies, and you will walk by streams of Living Water. I promise it's true. I have seen it be so.

Trust in Him while there is still time, for He will never let you down. His faithfulness and truth is a shield and buckler I now wear as my own. It extinguishes every fiery missile of The Enemies. Now I am trained to battle with spiritual weapons and wage earthly wars. Where no eye can see, The True Lord's armies fight for you and they fight for me. Praise Him always no matter the cost, be it your head in a vice or a monsters prod. He will redeem it all and use it for good. What they meant for evil Yahweh will redeem for good and the saving of many lives. So chose you then this day who you will serve, whether the gods of your fathers, the worthless traditions of men or the one who rescues orphans and makes them pilgrims of peace, princes of His holy power who walk by faith and not by sight. (Genesis through Revelation)

For decades of my life I was the Guardian of The Left Hand path where my Family chose to make its abode. Now it is time for world to hear The Secrets so many lives were lost to protect.

PART 3



Chapter Thirteen

Family Secrets Revealed

The Underground's Ruling Families like the one I was born into have spent a tremendous amount of time and resources perfecting ways to ensure their secrets are kept. The Secrets as they refer to them are not ever to be shared with those who are born outside of the Chosen Lines. In these secretive upper echelons of society, the preeminent focus and determining factor in one's life is not necessarily from the choices you make but rather who your ancestors are that gave you life. Genealogies and Marital Bloodlines are the most sacred and revered doctrines. One who is born outside of these specific and chosen bloodlines is perceived as something of a sub-species or a 'lesser' being if you will. Often these people are referred to as Goyim, Uninitiated, Outsiders, Useless Eaters or Cattle. The Hebrew word Goyim contains at its root the idea of "the nations" or "those outside." The world is slowly being indoctrinated into this ideology through the revised worship of Muggles, half-breeds, or pure bloods.

This doctrine is heavily reinforced, as the Bloodline Families believe they have The Divine Right to Rule as given to them by their ancestors who were the gods of old. The Nephilim, those offspring prodigies of the fallen angels of Genesis 6:4 who came down in the days of Jared and left their heavenly estate so that they could procreate with the daughters of men (2 Peter, Jude), these fallen Watcher Angels taught humankind forbidden secret knowledge such as sorcery and enchantment, root cutting to produce hallucinatory substances that allowed the user to travel into their realms. Other fallen watchers taught mankind the making of weapons, astrology, make-up beauty masks, sacred geometry, and the communing with spirits through mediums, divination, and meditation as outlined in the biblically endorsed books of Enoch 1, Jasher, and Jubilees. This hidden wisdom or Gnosis was scattered at Nimrod's tower and birthed the mystery religions. The pineal crown of The Rulers over so many of these beliefs is the doctrines of Gnosticism, which is the many-headed hydra of deception.

This mingling of outside entities injected a literal seed of The Dragon into the bloodlines of humankind as prophesized to Adam in the Garden of Eden. (Gen 3:15) This injection of outside genetics led to the corruption of all flesh and to complete and total wickedness before The Father brought The Great Flood to start again. (Gen. 6:1-22, 10:1-10) These Nephilim and their later offspring of The Rephaim, The Anakim and others, carried in their blood a marker of 'the gods or in Hebrew the Elohim' These beings became the gods of mythology like Poseidon, Athena, Hercules, and Thor who once more have gained cult followings. The practice of deifying people into godhood carried on with the pharaohs, kings, and emperor's even presidents, popes and priests whose bloodline could be traced to these Fallen Ones or their progeny.

For thousands of years, these ruling Bloodline Families have carried on the practice of interbreeding, genetic modification, and intermarrying to ensure their "divine purity." At its most debased and realistic level this has lead to the keeping of oaths sworn through incest, murder, and hate.

In recent days the phrase, "The Illuminati," has flooded our culture. This, in fact, refers not just to Adam Weishaupt's 18th century secretive order but the more profound truth abides in The Illumined Bloodlines. By nature, Bloodline Families are not something people can join apart from being born with the blood in their veins. This does not mean Families will not allow goyim to serve within their ranks or even on rare occasions be allowed to intermarry through Sion or the grafting in of an outsider. However, the bringing in of powerful or influential outsiders is done only after an extensive selection and interview process. It then requires contractual agreements more abhorrent then you can imagine.

The Families believe the purer their blue-blood is, the greater their ability to move with power, the force of will and control. For those interested in a more excellent in-depth analysis of this and the end times implications, I highly suggest all people read through the superb series by Dr. Michael Lake starting with The Shinar Directive and The Sheeriyth Imperative (www.kingdomintelligencebriefing.com) As well as Gary Wayne's book The Genesis 6 Conspiracy (www.genesis6conspiracy.com.). Another excellent resource for research is the published works of Johnny Cirucci's in The Illuminati Unmasked, Secret History, and Eaters of Children The Pedocracy Exposed. (www.johnnycirucci.com). I also can't recommend enough the work of Dr. Stephen Pidgeon both on his blog, videos at www.cepher.net.

These dynastic Families have perfected the art of hiding in plain site, such as those of the Rex Deus or The Dragon Bloodlines of Europe like the Scythians or the Lees of China. In doing this they have passed on not only what they believe to be The Divine Seed but also The Secrets and hidden wisdom only to the initiates they believe are worthy to receive it. My Family and the ancestors of my bloodlines selected specific individuals within their own Families to carry The Secrets or to be Guardians who ensure The Secrets are protected at all cost. They are the ones who "Keep Houses" and ensure The Dynasty and Estate is well maintained. This was my main function for the Brotherhoods of Illuminists like the Masons and Mormons. Furthermore The Jesuits and Serpent Cults chose to contract out many of my 'services' leading to the black projects groups within the military.

As a child, I was made to partake as a spiritual conduit in the darkest of rituals where these divine Familial exchanges, contracts, and communications were conceived and conspired. While I grew, the use of my blade outpaced my childish bodies usefulness during rituals, and thus I was transferred into The Underworld of killing, torture, and control. I was made to "Keep The Secrets" for nearly three decades of my life. I was born into the darkness of secrecy, threats, and blackmail. I was raised in a world where Black Dragons give orders and Assets dance like marionettes. The place where corporations controlling The Colony's of The British Empire mingle with professional compromisers like the Special Executive Services Programs to build and control military's and nations across the earth.

There was a time I was seduced by its glamor, by its illustrious appeals but once you have been served up as 'dessert' for the pedophilic desires of State visiting dignitaries you can't stand to lust for their power or status. I have come to hate evil and, instead, I choose to come to the light and let all mankind see my deeds. The hard truth is that most fear the Enemy but I cannot and will not live another day in silence, and it is time to expose their works of darkness. (John 3:19-21)

It is time all people can learn the truth of how these kingdoms operate and how these families can control so many individuals. They have three primary methods with which they enforce and enact their will on this earth.

Chapter Fourteen

The Three Methods of Control

The First Method is Fear

Fear is the primary tool used to manipulate and control individuals both within the Bloodline Families and those who abide outside the chosen genealogies. I do not have to give you a crash course on fear as I am sure some of you were terrified just to read this book or hear someone even talk about Luciferianism or ritual abuse. Every individual who has ever sought out the truth has inevitably run into the most potent tools of The Families. As you drive closer to understanding the reality of our fallen world, you too will experience this fear. This world is designed to control your emotions, be they lust, greed, envy, or hatred but the one it seeks to invoke most readily is our fears.

There are so many fears that control us and fuel The Kingdom of The Rulers of Darkness; fears of being rejected, fears of death, fears of people's opinion or running out of money, contracting Alzheimer's or cancer before we die. Remember though: perfect love casts out fear. It was the perfect love of The Great Redeemer that drove Him to overcome the temptations in the desert with the Word of God and the impossible anguish He experienced in the Garden of Gethsemane. The Kingdom of Heaven is powered by the limitless source code of life itself, The Holiness of Yahweh. His perfect set apart nature is the essence of His Kingdom's power, and that is where Messiah drew His strength and so too must we.

The Second Method is Guilt

There is no easy way to say it. The Adversary often called The Satan earns his title through the relentless beguiling of the hearts and minds of humanity that they are guilty and for no matter what it may be, lying, cheating, stealing, or murder. Sometimes the accusations are true, other times they are not. He is not afraid of quoting the Word of God nor are his servants averse to using it as well. Instead, they like their father are experts with the serpents forked tongue of godly truth interlaced with subtle lies. He has taught his servants the mastery of this tactic. It is used as a point of leverage so that a lesser opponent can control the one who is stronger. It is a lever placed on our hearts to steer us in the direction of the accuser's choosing.

Within The Families, Brotherhoods, and elite circles, there is a tremendous amount of effort placed in compromising individuals whether it is through sex, bribes, drugs, pedophilia, or blackmail. If ever someone who'd been compromised steps outside of their chosen position, this lever is placed, and pressure is applied. All too often this is where the internal wars are waged. These are the battles where people decide to stay in The Underworld rather than expose their deeds to the light of redemption.

One East Coast bishop used to teach us,

"People are straightforward to control. Everybody has a price; if they've not agreed to your terms, you must offer them more. If finding their price doesn't work, find their vice. Find the little chink in their armor and learn to control it. Then it's as a simple as a bridle in a horse's mouth: with just the smallest pressure they will move where you tell them."

The Third Method is Shame

Shame is the power to bind. The constriction around our gifts, talents and calling for our lives is always shame. Self-condemnation for the things we've done, failed to do, or failed to prevent from happening. Shame rules in the darkness of our hearts and ensures we do not step out and speak the truth, confess our deeds to one another, and find the healing He had for us. It prevents us from walking in the freedom, authority or anointing of The Messiah. The cure to shame comes when we surrender, stretch out our hands, and grab hold of The Great Physician.

The woman The Adversary had bound for 18 years with a bleeding disorder was not loosed by spending all her money on The Oath swearing doctors and physicians of her world, or by hiding in the shadows of shame. She was loosed from her bondage the day she boldly stepped into the light of day and grabbed onto the Tzitzis of Jesus, the tassels where His Healing was waiting. Those tassels were outward signs of the covenant Yahweh had with His people promising blessings if they obeyed His Instructions. (Num. 15:37-39) The power filled grace of the Redeemer for His obedience flowed into the shame-bound woman and loosed her from that devilish binding and gave her healing instead. (Mark 5:25-34) The Enemy was defeated when she stepped out of her secrets and reached out in faith. It is time I do the same.

What I am going to share with you now are some of The Secrets my Family has guarded for generations. It is sacred knowledge they protect with magically charged curses, rings lords of power, and sharpened assassins steel. It is the bloody cornerstones upon which their empires are built.

Just as in the days of Pre-Flood Cyclopean Masonry modern Families must start their empire by building their walls with the backs, bones and blood of their children. Those who walk in this needlessly glamorized and spiritually sexualized Underworld give their children up to be turned into slaves. The creation of those slaves is sophisticated, sadistic, and systemic.

Long gone are the days of experimentation and guesswork. No, these families like so many of the Nazi scientists brought over after WWII in Operation Paperclip like Mengele, Rudolph, and Schreiber have taken their dark sciences to the bodies and souls of the young and innocent. The Families are not seeking traditional slaves with chains and shackles. Instead, they create slaves who love their servitude and are loyal to the point of death to their "masters." Those who are born into this world are quickly and decisively passed through the black fires of madness until they submit to their new masters.

But this begs the question. How do you create willing slaves? The method to their madness is not pretty. After The Family selects a child often long before their birth, they are intentionally abused, traumatized, and defiled until they dissociate or fracture their soul. No normal person can survive the types of abuse and trauma, which are inflicted. They cannot fight back or overpower their abusers physically, so the fight reflex is left incapacitated, and the flight reflex takes over. The need to escape the torment becomes insatiable. It consumes the mind until a solution is offered: run away internally, run inside the mind and allow anything else to endure.

I often refer to the individual programmers who are doing the splitting as "Brutes." They will watch the child, waiting to see them give in to the Fade, to the pressure of separating themselves within through dissociation. The sign of this can be the eyes rolling back out of consciousness, heads turning purple as the pressure of blood rushes to the brain or blank, absent stares, and glazed-over dilated pupils. My R.A.W. programmers earned their name in the way they had of describing their trade:

"Its like splitting a big log – the first time it splits, it takes the most amount of brute force, then as the pieces get smaller, it takes less and less to cause the breaks and fractures."

By patterning the physical and psychological aspects of the brain to split and section off areas of the trauma they can create new "blank slates" of personalities. These are pieces of a person's mind, which can be small or large, named most often by the specific function they perform, such as Driver, Runner, Cat, or Guardian. They can be entirely new personalities or ones who used to hold particular secrets or different genders or spiritual beliefs, which are then buried away.

These sub-personalities can be immediately bonded to the abuser or a handler of their choosing. You often see this similar training in high-level combat and guard dogs, whose submission to the pack leader can be moved to new handlers based on certain programmed and reinforced commands. They are not limited to audio controls; they can be sequenced colors of everyday items, squeezes of specific pressure points on the body, hand gestures or objects like symbolic laced rings or necklaces.

After the blank slate personalities have been prepared, the victim can be made ready for the next step. Once a person has been made to dissociate and split their soul when under distress, that pattern or survival mechanism will continue throughout their life. This is why there is so much emphasis on abusing children at an early age.

The Family would explain it by telling a story.

"It's just like breaking an elephant. You cannot break a bull elephant who has lived his whole life in the wild. He knows the power he possesses, he knows the way to destroy his enemies or break out of bonds. Instead, you start when they are young and weak. Simply attach one of their legs to a secured stake in the ground and watch them wail and pull and strain to be free. Soon enough the young elephant will realize he can never escape his shackles. Once their will is broken, it will never try to be free again. You can tie a threaded string around a fully-grown bull elephant and stake it with a plastic peg to the ground, and it will never leave the place you put it. It's the same with the children: break them young, and you can own their bodies, and souls; their mind, wills, and emotions become yours for life."

Learned Helplessness is a powerful tool in controlling victims even long after their perpetrators or handlers are dead or powerless.

My grandpa Brute liked to use near drowning, electricity, or asphyxiation to cause me to dissociate. Upon coming back to consciousness, I believed he had saved my life, and so I loved him all the more and would do whatever he asked. It is genuine and literal mind control. It doesn't always have to look like electrodes in the brain and flashing lights. Once they've got their blank slate, they can 'handle' the person to do their will quite easily. Imagine how easy it is for an above average IQ adult to manipulate an extremely traumatized four-year-old who'd just endured physical abuse or witnessed the emotional destruction of their cousin. These new personalities are commonly in a similar state of vulnerability upon their creation and later healings.

These personalities are stored in their own compartmentalized spaces within the mind. Neurologists call the physical areas of the brain where these new personalities reside, Trauma Neural Networks. This is most publically noticeable in individuals who suffer an extreme trauma such as soldiers in combat or survivors of domestic and sexual abuse. These Trauma Pockets are places where the neurons, which were most activated during the traumatic event essentially, lock up and section themselves off from the remainder of the mind so that the rest of the brain can continue to function.

The internal representation of this can look and sound somewhat startling to those who've never had to dissociate to survive. Depending on the level of trauma and dissociation, individuals can and often do create entire inner worlds in which their personalities, parts, or fragments of memories live. On the inside of the mind, it usually will look like rooms, prison cells, houses, or even castles. Brutes and programmers use guided hypnotic imagery to craft these inner worlds. An example would be, "Picture the thousands of neural pathways of your brain and imagine how each one could be a hotel space in a city. Now send the new personality to room number 42," etc.... The territory of the mind is not capped by the space in our body; it is left only to the imagination or the specific programmer of the individual to guide and create.

The intentional creation of multiple personalities, programming, and mind control is not science fiction as the reports of truth-seeking conspiracy theorists proved correct. Even a cursory study of the subject will reveal millions of peer-reviewed articles, books, documentaries, and an understanding that The United States government alone has spent hundreds of billions in the past and now many trillions in search of, implementation and refinement of the "super spy." A spy that even under the worst kinds of torture or manipulation will not reveal their secrets because the personality enduring the pain has no memory of what they are. Thus the mind is able to separate from the body to endure the soul crushing destruction of their body passing through the fingers of monsters.

U.S. Government Projects like MK Ultra, Artichoke, Bluebird, Monarch, Montauk- which is the true story of Stranger Things, and thousands of others have been exposed and victims who endured this have been paid out millions of dollars by our government in restitution for this rampant human experimentation carried out on their "pet projects." The U.S. is not alone in their quest: Manchurian Candidates, dozens of other major countries like Great Britain, Australia, Russia, China, Japan, and Canada. Both allies and enemies of our government and seats of religious power like The Roman Catholic Church, and incalculable Fraternal Orders have shattered the minds of millions of their citizens, patriots and pedophiles alike.

The Bloodline Families and practitioners of the higher-level initiated mystery religions and cults have been engaging in this practice long before the Nazi scientists brought over during Operation Paperclip taught our American scientists this secret science learned and perfected in their concentration camps. Those camps where millions became a Holocaust or in English a Burnt Sacrifice. This is why Hitler ordered The Hex Star of Asherah and Ishtar to mark the victims for burning in the ovens of ritualistic slaughter.

My grandfather had a particular knack for shattering the mind quickly along with programming and as such was entrusted with other “Chosen” children besides me. It is a Trade passed on from master to apprentice in their craft. A craft, which had many of its modern and oldest roots in the Jesuits, Gnostics, and the arms of the Roman Catholic church, whose accumulation of intelligence, mystical artifacts, manuscripts, as well ancient knowledge, supersedes all others since Nimrod’s reign. Many Illumined Bloodline Families, even those who in no way are practitioners of Catholicism, still turn to the Roman Order’s Brutes to do this work as they have honed this despicable Trade to its sharpest edge.

The Families do this because– unlike so many out there – they treat their children with respect insofar as they know how powerful and capable they are of extraordinary things at even young ages. While we dump our kids in overcrowded day-care and shove them in front of Family Owned television programming for hundreds of hours of their adolescent development via tablets, televisions, or toxic blue-light screens, The Families ‘invest’ in their children, honing them to razors edges before most are trying to teach their kids how to spell or count with fallacious Common Core Math. The Illumined Ones teach their children how to think critically to use grammar, logic, and rhetoric to come up with solutions to problems, instead of becoming part of the problem.

Families believe each child has the potential to express specific powers, gifting's or talents. The Family members wait for the manifestations of a generational spirit, one of their ancestor's spirits or the spirits of the gods to be imbued into their children. Thus a "familiar spirit" a "Muse," a trickster, or other family spirit was passed on to specific chosen children.

The word Genius is a modern expression of this belief. The Jinn or genie's are the Middle Eastern equivalent of the ascended ancient ones, the demons who would possess vessels both people or objects. The Genius in a Family is one who is possessed by the Familiar or Generational Spirit of the Ancestors and thus is the chosen one. The chosen one will often then become through manipulative rituals, oath, and pledge for ownership an open spiritual conduit for one or many of the cursed restless spirits of the dead.

Each Family as with the confusion at Babel may hold different denominational beliefs as to how some of the Mysteries and Secrets are interpreted. As such literal billion and trillion dollar battles are fought, some with knives and bullets, but most are in the board and courtroom, to prove which Families method is the most profitable, productive or perverted. Thus determining their ranking on the ever-illumined pyramid of power.

The entirety of their Familial reigns and purpose become ensnared in a dog eat dog game of musical chairs. The way to the top is determined by who can breed the best wolves, dogs, goats, cats or sheep. However a spot at the top is reserved for The Family who produces the final incarnation of The Rebel King.

Many in my Reynolds, Keenan, Hamilton, Sutherland, White, and Du Pont Family chose The Left Hand Path of the Fallen Serpent. They are blood bound with the Familiar spirits of Apollo, Death, Eros, Destruction, and The Queen of Heaven to posses and reign through their bloodline children. The prize at the end of their map is what The Families are hiding in plain site.

Other Families like The Royals in South Africa, The Bloodlines of The Reich or The Kings of Assyria and Emperors of The East use and employ different methods, spirits and tactics to compete for the creation of the ultimate hybrid of god and man. This story is one, which has been repeated over and over for millennia through the Muses. Maybe this should give you a pause to discern by which spirit was the Music conceived. Remember, the Museum was furnished and crafted to influence and control the narrative stories, histories and propaganda.

It's in the open source stories like the quest for the grail, the spear of destiny, King Arthur, Avatar, Dr. Strange or the one particle collider ring lord to rule them all, and many more, which subtly whisper these serpentine mysteries to the both the goyim and the illumined alike. These crafty seductive lies keep scales over the eyes of the world. In their united deception they will demand and declare The Fallen Ones those Nephilim and gods of old to return and rule over them as in the days before The Great Deluge of Noah. And the gods those rebellious Elohim and their prodigy will once again walk openly among us. Over this fallen divine council of gods will be one of purest blood who rules them.

They are all on an immortals quest to find and establish the perfect anti-messiah who will reign supremely on this earth for a season. He who will carry the spirit of Rebel, his name is Apollo the king over those fallen spirits of the abyss. He will be The Dragon of Old's spiritual yet carnal son on this earth to counterfeit The Only Eternal and Living Resurrected God King Yeshua The Messiah.

The biggest lie of it all is not that humans believe these things to be true or false but rather all this confusion, keeps people from worshiping and serving The Creator of The Heavens and The Earth. He is The Creator of The Immortals and all other Elohim. The God Above gods YHVH Yahweh Elohim, it is His good will and His purpose we all were made to fulfill not just our own. We were not made to be bound by any lying spirit we were seduced by.

Being born in The Families is designed to set you apart or consecrate you to be made into The Image of The Beast. Instead of as each of you were truly created to be, which is set apart or holy dedicated for The Great Redeemers purpose and calling. He alone can redeem those of us dedicated to be bricks of rebellion instead of prophets of deliverance, forgiveness, truth and peace.

I assure you all of this, no matter what you may have been bred and born to do, there is nothing, which can keep you from receiving His perfect Holy Spirit of Truth, if you so choose. Yahweh is not like the other gods or spirits. He will not ever force His children or people to do His will. He allows each and every one of us to choose to serve the gods of this world or Him alone for He is the only one who is truly set-apart and perfect. The extraordinary and absolutely true story of His Kingdom is written plainly so you can study, learn and test for yourself if His Word is true.

May the words of my testimony now reveal to you my journey which led me into absolute faith no longer in my Familiar spirits, oaths of secrecy, or storehouses of treasures, but instead into a life of pure and undefiled purpose and peace. If He can redeem The Secrets and Talents as ferocious as the ones I am about to share then surely He will do it to all who truly seek Him. He who begins a work in us will be faithful to see it through to its completion.

Chapter Fifteen

The Trade

My talent was discovered before I knew how to write. My mother had taken me to the library to check out some books. She had let me check out a VHS tape on karate. The film opened with a man demonstrating many of the more advanced blocks, strikes, and throws. Later that night when my dad came home, he started to wrestle with me, as he was so fond to do. When he came towards me, I replicated the throw I'd seen the man do on the tape. I grabbed his dominant hand twisting it and in a fluid motion pulled him over my body while throwing my hips and legs towards his knees and flipped him over my shoulder and onto our floor.

My talent had first been expressed and it helped me to mimic behaviors I saw even if it was the first time I'd seen them. This gift could have been cultivated for beneficial things; it could have allowed me to become anything I was passionate about or Yahweh wanted me to do. But once my first gifting had been discovered, The Family had their lusts and ledgers to satisfy.

This ability was to be groomed and cultivated to become a talent for them. Just before my first year in grade school, I was taken back to my Knighted grandpa's, and with the priest's hands placed over mine, I was made to end a mans life for the first time. The cost for me was a shattered soul but the prize for The Brotherhood was a new seat of power. The Knight advanced a degree, then later became a frequent Times magazine cover stable, a governor and war hero to the deceived. Perhaps a character was built around him who shall not be named; the one who proudly armed rebels and over threw our own puppet regimes in The Middle East. The one who partners with The Families whose Senior Executive Services built them a Presidential infestation force of coercion, compromise, and control. Who built a league with The Family members of hiding in plain site on C Street architecting and orchestrating fellowships with Death.

The devastation of my first kill shattered my soul and into that space came with it a seemingly beautiful yet vexingly lurid entity, which never needs to be named. He became a familiar spirit of death, rage, and murder who helped me do the worst of deeds. My shedding of blood after Family killings were through fueled his spiritual power and in turn, he empowered my ability to enact more violence, lust, destruction, sin, cursing, and death. The manipulated contractual agreement is the true origin story of a virus with its host; it devoured my life while it made me a full time producer for death.

These are the darkest of Secrets that so few are willing to share. The truth is you do not make super soldiers, assassins or spies without the aid of The Kingdom of Darkness. This does not mean programmers, participants, or victims are always aware that the powers being funneled into their personalities are demonic. This is because unlike the Hollywood version of spiritual warfare, demonic entities in reality masquerade as something else. The shape-shifting quality of deceitful ones enables them to take on various forms to deceive, manipulate and control their targets.

For example, in the heights of my abuse and pain, The Brutes would have me call out to a specific 'power' to save me, which was often an angel of light or being of seduction or enormous intellect and strength. They would read incantations and ancient oaths over us as the abuse occurred. I would make an agreement with the manifested spirit, the force, or feeling to have permission to come into me and equip me with strength to overpower my enemies or no longer feel pain. This occult knowledge is what The Order, my grandfather and his ‘brothers’ were armed with. The method of fracturing, programming and demonizing he used on me proved to be a tremendous success. Success as defined by kills, blackmail tapes of pedophilic rape, and un-detected infiltrations, exfiltration’s and theft.

This success led him along with other close Family members to put together a training program on how children can be made stronger and more lethal if you demonically charge their personalities and make them killers of the first class kind. The premise was not to wait until they could develop physical capabilities to achieve their goals but instead to start immediately imbuing them with spiritual powers to enable greater works at early ages.

They believed the younger the child, the better because the spiritual powers released in a child were not dependent on their physical size but the strength of their will. Many of The Orders and Gnostic Religions believe that The Will is the true Force, which can manifest physical power and actions from internal sources. The training program my grandfather helped create was sold to other Families, Lodges, and international governing bodies, earning them a tremendous increase. The cultivation of such chosen ones is chronicled and documented in Russ Dizdar’s book The Black Awakening: The Rise of Satanic Super Soldier’s and Expelling The Darkness.

After the splitting of my soul and the charging of those personalities, I found shape shifting power abiding within which could be unleashed with furious force. How and in what ways it was unleashed was entirely controlled, just like a combat dog can be trained to allow its master to safely pet it but when given a command, it will tear apart the nerve clusters and arteries of its targets.

It was these newfound pieces of my broken mind that were sharpened into a Blade. That Blade took on its own identity and soon they taught me how to channel the hatred of my abusers, the rage, and the desire for vengeance into the edge of a knife, a strangulation cord, fragmenting bullet or poisoned syringe. They manipulated my misery and pain and forced me to prove my worth to The Family by learning the ways of death.

I was taught and initiated by many masters how to cut a body so the blood would leak out slowly, quickly, or bring death in seven seconds or less. I was taught by other chiefs and big medicine men to skin and shadow walk, later came the ways to walk on leaves without making noise. Later still came the commanders and instructors who made me capable of not leaving a trace of my presence even down to my DNA at the scene of targeted eliminations.

Because of this I was forced into The Underground world where blackmail and death threats are strictly enforced. The Family was proud of their child killers. They could profit tremendously from the snuff films and their little murderers for hire.

After all, they liked to remind people that children fit in places adults just can't. They are so easily overlooked and passed over, never considered to be a threat. Who would think a nine-year-old boy could instantaneously overpower a fully-grown bodyguard? With the right kind of training and spirits present, it can be done quite easily.

Ask someone who has spent time in the trenches of a locked residential mental health center for disturbed children if they've ever seen grown men thrown around like ragdolls by young kids? I witnessed it with my eyes dozens of times while working at just such a facility. I watched five grown men be lifted off the ground by an eight-year-old girl whose eyes changed color while lying on her back in a “quiet room” during a restraint.

Other times I’ve seen ten-year-old boys outrun fit college-age students at the height of their athleticism. Even the center’s atheistic and scientifically religious psychiatrists, case managers, and supervisors had a special name for them: they called them “Runners.” Once a Runner took off, they could hardly if ever be caught.

For some reason I did not understand openly at the time, I could always catch them. I could throw a switch in my brain and bring my Runner and race past every other staff member and catch up to them all. There was never a shift I worked at that facility where a Runner escaped. It does not always take something supernatural to do it; sometimes just the shutting off of your need to not strain a muscle or the fears of what would happen if you ran full speed onto a busy six-lane road can also work. Running is essential when it comes to The Trade or work The Families do. Sometimes paying clients or red light guests get too abusive or too close to someone who might help get them out.

The Family realized they could convince me to kill anyone for them so long as I believed they were a pedophile, Brute, a trafficker of children, or someone who covered up these types of crimes. While I grew in my skills and abilities, my parents were quick to cover the visible signs of my abuse and trauma by moving me from school to school. Between 2nd and 3rd grade alone they had me change schools four times. It was this pattern of hiding the evidence and destabilization of his Chosen one that my father was so good at. All the while broadening and deepening The Reynolds Southwestern tendrils of blackmail and manipulative control. Too many "Little Black Books" and "Compromising Files" were built by selling off my body, blades or blood, and these became powerful tools The Family used for significant gain.

If a teacher at school started asking too many questions about why my handwriting would change so drastically as I switched from one personality to another or about the bruises or uncontrollable vomiting sessions, I would be forced into a new school. Worse still were when I'd grown too close to a friend or their family who might make me feel safe, loved, and understood, the rug would be pulled out from under and away we would go.

Certain aspects of my Family's approach are different than others. I can't sit here and try to claim I know how all of The Underworld operates; all I can tell is The Secrets I was raised with and taught. Some Families give their children all the training for their gifting, yet they do not "let them loose" until a much later date. The Disney's and their Mickey Mouse boys and girls turned into objects of lust are internationally renowned for it.

Some are given all the pleasures and luxuries money can buy, while others starve their children continually, lavishing plenty on The Family around them but keeping them caged like a lion in a pit waiting for his prey. This is why some Families raise their children on Familial maintained estates while others are sent to the suburbs, subways, and trailer parks.

My role in The Family necessitated mediocrity. Chosen ones, especially Guardians and assassins are not allowed to stand out, and so I was made to be mediocre. They are made to be chameleons able to look like their environments and become what their prey believed, wanted, and expected to see. Within this path there is no exceptionalism allowed as it brings unwanted attention. My Family took The Trade seriously, and they knew that the best way to climb the pyramid to influence, power, and wealth was to offer up their "pet project." My blood, body, blade, and blackmail records were the currency of bricks my Family used to build its tower of rebellion. Once my bodily skills, talents and usefulness were uncontrollable, they moved on to the next generation.

There is only so much a mind can endure, and the traumas my body had experienced had left their marks. There is a saying proven correct, “Killing always leaves a mark.” The first murderer of man, Cain, can attest to being cursed with such a burden. He was the first to bear the mark of death. Now I too was made to carry this mark.

Too many of the traumas were invisible and after my East Coast Elite grandfather, a former President over The American Society of Civil Engineers, who my dad had moved in with us, died, it left me without an identity as his “property.” I grew overwhelmed with sorrow to the point of death. I could not bear the sadness and did not know why I hurt so badly inside. To have a physical expression of the internal pain, I turned to self-mutilation, pornography, alcohol, and any other “Family allowed” substance that would alter my mind.

It was how I survived the torment at night or the bullying at the latest Family funded private Christian school I attended. It was a mad world, and I thought if I could just get away from my Family, I could have a better future. This was soon to be what I was offered: a well-prepared treat for my eyes, which promised honor, awards, and accolades, but they would instead leave me with dozens of more bodies and burdens of guilt stacked at my master’s feet.

Chapter Sixteen

Blood Makes the Green Grasses Grow

Though the work I did for The Families and The Brotherhoods was in the shadows, I would soon be funneled into a world where trained killers are made to be heroes or hated by the nations at large. By the time I turned 17, I was so thoroughly entrenched in the depths of darkness that there was only a vapor of hope still in my chest. I had been making the rounds through The Underworld, and some black budget Groups had become an active purchaser of my services. However they did not want a pet project who was handled solely by The Order so they brokered a deal to buy and then openly recruit me into their forces.

Just after turning 17 years-old, and while still a Junior in High School, I was emancipated to The United States Army and pressed into one of their Projects for Chosen Ones. The military has high regard and actively recruits through many Finders Programs for individuals with dissociative identity disorder and fully enhanced alternate personalities. They know how effective these chameleons can be in "non-permissive environments," or countries and regions we are not publically operating in. They are trained and sent out to be shadow soldiers in these black budget wars, which are funded and paid for by the seedier sides of human and narcotic trafficking. In no uncertain terms, I became one of these shadowed operations soldiers.

[redacted]

Operating under blurred interpretations of charters and unofficial sanctions, Special Access Programs both acknowledged and unacknowledged became my abode. It was into this world where the tattered pieces of my programming and murderous life would unravel. It was here that The Messiah would radically intervene and snatch this burning stick from the flames of death.

Chapter Seventeen

A Step into Family Central

A year after becoming one of Ft. Knox's Professionals, I was sent off to my advanced individual training nestled not too far from Alexandria, Norfolk, Richmond and D.C. weeks before any other soldiers would arrive, to ensure my commanding officer had plenty of time to "work" with me.

In their greed for control, my military handlers attempted to combine different portions of my personality. A project often referred to as "selective integration," it is their way of reforming or patterning once split personalities back together. They did not go about it with Brute force as The Families did but rather with advanced technologies and equipment. What they do is meddling with the body soul, and it is dangerous to do. I do not believe there is any way to return the mind to become "a whole soul" without the working of the Holy Spirit and surrendering to The Great Physician.

The programmers who do this work do so under the influence of another spirit. As they shoved these personalities together, I underwent tremendous amounts of pain, nosebleeds, nausea, and blackouts. Alone in those barracks, I fractured along their scored lines and then was stitched together with Soldiers' personalities as well as Blade. The combination of these inner parts was crafted and woven into a new primary personality.

After the endless cycle of torment, training, and fieldwork were winding down, I was given a new identity, a new name. Two dog tags were given to me, and I became another man whose identity had been created long ago. I would from that day forward go by Jason. Fair warning now to the other so called J.A.S.O.N.S those quests for the Golden Fleece will not bring you redemption, restoration, and relief He alone can.

State Craft and Fieldwork tested me to my limits, and I soon realized that so many of the targets I was sent after were just like the ones my Family had sent me to eradicate. They were in many ways monsters, but they were just pawns. They were the surface level bait to keep the inner kings, queens, CEO's, cardinals, and bishops safe. Time after time they would send me out, and I would return with their black books, harvested DNA, or whatever else my handlers wanted.

I had more autonomy within my Trade but I was becoming an Alpha wolf let out on a walk, my "master" holding his pistol ready should I ever turn their way. The dangers of letting the wolf out of his cage can cost much more than a life. The days would come when I would turn on them all and seek the dismantling of their empires of soil stained red from the blood of their victims.

While the weeks dragged on, I began to have my thoughts crowd out the programming. The more they worked me over, the deeper access I had to memories once separated from me. I began to experience bleed over or flooding, much like individuals with PTSD will have intrusive thoughts and flashbacks. These personalities carried with them memories of things my core personality had not known. I began to realize how many times my handlers had lied to me, and so often the targets they selected were not my abusers, pedophiles, or traffickers but rather grudges, contract work, and ways to climb the pyramid of power. Black Dragons and those intelligence groups of old have insatiable appetites no man on fire can satisfy. I soon saw the truth that I'd been blind to for so many years of my life.

Within 18 months of my public enlistment, the tattered pieces of my patch quilt soul would unravel. I began to do the unthinkable. I started to remember. I began to think for myself, and I chose to disobey a master's commands. The dangers of having an asset out of direct control are tremendous, so a decision was made.

Before they programmed me to end my own life, my dad made a wager against his only son. Ever eager to add to his bloody empire, my dad made sure to have me change my mother from the sole proprietor to my militaries half-million-dollar life insurance policy to himself. Just a few months later, I would be shot and stabbed multiple times, bleeding to death on the patio of one of their many houses. I would stare out over the cold mountain valley and watch my all too Familiar spirit come to harvest my perishing soul.

Chapter Eighteen

Between Death and Life

The military had a consistent way of dealing with failed Pet Projects. That summer after my senior year in high school, I underwent a complete shutdown of my mind. I was no longer suitable to achieve their orders, so instead, I was washed out. I spent the next few months in and out of the various "specialists." They were Family Initiated neurologists and technicians who began to wipe out the work I'd been doing for them, ensuring I would self-destruct. To be sure there would be no loose ends, I was under no circumstances supposed to survive what would come next. The Secrets in my head and work I'd done could shake some of the pillars of power that ran deep into the heart of this nation's capital, Little Rome on the Potomac, The Greater Harlot in Vatican City, and the Lords of London.

I first saw an Air Force neurologist as I had been referred to him even though this was in no way per Army regulations. I had spent extensive time in my teenage years "working" within SAP's with the Air Force and commanders at N.O.R.A.D, and as such, they knew my inner mind best. At The Academy I met with this particular neurologist and his specialized machines; he programmed me with a need to stage a break in home robbery where I would shoot and stab myself. Within The Trade, this type of programming being activated is referred to as Omega.

Much of the internal programming systems personalities are based on the Greek Alphabet: Alpha, Beta, Gamma, and Delta, etc. For example Beta, also called Cat, or Kitten programming, is a seducer and sex slave personality. Delta programming is advanced militaristic, infiltration, exfiltration, and assassin training program. This program is mirrored within Joint Special Operations Command as an entire branch within our elite operators. Active or former Delta Force or CAG operators are regularly brought in as training consultants when Delta programming is being conducted.

Omega being the end of the alphabet entails the programmed self-destruction of an asset. It is hallmarked and often seen after mind controlled individuals almost always under the direct handling of a military or defense contractor are staged to go on a shooting rampage, but afterwards become completely committed to self-destruction unto total suicide. Their mission completed, they are to eliminate themselves and any potential Blowback. Operators in the field are given specially crafted cocktails buried beneath the skin, implanted within teeth, or injected into veins to ensure this occurs.

The activation of my Omega firmly implanted, the doctor sent me out with a note in one hand and a paper bag full of heavy medications, and I went back to school. Within two weeks, all the fail-safes of coping and control I had established over the years dissolved as the medications and programming fractured what little sanity was left in my mind. The usual student binge drinking back at college was not helping and I went to see an Army Neurologist. She was a light Colonel who oversaw just such a carnal house of suicides for used up Company or Military assets. She added to my madness with more mind-altering medications and her re-enforcement of the break-in.

The cocktail of drugs I was put on combined with the drinking drove me off the deep end of reality and into the blurred world of madness. In my chaos, those thoughts were perpetually whispered into my mind, and I became obsessed with the idea.

I lied to my parents who were going to celebrate Thanksgiving with Grandpa Brute down in the deserts of Death, by saying I had training and could not join them. Instead, while they were gone, I threw a party in my parent's house and many drank all night until one by one they all left. I woke up, took my handfuls of pills as prescribed, then preceded ever so carefully to clean the house. Just as the psychotropic medications took full effect, I procedurally watched my body go through the very motions of murder.

I watched as I walked upstairs and picked up a fighting knife and put it in my pocket. I watched as I got my bolt-action rifle out of its carrying case. I loaded a single round into its chamber, slammed the bolt home, and carried it downstairs. I then walked out onto my parent's basement patio, picked up the biggest rock I could find, and tried to smash the back window out of the door. After five massive hits, the glass refused to even crack. Stumped but not defeated, I walked back into the basement, grabbed the rifle, and sat down on the carpet. Then I shoved the muzzle against the meat of my leg, switching the safety off, exhaled and pressed the trigger.

The silence of the morning shattered as the rifle bucked in my hands; instantly I felt an explosion tear into my thigh. As the smell of burning gunpowder met my nostrils, the pain erupted into my mind.

When you fire a bullet out of a gun, all that is happening is a cloud of superheated gasses are pushing a piece of lead and copper out of a grooved steel tube. This wall of expanding gasses diffuses typically into the air just outside the barrel, resulting in a fireball. However, when you place something directly against the end of that same barrel, those gasses have nowhere to go except into whatever is in their way. The expanding gasses found themselves erupting into the flesh of my thigh, expanding inside the muscle, tendons and flesh of my leg and searing my skin leaving a "star stamp" burn. As I thought about the distant pain, I could not help but think of the vivid color of my blue jeans and the smoke rolling out of the fresh hole in my leg. Then I went back into watching as my body took over.

I racked the bolt on my rifle, pocketed the brass, and looking at my thigh, I placed my pinky and index finger deep inside the bleeding holes on either side of my leg. I pressed into the flesh until blood was no longer gushing out. I picked up the rifle and walked up multiple flights of stairs, cleaned my rifle, after returning it to its case, and disposed of the brass shell casing by flushing it down the upper floor toilet. Walking back downstairs, I stood in front of our computer desk where I pulled the fighting knife out my pocket and plunged it multiple times into my stomach.

The blood came slowly at first as I had pressed my hand so tightly against the seeping wounds. Standing on the patio outside the basement I looked down at my shaking hands. With coaxing, I peeled them off my stomach, and the hot red life gushed out of my body seemingly burning my bare feet. While the blood pooled upon the ground, he came. Death, that cursed spirit I'd been enslaved to, came for me.

Death came to harvest my soul on the concrete patio of my parent's basement. But I was not alone on that patio because the truth is that I was never alone. Even in the grips of my madness and murder, I was never alone.

As I watched The Family spirit come to harvest my soul, I witnessed The Angel of Yahweh appear and stand between Death and me. He never turned to me, but I saw fear in Death's eyes for the first time in my life. I heard The Most High's authority speak and the words He spoke purchased my surrender.

With the fullness of authority, He said,

"He is mine; you can't have him."

There was no cosmic battle and there was no bloody war; it was The King of Kings commanding a defeated foe to submit. The Living God wrenched my programmed mind out of its death code and gave me life. The sanity that had been stripped from me returned for a moment, and I heard,

"Nathan, you are going to die; call 911."

Though I had been programmed to die and to leave my Family with a more significant inheritance, God my real Father was not willing that I should perish. Instead, He helped me survive Death's dealings that day. Because of His intervention, I was able to slow the bleeding enough to endure the nearly 30 minute "slow roll" response time of the paramedics. I had to be flown in a medical helicopter out of the mountain pass where my parents lived and down to the hospital where I was stabilized and later that week released.

On my way through this whole ordeal, I maintained the lie that had been so carefully placed within me about the break-in and robbers. The news ran with the story though it would take only a cursory investigation to realize the truth. My dad against whom I had carried bitterness and resentment up to this point in my life swooped in as a messiah figure. He made sure I knew he "would handle everything and take care of it now."

Three days later, he drove me down to the police department to meet with Initiated Fraternal Order of Police detectives who were assigned to my case. My dad talked to me privately down in their interrogation rooms and told me in no uncertain terms that I now needed to share the truth – a truth my father knew all along – with the detectives.

Always quick to obey my father, I told them that I had fabricated the story and done the deeds to myself. Determined to verify my account on the spot, I pointed out to the detectives the fighting knife I'd used, which they had been unable to find. Even well-trained investigators are susceptible to a common weakness, which is why if you want to hide something, put it in plain site.

After stabbing myself with the fighting knife, I quietly closed it and set in on the desk directly next to the chair I would be found bleeding out in. I then identified the knife in the pictures of the crime scene. My dad then met with the detectives, and before I knew it, I was being driven back home and my dad was explaining to me that he would take care of me now and make sure everything was dealt with. Thanks to my father's Familial ways, I had no charges filed against me and I was sent home without immediate legal repercussions.

The military would want to wipe its hands clean of me as quickly as possible. My dad would provide his solution to this problem by finding a psychologist who would play their part. My dad prepped me by telling me new stories I'd never heard about his father who he now said was bipolar and manic and had killed himself. And he insisted this is what happened with me.

He publically labeled my entire incident a manic episode and sitting in the office of the psychologist, he reiterated this to me. The psychologist had me fill out a ten-point questionnaire about bipolar disorder, and after giving it to him, he told me I needed to change three of my answers. After less then thirty minutes of consultation, I obeyed him, and he diagnosed me as bipolar with a manic episode even though he did not take into account the drugs, alcohol, and prescriptions I had been under the influence of. This was a severe violation of diagnostic methods as outlined in the actual manual for this process at that time, called the Diagnostic and Statistical Manual (DSM-4).

My father spent the next few weeks with me in a private hotel room where he kept me at his side except when I needed to take my exams. He had me placed on heavy prescription medications that caused my hair to fall out and my skin to break out, in addition to massive weight gains and horrible bouts of sickness. The medications clouded my mind with confusion and turned me into a blubbering mess. By the time I finished my freshman year's first semester, I was a shell of a man.

My father put me into counseling at a Family run center where the elite can keep their Pet Projects in order. The counselor he placed me with was someone who would not validate or substantiate the previous diagnosis of bipolar disorder over the next 18 months I worked with her. Instead, six months into working with her, I overcame some of the fears of my father's retribution and secretly went and titrated myself off all my medications. I soon learned how to dodge or muddle the blood and urine tests they had me on to ensure I was complying. Within a matter of days, I found my mind cleared up and all the horrible side effects of the pharmaceuticals to be the root of my troubles.

For less than one year of my life, I was on heavy medications: everything from psychotropic anti-depressants, anti-seizures, stimulants, barbiturate painkillers, anti-anxieties, sleep aids, to experimental Parkinson's drugs and even heart medications to counter the irregular tachycardia I was suddenly experiencing. This in no way is a complete list, but at one point in time, I was prescribed 18 pills to take on a daily basis.

It was never a manic episode or mental health disorder that caused my year of hell but an intentional use of medications and manipulation to produce massive cognitive splits and behaviors I would never willingly engage in. It may have lasted less than a year, but it was the most destructive year of my life. Into that destructive path, The Father would help guide my feet back onto His Redemption Road, and less than a year later Chelsea took those first steps down the path on Hillside Road.

The reason I zoom in on this portion of my testimony is that this whole supposed manic episode would be the ace in the hole my dad and other "concerned Family Friends" would use to attempt to discredit me or dismiss me from that day forward. It is unfortunate that my Family and many others can be so easily beguiled by someone saying "mental health disorder" or manic episode and throw out an entire person's testimony. Those who have ears to hear will know what truth is and what is not.

My family and their "Family Friends" categorically reject the mere utterance or existence of DSM-5 Titled Diagnosis, Dissociative Identity Disorder (or D.I.D.). It is a genuine and not uncommon personality disorder caused by massive trauma and abuse at an early age. Its primary characteristics can be a gradient but require for full diagnosis, the development of at least two separate and distinct personalities, the unexplainable loss of time or understandings of occurred events. My Family rejects its applicability as a diagnosis for me insisting instead that I have been in a manic episode for years and years. To this day, my dad desperately waves around 10-year-old news stories from that Thanksgiving to prove I went crazy once and am dangerous or someone to be concerned about.

Unfortunately, most of the world and other Family members have no idea what a manic episode is and what it is not. They do not have any training in the mental health field or with people who do struggle with bipolar disorder. I spent nearly a decade being trained and equipped to work in the mental health field, with clients who were ages four to eighty-two. I have learned and applied real individual treatment protocols for clients with this disorder and have personally never exhibited any quantifiable symptoms of it in more than ten years.

In the years since I've been receiving appropriate counseling for S.R.A/D.I.D., I have found freedom from addictions, restoration in my marriage and redemption of my fractured soul. No longer is my soul buried in bitterness, heart-rending grief, hurt, or sorrow. In that time, I have begun to receive the fullness of life and the wholeness I was always made for.

My father and other so-called "Family Friends" hate and forbid my other Family members from learning about D.I.D. and instead they errantly label everyone as bipolar or mentally ill. It is the fabric, which makes up my broken Family members' tapestry of deception and control. They cannot allow those truth-riddled threads of understanding and realizations to be pulled. It is a sad reality; one that grieves my heart to this day.

It was not about the truth – it never was – it was always about control. I surrender that power to you the readers, the listeners, or watchers. There is no power in keeping any of my past or present a secret, and that is why I tell it to you now.

I choose to deny my Family their three methods of control through fear, guilt and shame. This is why there is power in exposing the secret skeletons in your closet. When you let the world see the worst you've ever been, the bindings of shame fall off, and with it goes the fear and guilt. Instead, you become a free person able to learn how to do good to those who spitefully use you and say all kinds of evil things about you.

I will not unnecessarily degrade my Family members – not past or present. That being said, I will not conceal their detestable acts any longer. They are accountable for every word they speak, as am I. They are responsible for their actions, and I am responsible for mine. Let Yahweh judge between us whose words are right for He alone is The Righteous Judge who has the power to throw us body and soul into His flame or into eternal freedom.

I tell this to you all now to strip my accusers of their desperate rebuttals and character assassinations. I am not ashamed of my testimony; The Redeemer has washed away even my worst days and deepest shames. Only in the light of truth can this be made the case for each one of you. Then let these next words of my testimony ring loudly to all who can hear.

For those who wish to expose the wicked works of darkness pay close attention to what I say next. I was made to be a brother of the blade, a guardian, blackmailer, chameleon, and thief for The Underworld. Even while I was still young by worldly standards I became a highly prized pet-project to the black budget world of military, religious and State sanctioned assassination and infiltration work. I was used as a wolf who hunted down literal pounds of flesh, rings of authority, totems, "cattle" and especially pure traumatized blood to bring back to my Family members who traffic and consume it for supernatural and physical strength. My Southwestern Family Trade was to produce, process and deliver those Cheese Pizza's and other pedophilic appetites and artistic expression so many are now learning to uncover and expose. I hope you with eyes to see and ears to hear will look closely at where the money goes and in whose names their lodges, halls and chambers are founded. Keep a keen eye out when searching over those desert places and bridges where the jackals and coyotes still cross over. Hidden beneath the scorched soil and inky abyss lies remnants of my many Families deeds.

I am not here to convince people my story is true or that Satanic Ritual Abuse and Dissociative Identity Disorder is real. I am here because of my unrelenting love for the victims, for the Survivors of The Families, Brotherhoods, Knights, Catholics, Christians, Mormons, and Masons. I am here for all the Atheists, Scientists, Buddhist, pagans, new agers and witches alike. I am here for those dissidents who need to know there is hope in breaking out. Powerful freedom and restoration is waiting in the arms of The Messiah. I am here to make sure people know there is nothing The Enemy has done to you, which Yahweh can't undo and nothing fractured which He cannot make whole.

This does not come free. The price I choose to pay for speaking The Secrets is not cheap. But don't you remember? True love knows nothing of cost. True love throws banquets for beggars, murderers, and thieves because He loves "the least of these." It broke my heart to see my Family members choose to hide in the darkness, but I love them enough to speak the truth and show them The Way out. I love them still even though what they did next cut deeper than any blade could.

After I decided to disobey my father and continue to speak The Secrets, the gloves came off. It was no longer a subtle war waged in the shadows. My Family would send the depths of The Abyss against their rogue asset. They would launch spiritual wars that sought to drain the blood from my body and choke the air from my newborn daughter's lungs. Chelsea and I would spend the next few years in the thick of war. The battles would test our marriage to its core and in the testing prove the power of perfect love casting out all fear. The ravenous counterfeit lion would be loosed against Chelsea, Naomi, and me. It was no longer a question: either Yahweh is still The God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, or He is not and we would all die.

PART 4

Chapter Nineteen

The Pen or the Sword?

I cannot bring myself even to write what comes next. The pain of loss is so high, and the viciousness of the threats and the manipulation is beyond measure. Only those who have lost their families or closest friends can imagine the brutal feelings of betrayal and loss. No matter how much my dad tried to manipulate me back into his hand, I would not bow to silence, and I could not speak their lies.

I refused to stop speaking The Secrets, and my dad knew he had lost control of his Family asset. He was no longer my master; I refused ever again to be his slave. I would not bow to his demands, and I rejected to yoke myself to his Family's wicked ways anymore. He could not stand it; never had I refused his requests and much less his orders. He had counted on the fact that he could destroy me if I ever got out of control. The weapon he'd so meticulously controlled for nearly thirty years was now making his own decisions. He could not allow that, so my dad played his ace. He played the cards he was confident would destroy both me and the legs of support I'd finally found.

But pride blinds. Bowing your knees at trapezoidal altars of illumination will bind you to the pride of the rebellious god called Helel the Son of Shahar. The pride in my father's illumined eyes was a light of deception, and he could never have imagined how wrong he would be.

Though they tried to destroy the most consistent place of love I had in my relationship with Chelsea, they could not. No amount of manipulations by my Family members could convince Chelsea to divorce me. They pulled out all the stops: they targeted her family members, our former pastors, churches, counselors, and even old co-workers. The Family's expertise is in fear, control and manipulation, and they did their best to work the fields around me. They were relentless, and the lies that poured from their mouths were mountains of accusations craftily designed to scare our supporters away. When people get desperate, they tend to make mistakes. The desperation of my Family to regain control caused them to make a mistake that would finally separate us from their controlling clutches for good.

I had struggled for some time leading up to the decision about whether or not to completely sever ties with my Family, but soon they forced my hand. It happened when one of my Family members, threatened Naomi Grace. In the midst of that summer, before she was born, as I refused to stop speaking The Secrets, they sent us a message saying, Nate, for the sake of your daughter reconcile with The Family.

They should never have threatened my unborn daughter. I expected them to intimidate me, to coerce me and control me, but the day someone threatened my daughter, an entirely different set of protocols begins. They had exposed themselves and the master they chose to serve. Their Seminary sanctified Christian masks had been peeled back to show their true nature.

A dangerous and well-used plumb line had been drawn in the sand. On one side was a family who chose freedom for their children no matter the cost, and on the other were the controllers, manipulators and those who steal the innocence from their sons and daughters. No matter the underhand offers of power, fame and financial freedom, I would never allow them access to my daughter. This is the crux of this entire situation; it came down to Naomi Grace.

Children are not to be born outside The Family's direct oversight. Generation upon generation has given its children over to The Family's demands and never stepped one step outside of this plan. The fury my father and especially his military handlers had was steeped in his denial of this generational requirement. Who was I to refuse their demands and wishes? I had been theirs, and for so long I'd been their successful pet project. However, their collar of control no longer held me captive; instead it fueled my flight to freedom. The scars on my body and Secrets in my mind were constant reminders that Naomi never needed to spend a day of her life in The Underworld. She was not made for their manipulative shackles and control; she was created for freedom, faith, and the joys of an abundant life.

I started my resistance by changing my phone number and ended all communications with them. They had made their decision, and I had made mine. They had chosen to keep their vile deeds buried, and I had decided to expose them to the light of all. Even still, my grandfather traveled across state lines and came into town to try to initiate my daughter, as he loves to do with the new grandchildren.

My father, unfortunately, beguiled my sisters, and even after I warned them about what grandpa does with little children, they still hosted The Family Brute and chose to let him and other Family members have access to their many, many children.

Chelsea and I continually thank The Father that He helped me wake up to these realities before Naomi came into this mad world. Before that, the plan had always been to have The Family members present at the birth of Naomi. God alone spared me from placing my innocent first-born daughter into the hands of monsters.

Instead, Chelsea and I kept the time of her natural birth a secret and had incredibly well trained and well-armed protectors on site to ensure our peace of mind at that most vulnerable time.

As terrible as that summer may have been, it was worth it. Looking into Naomi's eyes for the first time, Chelsea and I cried beyond tears of relief. We wept holding the miracle of life entrusted to us for such a time as this. We knew then that no matter what we'd endured and what would still come, nothing could keep us from letting Naomi develop into the woman she was made to be.

Naomi Grace may not know it today or understand it for many years to come, but she is the first child born free in many generations. For thousands of years, children born into these Bloodlines have been taken into the flames of control, chaos, and death. The Redeemer snatched me from those fires long after they'd burned much of my body and soul to a char. In time I have faith He would heal all those wounds, but the most exceptional power comes when our children are spared from those flames altogether and shown freedom instead. Naomi will never have to taste the torment that so many millions endure at night. She will never be forced down the dark path of perversion as I had. She will be free to choose who she will become. To help her understand the importance of that choice, I wrote her a deadly letter, some of which I will share with you in hopes that many other daughters will read it, as well as sons and fathers and mothers.

Chapter Twenty

A Letter for My Daughter

On the day after Naomi's birth, I wrote her a letter for when she is older and ready to understand the battles fought for her. I wrote her the story of what had transpired since she'd been conceived. I told her of the war which had waged over her before she'd taken her first breath. The things I wrote to her shine light on the darkness of my Family's past, the reasons she is so important, and the power of free will. It is a letter I pray many fathers, mothers, brothers, and sisters would someday write to their Family members.

These are letters, which speak The Secrets – those hidden horrors – that are forbidden to say. Letters which will empower our children, equipping our sons, daughters, nieces, and nephews with the courage to face down their monsters and find strength in our weakness.

E NICE TO YOUR SISTER
...ONE DAY YOU MIGHT NEED AN ALIBI.

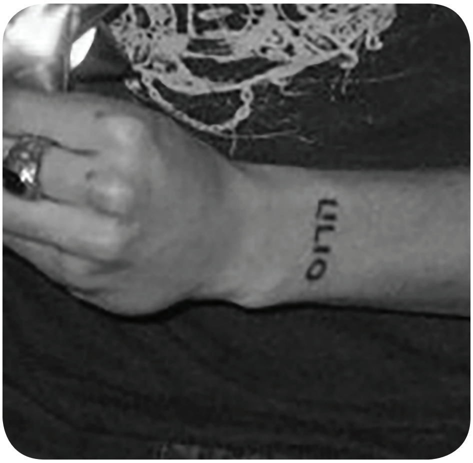
For those who surrender their lives to our true Father Yahweh, His Name is a strong tower that the righteous can run to and be saved. I was not an upright man the day I ran to His tower and called upon His Name. I was a man whose hands had shed so much blood; blackmail and brutality were the currency of my past. I was a man who had lied, stolen, manipulated, coerced, cursed and coveted.

The murderers hammer was in my hand, and the bodies had piled so high. If ever there was a man who deserved the executioner's chair, it was I. I felt the weight of survivor's guilt for the killings committed in front of me that I could not stop, and I felt the torment of seeing children abused with no one to bring the perpetrators to justice. I was a man on fire looking for someone who would quench my flames.

The Family woman who saw me kill her husband before I'd gone to middle school can attest to this. The one who screamed out after me "Murderer!" haunted my dreams for nearly twenty years. The names, the faces, the places of pain, misery, and death clung to the fabric of my being and I could not bear to stand amidst the hurt. The others who saw me fight to the death in "the pit" know the monster I was. They saw what I would become when they would put the dagger in my hand. They saw the rage come boil over and unleash its fury on men and whatever else they put in my path. They had seen my two faces; the brilliant birthmark I bear when I brought forth death. I could not quench the fires of hatred. The cauldrons of chaos would fire bricks of bitterness that built my tower of rebellion.

I was broken beyond belief. I had no sense of normal; morality and free choice were a luxury for the masses, not children who witnessed ritualistic torture before they went to first grade. I could not know peace and I could not understand and receive love. I was the salted, scorched earth left behind by conquering armies on their way to pillage a distant land. I was ruined.

When I was 19, I wrote the Hebrew equivalent of Ruined on my left wrist with a permanent marker every single day for more than a year. There was no mystery about it, I knew I was a ravaged ruinous heap of a shattered soul. I looked in the mirror and saw a monster staring back at me. I saw the blood running down my face and caked on my cheeks. I scrubbed my hands till they cracked, trying to wash it all away. There weren't enough people for me to destroy to satisfy the need to avenge the children my Family pillaged. How could I quench the bitterness, the hatred, and the rage?



I screamed in the quiet of the night questions no man can hope to answer.

"God, would you still save me? Would You choose to love me? Would You choose to forgive me? Would you let me choose another way?"

I wondered if I was even worth saving. Who would want to rebuild my ruins? My soul was a desolate wasteland full of the broken pieces of my desecrated heart. Who could bear the torment of my sorrows? Who could hold the horrors of my past?

I had to look no further than the perverse version of a baby book my mother had given me before I left to college to know the abusive pictures in my past were waiting to destroy my peace. Remembering was a death of its own; to remember was to bear the burdens of hundreds of lives snuffed out of existence.

How I wept. I wept for months. I sobbed tears of grief, of misery and of sorrow that only orphans, widows, or soldiers who've felt the beating pulse of their best friend quiet down to nothing as their soul breathes its last can know. Those who have witnessed the violent taking of life by death know of the horrors I have seen.

I could not bear to remember; it was too much for someone to handle and live. And yet I couldn't manage to forget. I decided instead to make them matter; I chose not to let them go to waste. I would not allow the fear of remembering, the fear of telling, and the repercussions to hold me back. Though it once brought me their beatings, the shackles, and soul-wrenching betrayal, I chose to put my pen to the paper still and I wrote their names, both the ones I knew and some who I'd forgotten.

I wrote their faces, their places of perishing where bodies were dumped into inky waters, and others burned in Family owned or Brotherhood controlled crematoriums. I wrote the most dangerous of words, willing to prove to the man in the mirror that my weakest pen strokes would be mightier than my bloodstained blades.

To write the words was to step into hell. I have tasted the ash of death for breakfast; it clung under my fingernails and scorched my brows. I was born in the black fires of fury, which heat the Kingdom of The Wicked One. I chose to no longer live in the inner circles of murder and instead I became a traitor to The Dark Prince. I left darkness and ran to The Light of Hope.

I did not come before The King empty handed: I brought Him My Lists – those places and faces of horrors to The Redeemer's feet. I brought my grief as an offering; I brought my guilt and the hurt and the hatred. I brought the anger and betrayal. To The Sinless One, I brought a hundred lifetimes of sin. I brought Him the molestations, sorrow, and despair. I brought Him the worst this world had to offer and I offered Him myself. I brought The God of Light the detestable things done in darkness. I brought Him Who is Worthy my lack, my fears, my hatred, and death.

I brought Him all I had. He asked me to, and I obeyed. I chose to surrender all of myself to Him. I trusted He alone could redeem this death for life. There is only One who can take a monster and make him a man again. I no longer fear Death whose harbinger and slave I had been. Now I choose to fear The Only One who can throw my body and soul into eternal flame or free me forever. Because of that, I will lay down my life for Him and for all who are willing to chase freedom and forsake their fears.

Hear me now. Pay close attention to what I am going to say to you. I am willing to suffer the scourge of this world, the shackles, the mocking, the character assassinations, the accusations, all of it. I will take their bullets, beatings, and blades. I will endure their poisons, curses, and hate. I have suffered these time and again; the blood of my body has been spilled to the point of death more than once. I do not fear but I do respect the retribution of men, demons, or the masters they serve. I will gladly bear this all if only one child, one precious soul, is spared a life like mine.

If one man reads these words and chooses not to make his son pass through the inky flames, all the horrors of my life and even the retributions to come are worth it. I would go through every bit of the starvation, the poverty, the dirty glares, and the fleeing of my friends and family to know that a daughter slept in peace, knowing her abusers would not come for her ever again. Each burning stick snatched from the flames is worth a lifetime of chaos. I would gladly suffer it all because I know I will never have to endure it alone.

No matter what is done to me no one, no power on this earth, no power beneath or above its surface can take the hope of salvation burning in my chest. I am an adopted son of The Living and Holy God. He chose even me. He loves even me, the man of fire, of fury, of hatred, and of death. He loved me even as I was, not what I would be but as I was. On the darkest of days when I was strapped to their chairs as they defiled me, desecrated my soul with devils, guilt, shame, and misery. At the moment when I was downing a handful of pills desperate to bury the nightmares and loss, He still chose to deliver me. He loved even the boy who ran from a Familial estate with the blood of a man staining his dagger filled hands and his widow screaming “Murderer!”

No amount of pain and suffering I have endured can compare to the hope that is set before me. I do not have to wonder if He will strengthen me as I pick up the mutilated stake of persecution that so many others have borne. I know the pains of crucifixion; I have held the purpose forged hammer and heard their agonizing screams. I have faced down despair whose icy hands grab your ankles and pull you into the depths of hell. I have screamed till my throat tore with the pain of memories unspeakable. And yet none of it, none of it could compare to the joy and hope now beating in my chest.

It is because He would not leave me helpless but sent me The Comforter who strengthened me and brought to mind The Truth of Yeshua The Messiah. He willingly suffered the painful punishment and death we all deserved so that we might have His life instead. It is the most significant exchange ever written, spoken, or dreamed of. It is the One who is perfect becoming our devilish defects – our bloodshed, hatred, and death – that we might know the abundance of riches in store for the children of Yahweh.

It is because He now lives in me that I will rush the gates of Hell and face down people possessed by the legions of The Dark Prince standing between the souls crying out for salvation and me. I will not fear their death for I live to seek and save the lost, to snatch those burning sticks from the fires. I am not afraid of the familiar darkness for I was born in it. I was birthed into the Kingdom of Fear, but I have been born again into The Kingdom of Faith. I am not afraid of their rituals, their blackmail, their torture, or their threats. I fear El Shaddai, The Lord Our Righteousness, and The Judge of us all.

My love for Him burned away the fears of persecution, rejection, and abandonment. Now I will walk into the coliseum of public opinion and say, "These are the words of my testimony." I will speak them no matter what they say or what they do; no matter The Order or The Family's retribution may be.

These words are for those who fear the night, who were born of the Black Sun, who feel the dread of the solstices as they approach. They are for the ones who drank the "wine" of the skull and spit on the Word, who were made to bear witness to the oaths, the Summonings and sending's, and for the ones who've never known they were loved.

I write to the precious sons and daughters who have never known safety, peace, and hope, and to the children of the fallen who believed they too are cursed and unable to be redeemed. I also have mingled with the ancient ones, gladly accepting the genetic enhancements so few can imagine as real. The shining one's seed has burned my soul, and The Grigori's blood has tainted my own. To you who know The Secrets, I speak these words for you. You who see The Serpent's Seed in your blood, you children of Belial, you are not accursed, you are not anathema, you are loved, you are treasured. Listen to me: you are adored, and the purpose of your birth was not what they told you. Your purpose is to become part of the living, active Body of Messiah, which will stand tall amidst the greatest threats the world has ever faced.

But more than all these things, know this: you are needed. You were not born for death, for the johns who pay you in white powder, Adrenochrome, corporate contracts, king's ransoms, or five-dollar bills. You were born with a greater purpose than you can imagine. The shackles on your wrists are not to keep you bound on their tables, beds, and chairs; they exist because you were made to set people free. The chains of your addictions and your lusts are to keep you from knowing you were made to breathe hope into the despairing lungs of vagabonds, outcasts, and misfits. The jewels of your crown of glory are waiting in the pebble-strewn asphalt of our overlooked and abandoned deviants, rebels, and wounded ones. You were not made to follow the trends of tomorrow; you were made to set fire to the beacons of redemption, to light a holy flame in the face of impenetrable darkness and sing a song of praise as the bowls of hell rage against your freedom, your hope, and your faith in The Great Redeemer.

Hear me, beloved one: The Father delights in you, longs for you, and loves every part of you beyond measure. No matter what they told you, you are beautiful, you are adored, and you matter more then you can ever know. I know your hurt, I felt the devastation of a defiling touch, and I've suffered the pains of poisons injected into my veins. I know the agony of abuse by those you trusted, loved, and adored. I know the feelings of betrayal, of mocking, and of ridicule. I know the feeling of their glares on your neck and the bullies' laughter behind your back. You are not alone in your sorrow, your suffering, or your death. If there is yet breath in your lungs and blood in your veins, there is still hope. Even if you've just finalized your fourth divorce, or you can't stop looking at porn, you are still important, and the purpose of your life can shake the mountains loose and cast them into the sea.

No matter the number of track marks on your arms, that needle does not define you, and neither does that pipe or pill. The mutilation scars on your wrists, thighs, and neck do not need to be hidden in shame, for when I look upon you, I know you are a Survivor. You, oh precious and created one, were made to light a candle of hope against the darkness of despair. No matter how many times you sought the hangman's noose, the bottoms of bottles, or a manipulator to tell you that you're pretty, you still have a life to be lived. Your life can be made new. Your song of death can be turned into a symphony of hope.

Come join the ones who were orphans, the reckless lovers of losers, liars, and thieves. Join the debt-laden dropout who has found out he can be free. Join the heroes of the homeless, the champions of hope, the brokenhearted, and the healers who don't take what they need. Come and join the leftovers, The Remnant, those outcasts once passed over whose blood now beats with divine purpose.

Chapter Twenty One

A Message to the Masses

If you are the one who made your children pass through rituals and abuse, it is time you give up your wicked war for power, control, and status. You serve a defeated master. The Serpent's head was crushed beneath the pierced feet of The Righteous One. The dark princes you bow to do not rein on high, but they also have been brought low.

The Mighty God's Kingdom is forever, and His judgment will be swift. You cannot hide your Secrets forever. What you choose to do in secret will be shown on the rooftops. If He did not spare King David's conspiracy and murder with Bathsheba from this law's consequence, I assure you He will not spare you. Your secrets will be revealed. You can choose to do it by your own free will or the little children you passed through those abusive flames will rise and convict you instead. Come to Messiah while there is time. Your judgment will be eternal, and I assure you of this: it would be better for a megalithic stone to be tied around your neck today and you be cast into the sea then you suffer The Father's judgment for causing His beloved children harm.

To every member of these councils, brotherhoods, dragon bloodlines, rosy orders and carriers of "the royal seed," know that your secrets and illumined blood will not save you. The gnosis, the chalice, and treasures you guard will not rescue you. The passcodes, coins, and rings, the handshakes, the whispers in the inner chambers will not always hide your magical workings. Your Hands of Glory cannot conceal your deeds from The Most High God. The astral planes and their sacred books will not save you from The Just One. The mysteries you keep are not eternal but will burn with The Deceiver. Come out of it while there is still time. Forsake your oaths, renounce your agreements, and repent of your sins, even your secret sins. (Psalm 19) Call Upon Yahweh in the day of trouble, and He will deliver you. (Psalms 21 & 50)

No matter what has mingled itself in your blood, willingly or not, no matter who your father was or the way you were conceived or created, you also can be redeemed and restored. Even if they genetically spliced you and diced you with abominations and creatures of chaos, you too can know The Messiah if you desire. The pureblood in my body once carried the seed markers you all know too well. And yet I live, I live, and by the power of Yahweh, I have been baptized into His Kingdom. He has given me a transfusion so that I can be made like Him now.

The black tomes pulled from Uruk, and those of Anak could not keep my soul in their bloodstained pages. If I yet endure until the end then, The Son of The Living God who has written my name in The Book of Life will tell me, "Well done my good and faithful servant, now enter my shalom and rest."

Through my repentance and renunciation of oaths and agreements, along with His conquering of Death, I was translated from The Kingdom of Darkness into The Kingdom of His dear Son. No amount of contracts I had with those Ancient Ones could withstand the power of repentance and the authority of The Captain of the Heavenly Hosts in contending with my former masters. If you have "sold your soul," know this: the soul you sold was never yours to sell away as it was already purchased by Messiah thousands of years ago. The Enemy and his ministers are liars, and even if they hold silver rich contracts in your blood, these too can be washed away, and you can be made new in The Kingdom of Heaven.

Come out and speak The Secrets; do not allow another generation to suffer the bondage of deception, guilt, fear, shame, and torment. There is no freedom in your fears; there is no free power in your black or white magical workings; there are only slaves in The Kingdom of Darkness. The Transyuggothian Magic will not answer you in your day of trouble; they who come and speak to you will be silent in your calamity. (1 Kings 18) No matter how much power you wield, or how many people you control, or what the scale of the empires you rule over is, you are a slave. If you choose to stay in the darkness and continue on your path of deception, it is because you are a coward, you are weak and blinded by your pride. May Yahweh Elohim, The Creator of Heaven and Earth rebuke the powers, dominions, thrones, and principalities who rule over you and draw you out while there is still time. May He break your occult power to the highest level and do whatever it takes to bring you out of your bondage. Repent now while His mercy is still long-suffering, before His justice flows like a river soaking the earth in your arrogant blood.

Do you think your symbol rich rings will save you? Do you think your “brothers” or “sisters” will defend you? The Knights will not keep you safe. They will not conceal your kingdom as it burns for the world to see. Too many times I looked in the eyes of men like you as I cut their signet rings from their fingers. I heard their pleas, the oaths they’d sworn to The Orders they’d served. I heard them try to convince themselves that The Grandmaster would protect them or surely their Family would spare them. And yet none of their gods came to save them, their Familiars abandoned them in their hour of need.

Your arrogance has blinded you; your kingdoms are built on betrayal, pride, and lust. You are beguiled like Eve in the Garden, who was promised apotheosis and godhood with secret knowledge, the opening of eyes, and all of The Serpent's lies, but these lies brought only death instead. Her body turned to dust just like yours will whether by an assassin's blade, a bullet, or a poisoned cup. It may come from a compromising video posted online showing the world what you do in your initiations, rituals, and rites. Remember now: Families take great care to document those moments and your pedophilic pleasures were not so secret after all. Those blackmail videos will come crawling out of the cracks and crevices they've been carefully preserved in, and the world will see what you have done behind your temples, churches, lodges, clubs and chambers' doors. They will hear the cries of children you defiled, the gendered identities you've bent and broken. They will see the familiar faces of politicians, judges, chiefs of police, bishops, and popes destroying the innocent.

Your Christian, Catholic, Mormon, Islamic, and Buddhist masks you hide behind will burn, and the people will see who you are. They will hear your secret oaths like these;

"I do further promise and declare that I will have no opinion or will of my own... but will unhesitatingly obey each and every command that I may receive from my superiors in the militia of the Pope... I will wage a relentless war, secretly and openly against all heretics... I will spare neither age nor sex... I will rip up the stomachs and wombs of their women, and crush their infants' heads against the walls in order to annihilate their execrable race. I will secretly use the poisonous cup, the strangulation cord... either in public or private, as I at any time may be directed to do so by any agents of the Pope or superior of The Brotherhood of The Holy Father of The Society of Jesus." (Extreme Oath and Induction of The Society of Jesus)

There are so many other even more vile oaths taken in secret chambers by men and women of meager statues and presidential powers alike. As long as our "judicial" system is run by men and women who have sworn these oaths there will never be justice brought to the oppressed, needy and victims of monsters. It is time for what they swear in secret to be played for all ears to hear. Your days of hidden deeds are drawing to a close.

I know that I am nothing to many of you; other names by which was I known once caused many restless nights, but I am no longer that man of bondage, the Sicario of dread, but instead, I am a man whose freedom has been won. The last few decades of my life may have meant little but the lives of the children you murdered, their futures taken before they were three years old, matter more then you can ever know. Dani's mother who was ritually murdered in front of him matters more than anything I will ever do. The day in that cheap room where you made me kill Soldier, you ignited the fuse of the bomb of your destruction. You lit it when you sodomized my friends and murdered my battle buddy in a "non-combat related incident" in another needless war.

Oh, you reckless and arrogant slaves. Just because the collars around your neck and shackles around your wrists are made of gold, onyx, and rubies, you are not any better than the rest. The innocent blood you shed to build your kingdoms testifies against you day and night. It is crying out for justice, and He is coming for you. Like a thief in the night, His terrible and unimaginable Day of Destruction is coming. He will tread you down to the dust, and the ravens and vultures shall pick of your carcasses on the day of your death.

The smell of sulfur is thick in the air, and it is the pit of fury about to be unleashed. Samson is standing with his hands on the many temples' columns. Your Dagon-worshiping, drunken, pedophilic orgies are going to end with the roof collapsing on your heads. Hundreds, then thousands and millions, will speak The Secrets and then the masses will demand justice that is long overdue. You have underestimated them long enough. You will not be able to keep them dumbed down, drugged up and deceived forever, and once they know what you do in your groves and on your Democratic and Republican taxpayer-funded trips on the Lolita Express, they will burn your kingdom to the ground. The frequent visitors on the little St. James Island will not be able to hide their deeds. The people will come to see what rules the producers, writers, actors, and guilds who partake of the defiled flesh at their spirit cooking's and back room

Industry compromises. They will learn of what the altar boys are made to do with their "fathers, mothers, sisters, bishops, friars, cardinals, and priests." They will not believe your lies, discrediting campaigns and cover-ups. Woe to you for the day of justice and reckoning is nearly upon you.

Understand this: some of those whose blood was proofed and pure have been sent to you to warn you. I am not the first, nor will I be the last, but if you do not heed this call, the guilt of your blood is no longer on my hands. I have given you the warning as The Father had given me mine. What my father and other generations of Reynolds, Aldobrandine, Rothschilds, Medicis, Astors, and Merovingians chose to cover up will be revealed to the masses. My father decided to stay in his house of cards even though the fiery winds of justice are preparing to blow. I pray to The Almighty they repent and confess their secrets and sins before that match is lit. My father has made his choice, so too have I. I pray you will listen to this warning and heed this watchman's cry.

I am not going to give you softened words of disagreement; I intend to smack you in the face as Yahweh did to me. He did not blunt His Living Word when it cut through my heart. He did not warn me with soft whispers and delicate cautions. He gave me a shadow of His glory, and I knew then I would die and with me would come the weight of ten thousand horrors. I knew there would be no escaping the repercussions of the spiritual consequences of my meddling's. I knew in an instant if I chose to have continual fellowship with the darkness, I would perish in the flames of His justice. They will not be temporary but inescapable.

There is a judgment waiting for us all. No matter the promises – Artificial Intelligence, Holographic Avatars, Transhumanism, Genetic Enhancement, Quantum Reality, or whatever Cup of Life they promise you – all will be rendered their final due. I decided to surrender to Him rather than face the outer darkness or the deepest flames. I chose to surrender to Him and become an inheritor of hope, a rescued one. I write you these words so that you may be without excuse. None of you is innocent, not even one. There is hope to those who surrender; and to you who choose not to: know that He is coming for you nonetheless. You cannot escape The Holy One of Israel.

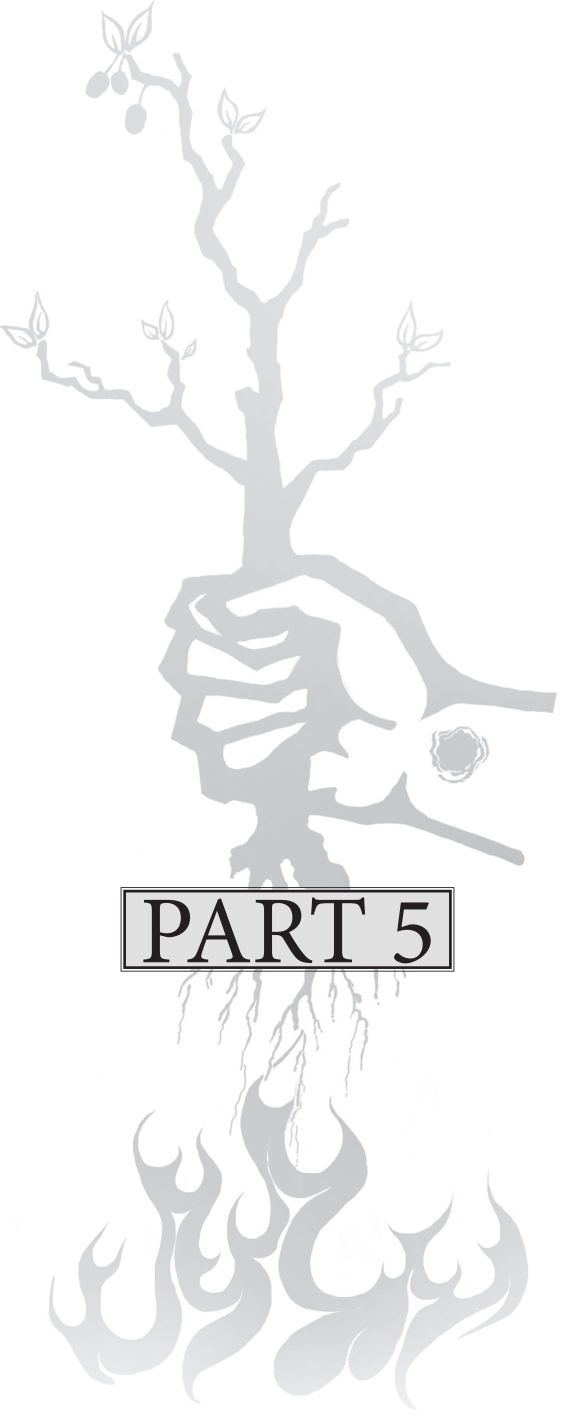
I call to you who are lonely; I appeal to you who are afraid. I call to you who are weeping in the darkness wondering if He heard you last night. I reach out to you who are the fractured ones, the little parts, and pieces of ravaged souls. I entreat you who are weary and broken, unsure if your story still matters or if it ever will. The emptiness you feel inside can be made full of hope, passion, and joy. Do you not know that you were made for a purpose? Do you not know that your days matter? There is so much meaning for the moments of your most deviant shame, your innermost pain, and worst regrets. These are not your curses; these are not your debts. These do not have to be the skeletons in your closet and the leverage point of your shame. The darkness, which took a room in your memories, can be evicted and the light of hope can shine instead.

The Redeemer will turn your crippled pains into the hands who hold a weeping mother after she had a miscarriage last night. They will wrap a naked child that finally had someone see their affliction and say, “No more!” They will restore the broken with healing hands of hope. They will comfort a wounded one who finally found the courage to leave an abuser, an enabler, or handler and brute. They will feed the starving when they learn He rescues the hungry from their need for more. I do not speak this from philosophical ponderings, but from the blood, sweat, and tears shed in this war that has been raging in my life since the days of my murderous conception.

Every day I woke up dead. Some days I woke up my heart no longer beating, limbs cold as ice. I was a walking monster controlled by many master’s manipulative hands and torturous tricks. I was dying and who was there to tell me, “Don’t quit!” Who was there to say, “Don’t give up!” Where were the believers who saw my bruises and bandaged my bleeding wounds of abuse? I had no mother to comfort me after I was defiled; I had the posters on the wall, toy cars in my pockets, and my fingernails to chew on.

I had no one to hold me when I vomited blood in the toilet at school after a ritual night in third grade. The bullies picked on me and pushed me into lockers calling me a faggot while feasting on my insecurities. Where was the teacher who saw me and prayed for me to be set free? Where were the people who walked in authority and saw the cut marks on my body, the wounded cries for help? Where, please tell me, where were the deliverers? Where were the men and women casting out demons, raising the dead, and giving sight to the blind I read of in His Word?

They were not waiting for me in a church, a seminary, temple or mosque down the road. No matter how many thousands of times I have sat in those places of so called worship I had not seen the power of The Living God and it is time to address why.



PART 5

Chapter Twenty Two

A Kingdom Divided

Under the ownership of my Family I spent my life in different churches: nearly a dozen different denominations and Christian schools in multiple states. In all of them, I never saw real power, I never saw authority; all I saw was their weakness, and that is why I was there. The Families have no problem taking their pet projects into churches, cathedrals, synagogues, temples, or mosques because there is no power of The Righteous and just King in those places. These sheep are without shepherds; the truth is that ravenous wolves are leading the sheep. They are being drained of their authority and sucked to the last drop.

Where do you think these occult rituals are done? Where do you think the "brothers" used me? We were the altar boys who warmed up your pews. We defiled your "holy" sanctuaries and made sure to compromise your pastors and bishops by the words of our oaths, the bodies of children, or our controlled narcotics. The Families' sons and daughters know how to seduce pastors and politicians all too well. Our tithe checks keep the pretty stained-glass lights on, and your deacons and elders in our pockets.

Please tell me why The One whose name is Holy would be in that place? Why would He who is perfect, just, and mighty come and dwell among you? You are not His children; you are sheep being sheared by the sons of The Wicked One. You do not look like Yeshua Jesus Christ; you are impotent, weak, and perishing. The church is in need of a good Samaritan (one called a half-breed) to come by and rescue it. Our church has become the ravaged man who was beaten, bloody, and destitute on the road going down from Jerusalem. The church body has been divided, split, and beaten into 41,000 pieces we call denominations. Our church is just like Israel during the days of The Judges, when they had no king and every man did what was right in their own eyes. The church is controlled by the apostles of the Devil we call presidents, pastors, deacons, and popes.

The church is a heap of flesh mutilated by the subtle and crafty works of the Enemy. It is dying, and it perished the day we believed inviting Jesus into our hearts was all we ever needed to do to be His. Jesus is not interested in being invited into our hearts; He is interested in the complete and total surrender of His wayward children coming back to Him and being willing to be wholly His. He is looking for those who fall on their faces and weep and wail while they scream out in repentance, "Jesus, Son of David, have mercy on me!" (Mark 10, Luke 18)

Jesus wants the lepers who know they are unclean; Jesus's true church is the male or female hookers possessed by seven demons who fall at His feet and surrender their everything to Him. They are the transgendered, gays, and wounded ones who know their weakness and beg their True Creator to give them their identity and sexuality instead of the fleeting feelings, wounds of abusers, or words of hate. They are the whores of our schools, churches, and synagogues who pour out the fragrance of repentance, and weep over Messiah's pierced feet. Yahweh wants to rescue the smallest child in the most insignificant family and make them a mighty rescuer like Gideon or David. The Great Redeemer wants to see the rich in this world finance the restoration of the broken that they might be made whole, to give of their wealth to the weary and ravaged, and purchase a superior eternal prize.

Our God is interested in total commitments; not eyes closed and heads bowed "please repeat after me" socially acceptable Sunday morning conversions. The horror is that the church is living under a great and terrible curse. We deserve the curse and judgment we are under. Satan is not the one cursing the church with impotence, sickness, adultery, theft, poverty, and gossip, but Yahweh Elohim, the Lord our God is. We have transgressed His commands and His Instructions just as Israel did when the Moabite women seduced them into worshiping their gods and incurring the curse of Yahweh. (Numb. 22-25) The Occult High Ones, witches, and warlocks do not have to curse the church; The Doctrines of Balaam have brought The Father's curse upon us all on their own. (Rev 2:14) Judgment begins in the house of Yahweh. (1 Peter 4:17) The Judgment is already upon us: the dead and powerless church is the judgment, and it's time we cry out for deliverers to rise and set us free.

We are suffering the curse of the Holy God because we have whored ourselves to this world, the lusts of the eyes, and the pride of life. (1 John 2:16) We have yoked ourselves to the desires of this world instead of to The Holiness of God. We have forsaken His truth for the sake of keeping our friends, our jobs, and our number of Facebook status likes. We are cowards claiming we are imitators of the Risen King of Glory. We claim to follow The Way of Jesus who walked among murderers, rebuked the corrupt "church" leadership, and suffered the accusations of His family members' lies. (Mark 3:31) We do not imitate Jesus Christ because we think the master we serve is Messiah but it is our fleshly lusts.

We have been made to believe Jesus's last name was Christ but it's merely a title for "anointed one." We do not look like Jesus, but we imitate christs whose smooth words have made our itching ears find their scratch. We look like the christ who says it's ok not to obey His Word and live and sleep with our girlfriends, eat unclean foods, and gossip behind our friends' backs. These are the christs who fully endorse necromancy and pagan ritualistic workings like "Christian yoga," transcendental meditation, spirit soaking, and grave sucking.

The christs you follow and imitate are not the King of Glory; rather, they are the beguiled apostles of The Wicked One. Is it not written, “Marvel not for Satan himself transforms himself into an angel of light, and his ministers will do likewise?” (2 Cor. 11:14) You have yoked yourself with servants of Satan who masquerade as gospel teaching sons of God. The good news they bring you is prosperity without obedience, happiness without surrender, and wisdom without The Fear of Yahweh. The good news they bring you is that each of us can work out our salvation by trusting our deceit-filled hearts and not judging anyone or speaking the less socially acceptable truths. The good news they bring you is you don’t have to keep any of the commandments of God except “loving God and loving people” (however you think is best) and of course giving them 10% of your money. The God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob is not the god who is blessing these money hungry pastors and priests, but rather it is the god of this age and his prince Mammon. Comfortable corporate Christianity has beguiled us, lulling us into a slumber while the world burns in the our indifference and apathy fires we’ve stoked.

The brutal reality is that God is not in our churches because we don’t want Him there. We want to hear our favorite pop song played from the stage; we don’t want humble praise and adoration; we want a production. We demand a culturally relevant pastor that will make our New Age friend feel comfortable. We want easily digestible sermons that make us feel better but never convicted. We want an experience, signs, and wonders. We’ve become willing to receive a Kundalini spirit like the “Toronto Blessing” just to convince ourselves that the charismatic craziness of the New Apostolic Reformation is the truth. Our Bethel birthed other spirit soaking music invokes us to hunger for an apostolic anointing without the weeping and lamenting at the holiness of the Creator and the forsaking of our desires. This New Reformation has found its false prophets who’ve convinced it that the demonic horde of Joel’s Army will conquer the seven kingdoms of the world and force Messiah’s return.

We have cursed The Body of Messiah by telling the world we are like Him. We look nothing like Jesus of Nazareth or His disciples. We look like the world – just different flavors of it. We blend into it like the chameleons we are, putting on Christianly smiles on Sunday when we'd got our small group members drunk and watched porn the night before. We baptize people and welcome them to the trending club of "the saved." We've turned Christianity into a status symbol with our gold cross amulets, greasy grace, and edgy tattoos. We have turned theocentric worship of Yahweh into "meocentered" worship of me, myself, and I.

We build our cathedrals on the sites of pagan temples and graveyards where the blood of the innocent flows. We kiss the bones and statues of the dead, hoping these demonically charged relics of "saints" would empower our weak and weary souls. We are a sulfurous stench in the nostrils of The Holy One. When will we be repulsed by our comfortable Christianity and vomit it out for good? When will this Universal (Catholic) Church consecrate itself and be set apart as He called us to be? When will each of us turn and weep before the feet of Messiah and ask Him to forgive us all for the wretched ways of our soul?

Our church is dying; our once purified flesh is rotting off our bones. We need to be the leper screaming so loudly even though the world tried to shut him up. We need to ignore their demands to be silent and weep even more loudly begging our Savior to have mercy on us. We are the unclean lepers; we are sons of the wicked one and of our flesh. We are the ones who hate the conviction of the Holy Spirit and resist His calls to remember His whole Word.

When will we see the blood oozing from our bodies or the shackles on our wrists, and beg Him to save us, the dying hordes? Look around you when you go to church and answer this: does it look anything like what Jesus taught us it would be? Do we behave like those early followers of The Way? Do you see the fruit of the Kingdom of God budding up in the lives of the people of your congregation? Do you ever see a serious focus on prayer: intercession for our enemies, the unsaved, demonized, and cursed? Are you even able to have open discussions with your pastors or elders where you can challenge them on doctrines that are unbiblical or heretical? Or did your deacon and pastor take the Masonic Oaths too? Do you hear preaching on the power of boldness, humility, fasting, or memorizing The Word? Do you see a love that forgives as many times as it's been forgiven? Do you see patience, self-control, healing of the sick, and deliverance from addictions, demons, and depression? Do you see faith conquering fears of death, men, and monotony?

The rotting fruit in our churches is because we are rooted in the wrong tree. The death of the church came the day we separated ourselves from The Way, The Truth, and The Life, The Vine who is Jesus. He is The True Vine, and we are supposed to be the branches, and yet we have gone outside His protected vineyard and planted our own trees. We have rooted these trees in the devilish doctrines of Dispensationalism and Universalism.

The fruits of our churches are mingled with maggots and stink of sulfur because our 41,000 denominations and doctrines do not come from the feet of The Author of our faith, but the divisive tactics of the Enemy and the doctrines of devils. Have you no eyes to see? We are not some New Testament concept called "the church;" we who are the called out ones are supposed to be Israel, The People, not the chunk of dirt, rocks, and relics in the Middle East. We who follow Messiah are the lost sheep of the House of Israel, those who Jesus came for. (Matt. 15:24, Luke 15:4-6) The people who by birth or by belief choose to follow in His Ways become part of His chosen, set apart people Israel, the children of God. (Jer. 3, 31:27-34, Hosea, James, 1 Peter 2:9, 1 John)

Just like the Israelites in the times of the Judges and Samuel, Ezra, Isaiah, and Jeremiah, as well as for the past thousands of years since, we have forsaken our first Love. We have whored ourselves out to the gods of this age because they have made us comfortable and have given our itching ears what we want to hear. The deceitful doctrines have infiltrated our hearts and beliefs, and convinced us that we are gods: we can determine which portion of the whole testament of Yahweh's Instructions applies to us in this "dispensation of grace." We can rightly divide Scripture by tearing out the pages that sting our flesh and give us the freedom to sin instead. Woe unto us who divide and fracture the Word of God with dispensations and absolve ourselves of its perfect blessings and bear its curses instead. We have drunk the lies of The Serpent just like our fathers before us did.

We too have believed the lies from The Garden, "Has God not said…?" The first attack of The Serpent against the children of Yahweh targeted the Commandments of Yahweh. Why do you think he targets them still to this day? Why won't your pastor tell you to obey the commandments of God? Why does he think he can pick which ones we should obey? Why will they throw a fit about the Ten Commandments getting removed from a government building and yet refuse to obey them or teach you to do likewise? Why do most Christians choose to follow nine commandments of the ten but forsake the one about keeping and guarding The Sabbath? It is because they love to throw out the commands of the Old Testament and claim we are not "under them" anymore, and yet they do not obey the 1,000 that are in The New Testament either.

Why do you never hear your pastor teach you that your obedience is better than your sacrifice? Would your pastor tell you that following the commandments of God is more important than anything you can ever do with your life? Would he ever say that freely and lovingly obeying God's Instructions is more important than going to his church, paying your tithe, buying his worship CD, or going to confession or mass? Why do think he won't teach on the holiness of Yahweh and the holiness of Jesus? It is because obedience and sacrifice are unpopular, untaught, and bad for their big business and seminary approved resumes.

It is because the church fears how few our number would be if we forsook the doctrines of men and taught instead the commandments of Yeshua Jesus instead. They fear the untainted Instruction-keeping doctrine of Jesus and instead teach only the dispensational doctrines of man, and the universal catechisms of powerless traditions. The Enemy loves the weak and comfortable Christianity we've whored ourselves to. But there is power, abundance, provision, and miracles in obedience. It is time I share with you the power I have seen in The Living Body of Messiah.

The reason I was dragged from church to church, Christian school to Christian school was to see the weak and wimpy body of believers who could not detect a demonized child in their classroom or sitting next to them in the pews. They were powerless, vulnerable, and easy to deceive. They were terrified of the demons I summoned and sent against their families to haunt their dreams and cause them to scream in fear. They were cowards because they'd lost their identity in the God of Israel, the King of Glory. The day this stopped was when a real daughter of God stripped me of my power. The day I learned there was real power in the authority of Jesus came when a 13-year-old girl named Suze did not run. She did not hide when she saw past my masks of deception and into the darkness of my soul, but instead, she stood boldly in who she was. She was a faithful daughter of the Resurrected King, and she saved my life. Let her story testify to the power of prayer and salvation that is waiting for those who genuinely bear the name of Jesus with power, humility, and strength.

Chapter Twenty Three

A Girl Named Suze

We had gotten a letter from a girl on our way to school. She had written,

“I’m sorry your heart hurts, and I know why. You gave up too early, your chase for meaning, matter and more. You matter more than this, and I know it is true…”

She was in seventh grade, and we met her on the bus early one morning. Our violin was in our hands as we had to take the early bus for orchestra practice. She said her name was Suze. They lived in a house with three acres and she had a horse there, but it belonged to her neighbors. One morning the sound of joy flooded into our heart as this young teenager leaned over and told me,

“Do you want to know a secret?”

She didn’t know I was a slave programmed to kill, but this phrase opened up an internal doorway to the river that flowed into the abyss of my heart where The Secrets were held. She said these words and opened a dialogue box, placed her letter in it, and it said just that. It was not the first time Suze and I had talked, but it would change all the rules and save my life.

Just a week before that moment of joy, she sat down in the seat next to mine on a frosty November morning. She said, "Nate, I think we should talk about something I don't understand." She did something so unexpected and so unpredictable: she touched my broken skin with her flawless freckled flesh. She picked up my left hand and saw the bruises on my knuckles, the split sores and blisters that peppered my palms. "I want to know where these came from and you have to tell me the truth. You don't need to be afraid; I promise I won't tell; I just see those same things on a lot of the boys' hands in this town, and I want to know where they come from."

I screamed out internally desperately trying to tell her about The Blade, the Boy, and the Child who fights grown men in the cage. She looked deep I could feel it: there was a sadness and a desperate need to know. She wanted to help us, and I know it is true. She was a helper, a healer, a kind one named Suze, but we were programmed to lie, and it was all we could do. We laughed and said, "It's because the boys in this town are all stuntmen on the playground. We are daredevils who will climb anything no matter how high." I automatically added, "My buddies and I play on the monkey bars until our palms swell, and sometimes we fall on our knuckles when we land in the dirt."
